Now I submit that a parallel can not be found in the history of legislation in Congress; that a case can not be adduced where the War Claims Committee or any other committee, unless it be the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Rivers and Harbors (both of which committees have express authority under the rules), has ever done a thing of this kind.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Does the gentleman state that the names just read are the names of persons included in this bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Some of those names I can not find in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. The clerk of the committee has given me these names, having made the examination at my request; and in a note which he sent me he says that many others of the names in the bill are in the same category; and upon examination I find such to be the case.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I have followed the reading, and I think the clerk of the gentleman's committee is mistaken. The names in the bill are arranged alphabetically and the names which the gentleman has had read are not all in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the gentleman will find that they are. I do not make this statement upon my own absolute knowledge; and I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to the matter.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I think there is a mistake, because I had the bill in my hand while these names were read.

Mr. THOMAS. I know of my own knowledge that there are many cases in this bill as to which no bills have been introduced.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Does the gentleman contend that a petition filed here in the House and referred to the committee is not a good ground of jurisdiction on which that committee may report a bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly I do. The only petition filed in a case of this kind is a petition to send the case to the Court of Claims; there is no other form of petition. The petition does not call upon Congress for any legislation whatever. It is filed under the Bowman act, and asks to have the claim sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. But that petition, if referred by the House to the committee, gives the committee jurisdiction.

Mr. THOMAS. It gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction when sent to that court, but it does not give the committee any jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The Court of Claims gets jurisdiction upon the order of the Committee on War Claims referring the case.

Mr. THOMAS. The Bowman act says that the House or the committee before which any such claim may be pending may, on the petition of the claimant, send it to the Court of Claims. Now, I contend that there is no authority on the part of the Committee on War Claims to introduce thereupon a bill seeking to legislate or to have the House legislate upon the matter. If that be not so, why can not the committee introduce a bill as well before as after the Court of Claims has reported? Why should the committee be required to wait for a report from the Court of Claims if the gentleman's position is correct?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Because the committee would generally report relief according to the prayer of the petition. Now, this petition, as I understand, is addressed to the House of Representatives, and is by the House referred to the Committee on War Claims, which gives the committee ample jurisdiction to take action upon the matter contained in the petition. The Committee on War Claims refers the case to the Court of Claims—

Mr. THOMAS. Let me correct the gentleman. The petition is not always addressed to the House; it is frequently, as I understand, addressed to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The House refers it to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. THOMAS. But the petition does not ask for the passage of a bill; it does not ask Congress to grant the relief set forth in the petition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is for the payment of the claim.

Mr. THOMAS. It is for the purpose of having the claim referred to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of two facts: First, a jurisdictional fact, the question of loyalty; secondly, a statement by the court, from the evidence, of the merits of the claim as to amount, and all that sort of thing. The conclusions of the court upon these two questions of fact are certified back to the committee or to the House, either.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They are certified back to the House.

Mr. THOMAS. The court has a right under the law to send its findings to the committee; it hardly ever does send them to the House.

Mr. ENLOE. As a matter of fact, the report of the court is addressed to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, it is addressed to the House, but it goes to the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Considering the number of items in the bill, will the gentleman from Wisconsin state how many petitions were referred to that Committee on War Claims during the present Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. Very few, I suppose; perhaps not a dozen.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. The petitions for these claims, then, were referred to the Committee on War Claims by a dead Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. Does the gentleman ask me how many petitions were referred to Congress at this session in behalf of these claims?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. None at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. These claims, then, are reported on petitions referred to the Committee on War Claims of a dead Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. They were referred in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. These bills were kept on the Calendar under the Bowman act.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the gentleman is mistaken about these cases being kept on the Calendar under the law.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Under the Bowman act it is provided they should be continued from Congress to Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. But not on the Calendar. They were not placed on the Calendar and they did not stand upon the Calendar. They came to the committee, and when they came to the committee they were acted upon and reported to the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me, unless it is the intention of the House to pass an act here now, loose and unwarrantable in its character, it will not grant the privilege to this Committee on War Claims of preparing a bill covering so many items and so many claims and reporting it under one title for the action of the House.

In my judgment it is loose legislation, which ought not to be permitted, and which is not in order under the rules of the House if objection be made to it. It is legislation, if allowed, which will cause the public money to flow from the Treasury in the most reckless manner. For that reason I insist upon the point of order, and hope the bill will be stricken from the Calendar.

Mr. ENLOE. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he would not prefer to reserve a portion of his remarks for another day, as he seems to have exhausted the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman for his advice and his consideration for myself. He is disinterested, I have no doubt, and he makes his remarks as a friend of mine. They do not arise, I suppose, because my remarks will hurt the case which he supports. But I think I will follow his advice, and without detaining the committee further will ask that the point of order be sustained.

Mr. HOOKER. The point I understand, Mr. Chairman, is that under the Bowman act the Committee on War Claims has no power to report the pending bill. I understand every single claim embraced in this bill has some time or other been presented to Congress in a bill introduced and referred to the Committee on War Claims and has been referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act. I do not care whether the claims are just or unjust; that is not what I am now proposing to consider. I address myself for a few moments to the point of order.

Under the Bowman act passed March 3, 1883, the Court of Claims, consisting of five judges, was designated as the tribunal for the purpose of relieving Congress of the trouble of investigating the specific claims presented to its consideration. The title of the act is "to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments" in the investigation of these claims.

Under that act, known as the Bowman act, all claims were to be referred to the Court of Claims composed of five judges. They were to consider primarily the question of loyalty. It was a jurisdictional question. The terms of the act required the court should first examine into the question of loyalty, and unless they found favorably on that question they should not further consider the case; that they should stop in limine.

When they decide the question of loyalty, then they go into an investigation of the facts as to whether the losses alleged have been incurred. They are to find two facts: First, as to the loyalty of the claimant and, second, whether the property was lost and was worth what the claimants alleged.

The act then further provides that the Attorney-General of the United States shall by himself or his subordinates represent the Government of the United States before the Court of Claims. And when they have made the investigation it is their duty to report the cases back to the Senate or the House on those two isolated points. Now, when they have done that the committee has undoubtedly the right to report, and it is simply a matter whether they report in one bill or in a hundred bills.

And the honorable gentleman from Ohio and others, who object to several matters contained in the bill and say they should not be there, will have an opportunity to strike them from the bill when they come to consider it hereafter.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, so far as the question now pending, the simple point of order, is concerned, I maintain that there is no substantial ground for the point of order against the consideration of the bill. The committee had a right to present the bill to the House in this form. It is before the Committee of the Whole now for consideration.

But this Bowman act was further amended by what is known as the Tucker act, which enlarged the power of the Court of Claims, and a reference to section 13 of the act which was passed on the 3d of March, 1887, will be found to enlarge that jurisdiction in the following words:

That in every case which shall come before the Court of Claims or is now pending therein under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments, etc.," approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that it has jurisdiction to render judgment and decree thereon under existing laws and under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings thereon to either House of Congress or to the Department from which the same was referred, etc.

Now, the Court of Claims acts under the provisions of these two statutes enacted in 1883 and the amendatory act of 1887, and they find with reference to the cases which are embodied in this bill, and make their report to the House accordingly. That report is now before us for consideration.

Now, an argument has been made against the findings of the Court of Claims. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question for our consideration. The question here is a point of order as to the right of the committee to report this bill and the authority to consider it in this manner; and, as has been well said by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], the seventh section of the Bowman act itself provides, in order that the reference may not be unsatisfactory, that the reports so returned by the court shall stand until they receive the judgment of Congress upon them; that is to say, that they shall continue from session to session and from Congress to Congress until there has been an adjudication by this high court in regard to them.

There is nothing, however, I submit, in the point of order against the bill, because it has included all the findings of the court—nothing; and, including, as it does, only the findings of the court, it is not, in my judgment, subject to the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to invite the attention of the committee and of the Chair briefly to the point of order, and shall confine myself exclusively to that. This question is of far more importance than the mere consideration of this bill under the new rules, and I indulge the hope that I shall be able to convince the Chair that the question presented here, the question of order submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, is not well taken.

If the Chair will examine the second paragraph of Rule XXIV he will find the following provision embodied in it:

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows: Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House—

It does not say from whom or what they are, what they may be, or anything about them, but simply "communications addressed to the House"— and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members.

Now let us turn to the provisions of the Bowman act. The third paragraph of that act provides:

When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

When the Court of Claims, therefore, reported these different claims back to the House and the Speaker, under the rules, referred them to the proper committee of the House, that committee acquired the same jurisdiction over the subject-matter involved as if each claim or a single bill embracing all of the individual claims had been regularly introduced in the House and sent to the proper committee in open House. I think under paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV, to which I have referred, that view is manifestly clear and unquestioned, unless I am mistaken in the fact as to whether or not the report was made to the House and sent to the committee by the Speaker.

And upon that point one observation. If in this bill there is one single provision or one single claim which came to the House and was by the House referred or by the Speaker of the House referred to the committee it acquired jurisdiction of that particular provision or claim; and this point of order can not be sustained against that, because the committee had unquestionably proper jurisdiction over it by reason of that order.

Now, one other proposition, and to that I invite the attention of the Chair, because this question has never been raised under the new rules, but has been discussed by those who take an interest in parliamentary law on both sides of this Chamber, to wit, Rule XXII. I will not read the first section of that rule, which relates to the reference of private bills, memorials, etc., by the Speaker.

The Chair will recollect that private bills or memorials are presented by handing them to the Clerk, the member presenting the same indorsing his name upon the bill; and by the Clerk they are put into a box, to be referred, under the supervision of the Speaker, to the appropriate committees. But in the second paragraph of this rule, which was also a rule of the former House, it is provided that—

Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule—

That is, of course, such papers as may be of an obscene, indecent, insulting, or improper character—shall be returned to the member from whom it was received, and petitions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by the direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented, and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

So that under this paragraph of Rule XXII, treating this as a private bill, the question of order can not apply to the reference there, for the same reason, namely, that the committee to which it was referred was the proper one. Now, by way of illustrating this, take the next provision, relating to public bills, for I know not what view the Chair may take of this bill, whether it be a public or a private bill, although I am inclined to think it comes under the former category. It uses language which is more far-reaching, because section 3 provides:

All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day.

Now, how can a correction of such reference be made? The rule itself provides:

And correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House in accordance with Rule XI on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal—

by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

And so, Mr. Chairman, we are operating under a rule which has this effect: that when a public bill—as I understand it, and I believe it to be correct, after talking with more competent parliamentarians than myself—we are operating under a rule which, when a public bill is referred by the House and the House has received the report of the committee, it does not matter whether it came from a committee which had or a committee which had not jurisdiction; but when the House receives the report, and by the action of the House it is sent to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, it is then too late to make a point of order at all.

And so, Mr. Chairman, the other day when the first appropriation bill was presented, I rose in my place and made the inquiry of the Speaker as to whether or no it were necessary, under the present rules, that points of order should be reserved before a bill should go into committee. The Speaker did not rule upon it, but simply suggested that I had better reserve the points of order. So I presume this foreshadowed a decision. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, there was no point of order reserved. There is one point to which I desire to call attention, and that is to the question of jurisdiction of committees.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me, right there?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield now. I want to be consecutive in my argument and at the same time to be courteous to the gentleman.

When a public bill is erroneously referred to an improper committee the rule prescribes the method by which you shall correct that reference: First, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal by unanimous consent; secondly, by action taken by the House or on motion made by the committee which, under the rules, should have jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and, thirdly, by the committee to which it has been referred erroneously referring it back to the House.

These are the only remedies prescribed by these rules by which you can raise a point of order against a bill when it has once been sent to a committee, referred back to the House, and placed on the Calendar.

Now, apply this principle to the other principle, for it is simply an illustration of the former one. The initial step, I say, was the introduction of a bill into this House and the reference of it to the proper committee—the Committee on War Claims. That committee, under the Bowman act, refers it to the Court of Claims. The Bowman act requires that bill to be referred back to the House under the rule that I first read. Rule XXIV refers these findings, just as it would a communication from the heads of the Departments and other communications addressed to Congress are required by the very terms of the rule to be referred to the appropriate committee.

The Chair, under the direction of the House, referred these bills, certainly some of them, to the Committee on War Claims. They have taken up this bill, formulated it, brought it into the House; it has been received by the Speaker, sent to the appropriate Calendar, and then the House takes it up and refers it to the Committee of the Whole. Now, will the Committee of the Whole undertake to instruct the House what it shall do? It is the duty of the House to instruct the committee what it shall do; the House has sent this bill to the committee, and it is too late to make the point of order in committee.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the last point made by the gentleman, I say that when the House agreed to go into Committee of the Whole it was for the consideration of no particular bill, but for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar. It happened that this bill was the first on the Private Calendar, and when it was presented to us it appears on its face that it was never referred. This is a bill that comes from a committee without authority to report it in such manner that the want of authority appears on the face of the bill itself.

Now, a good deal has been said about the Bowman act. This question of the effect of the Bowman act was discussed in the last Congress. A good deal has been said about what Mr. CARLISLE decided in that case. Mr. CARLISLE never said that the course taken by a former Congress could regulate the rules or procedure of Congress. Gentlemen on that side denied that former Congresses could do anything of that kind. Now, all legislative bodies, or most of them, are more particular about the requirement as to the introduction of bills and their reading a first, second, and third time than this body.

But I undertake to say that no legislative body in the world would be so foolish as to hold that a committee can report anything it pleases to the House, whether it has jurisdiction of the matter or not, or that we can not question its jurisdiction if it so happens that the matter comes before us when we are in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARLISLE made the decision in the last Congress on a case stated by the gentleman from Maryland. The inquiry of the gentleman from Maryland was as follows:

Now, in order to give effect and force to that continuance from Congress to Congress my question is, Will not claims thus reported back from the Court of Claims to the last Congress, and then reported by its committee to the Forty-ninth Congress with an accompanying bill, standing on the Calendar of the last Congress?

It was upon this question that the decision was made, and that is as far as Mr. CARLISLE'S decision went; that is, that if there was an accompanying bill in regard to the particular claim that was brought upon the Calendar of this Congress, then it would be entitled to the place given to it according to the law. That is all he decided, and no further. But I hold that there is nothing in the opinion there given that operates against the point of order that I have made, and that is that, in order to give any committee jurisdiction of any matter, that matter must in some manner be brought before the committee by the action of this House, by bill or resolution, and not by the action of law or of a former Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. Or of the Court of Claims.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Or of the Court of Claims. Now, that has not been done in this case, and I challenge gentlemen to deny that at least one hundred and twenty of these claims that have been brought here have never been referred to this committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If any of them have been formerly referred, would that be obnoxious to the point made by the gentleman?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. If any of them have not been properly referred, it would vitiate the entire bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield so that the committee may rise, as it is within a few moments of the hour for the House to take a recess?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yes, I will yield for that motion; but I desire to say that I have some further remarks I wish to make.

Mr. HOUK. Can we not have the point of order decided before the committee rises?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I will yield for the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7616) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HARLEM RIVER AND NEW YORK HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be authorized to send a subcommittee of five members to examine the Harlem River improvements at New York, and such other works as they deem proper in the harbor of New York, and make report to the full committee. The necessary expenses of said subcommittee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8458) authorizing the purchase of tents by the Secretary of War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Chair announces that the House is in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. Mr. MORROW called the House to order and directed the reading of the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SPEAKER'S ROOM,
March 29, 1890.

Mr. MORROW, of California, is hereby appointed Speaker pro tempore for this evening's session.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that we adopt the rule for this evening that the roll be called and that each member present, as his name is reached, be allowed to call up a bill for consideration.

Mr. BAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. My reason for making that proposition is this. I desire to favor the men who attend these Friday evening sessions. A great many members place their cases in the hands of the Committee on Pensions or the Committee on Invalid Pensions and then pay no further attention to them, while other members come here and stay Friday evening after Friday evening and never have a case called up because their cases are not reached on the Calendar. Now I think that this proposition of mine will have the effect to secure a larger attendance at these Friday evening sessions and at the same time to reward those who do attend.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope, Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection to the arrangement proposed. It can only be made, however, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the motion?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. My proposition is that the members present be allowed each to call up a bill, the names being called in alphabetical order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] moves to change the order of business for this evening, so as to provide that the roll of members be called, and that each member present, as his name is called, be allowed to ask for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, that can only be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read Rule XXIII, paragraph 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars may be taken up in regular order or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee; but bills for raising revenues, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule just read, it would be competent for the committee to change the method of transacting business at these evening sessions, as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall raise the question of a quorum if that proposition is insisted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY] raise the question of no quorum?

Mr. FINLEY. I raise the question because I do not want that order of business adopted. I have come here regularly every Friday evening meeting with the view to help other gentlemen to pass their pension cases and they have passed them, and now, when I have got to a point where I shall soon be able to pass some of mine, other gentlemen are to come in ahead, and I object to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky realizes, of course, that under the proposed rule he would have an opportunity to call up his bill.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that I would have an opportunity to call up one bill each pension night. Other gentlemen, however, have had an opportunity to call up more than one bill because the course pursued has been to call the Calendar. We started on that order of business in good faith and why not pursue it?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at these Friday evening sessions we have generally but from twelve to twenty-five members present. I desire to state that I have been here almost every Friday evening, both in this Congress and in the last Congress. I desired to have this order adopted in order to bring members here to attend to their own business, instead of leaving it to others, who do come from a sense of duty, to attend to their business. Diligence ought always to be rewarded.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky makes, not the point that there is no quorum present, but the point that there is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman distinctly, but understood him to say that he raised the point that there was no quorum present.

Mr. MORRILL. He did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky can state what his point was.

Mr. FINLEY. I simply asked that we pursue the same course that we have been pursuing heretofore, the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. The Chair has decided that it would be competent for the committee to change that order by a majority vote.

Mr. FINLEY. And I have notified gentlemen that in that case I will make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, rather than have the gentleman block all business, I will withdraw my motion. I desired to show that I, for one, was here in good faith to do business.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. (To Mr. FINLEY.) How many bills have you that you would like to dispose of?

Mr. FINLEY. I do not know that that is any business of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the committee would consent to let those bills be called up and disposed of. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. SAWYER. Not with my consent. I would not buy a man off by giving him an advantage that others do not get.

Mr. BAKER. I demand the regular order.

ALLEN COONS.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to submit a review of the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the bill (H. R. 5238) which was recommended to the committee last Friday night, and which practically stands at the head of the Calendar.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. For what purpose does the gentleman now make this report? to have the bill take its place on the Calendar?

Mr. BELKNAP. No; to ask for its present consideration. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, and I now call for the reading of the report.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I suppose it would require unanimous consent to take that bill up out of the regular order until it is reached again on the Calendar.

I have no objection to a proper consideration of the bill at any time, but I am opposed to its passage, and on Friday night last I was prepared to state the grounds of my opposition. When, however, the bill was withdrawn the memoranda which I had here were torn up and thrown among the waste paper, and I would not be able to present tonight the objections which I could have presented last Friday night.

Mr. BELKNAP. I will state that all the papers in connection with this case are here; and if necessary I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5238) granting a pension to Allen Coons. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Allen Coons, late private Company F, Fifty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the written statement just submitted by the gentleman from Michigan in explanation of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Last Friday evening the report upon H. R. 5238, granting a pension to Allen Coons, late private in the Fifty-seventh New York Infantry, was withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that the following statement made by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. STONE) might be verified. I read from the RECORD:

"Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly on this bill. I have examined the papers in this case, and am satisfied this is a bill which ought not to be passed. I find this claimant has a long hospital record, unusually long. From the examination of the papers this hospital record is discovered as coming from the Surgeon-General. The claimant had been in and out of the hospital at different times running through a period of months; but that record shows that in every instance but one he was in there for a disgusting disease, which I can not name in the presence of the galleries; that one exception was diarrhea. This man has been several times examined by medical boards."

I wish to submit for your indulgence a review of the report, believing an injustice has been done a most worthy claimant and the Committee of Invalid Pensions by the statement of the gentleman from Missouri. What are the facts, and was the gentleman justified in his statement?

The claimant, Allen Coons, enlisted December 12, 1861. Hospital records show him as treated for disease in January and February, 1862. Basis of claim was for injury in hips and back received six months after this hospital treatment.

He alleges that he was injured in the hips and back at the battle of Malvern Hill, Virginia, on or about the 1st day of July, 1862, was run over by an ambulance wagon; the horses were frightened and ran through the company ranks, throwing him down, the ambulance running over him and so injuring him that he was unable to keep with his company. He was captured and held prisoner of war until August 3, 1862.

The claim was rejected by the Department on the ground that claimant is unable to furnish proof that injury was received in line of duty. His inability to furnish this proof is due entirely to the fact that he was captured and held as a prisoner of war among strangers.

I now quote you from official records, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office:

Prisoner of war: captured at James River, Virginia, July 2, 1862; confined at Richmond same day; name appears on list as sick and wounded; was held prisoner until August 3, 1862.

The muster-roll of company shows him as missing after engagement Sunday morning, June 29, 1862.

The report of Surgeon-General shows him as discharged March 1, 1863, because of chronic rheumatism in hip joints and injury to back. Another report of Surgeon-General shows him as admitted to hospital August 6, 1862 at Point Lookout, Maryland, sick with scorbutus; this was three days after he left Richmond, a paroled prisoner. And he is discharged from service upon a certificate of Assistant Surgeon-General for chronic rheumatism and injury to back. This is the man's official record-service.

They show fully and plainly that the man was so injured and he was denied a pension by the Department simply because he could not show by witnesses of the occurrence that his injury was received in line of duty.

The evidence on file shows he was an able-bodied man before enlistment. And numerous surgeons who have treated him since the war testify to the continuance of his injury, and many of his neighbors testify that he is not able to work more than half the time, and that he is often sick and confined to his bed from this injury to his back.

The charge made by the gentleman from Missouri that claimant had been in and out of hospital at different times, running through a period of months, and every time but once with this disgusting disease, is not borne out by the records. He was treated the last days of January and in February, 1862, for gonorrhea; one day, May 24, 1862, for diarrhea.

The only other treatment ever received in the hospital was for the injury to back, chronic rheumatism, and scorbutus, scurvy, the result of his injuries and confinement in prison while held as a prisoner of war.

He received three examinations by medical boards and in each one was rated as one-half disabled by reason of rheumatism and injury to back, and they believe his disability due to the cause he alleges.

The claimant bears a most excellent reputation in the city where he has resided for several years, and has the respect of all who know him.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to attempt to discuss this case at the present time. I can not do so properly, for the reasons I have already stated. I wish, however, to make a proposition. I have not objected to the consideration of the bill, and the proposition I now make is that it stand where it is until the Committee of the Whole (into which I suppose the House will at once resolve itself) shall have transacted its business for this evening and risen; then let this bill come up when the cases reported from the Committee of the Whole are taken up; and I shall at that time make a proposition that the consideration of the bill be delayed until a future pension session of the House or that it go over for consideration by a full House on Friday next. I desire to have an opportunity to make the statement which I was prepared to make last Friday night, but am not now. I ask unanimous consent that the disposition I have suggested be made of this bill: that it stand in its present position until the Committee of the Whole shall rise this evening.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, the papers in this case are all here. I do not want it to go over for the reason that a great injustice has been done to this man by the statement which was made last Friday evening by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. The RECORD of last Friday night's proceedings has gone all over the country, branding this man as an unworthy claimant. He is charged with having a very bad hospital record. It has been stated that there is no merit in his claim and that it should not be allowed. Last Friday night I was not prepared to meet the charges against the claimant; I had not the records here, and I did not know what to make of the gentleman's statement. But I now affirm that no such statement can be sustained by the papers in this case. The evidence from the examining board, from the Surgeon-General's Office, and from the War Department is all here. This man's case is a clear and clean one, and he should be vindicated here tonight.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will verify my statement already published in the RECORD as soon as I can have proper opportunity. This certainly is not a case of such serious importance that its consideration can not be delayed for a few days until the matter can be properly heard. It is brought in here at this hour by unanimous consent—

Mr. GEST. What is the objection to hearing this proof now? We can just as well consider it now as at any other time.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the record be read.

Mr. GEST. The papers are here, and the gentleman from Missouri and all of us can be informed of the facts of the case. We do not any of us want to pass the bill if it ought not to pass.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I stated last Friday night that I had here a copy of the report made to the Surgeon-General concerning the hospital record to which I alluded and copies of other evidence in the case; but I have not the time now to go through this record and select this testimony. I do not know whether the gentleman from Michigan has here all the papers in the case or not.

Mr. GEST. He says he has.

Mr. BELKNAP. I have them, sir.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. And, even if he had, I think it is hardly fair when a question of this sort is raised to require me to discuss it under these circumstances. I should at least have the opportunity to take up the case again and investigate the evidence.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri would have no objection to this case being reported favorably if he could place his statement and objections in the RECORD?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The case can not be "reported favorably," because it is already before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now before the House.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. If the case were before the Committee of the Whole, I should not object to its being reported to the House. The point I now make is that I desire the consideration of this bill to be delayed for the present, until the House shall go into Committee of the Whole and rise again—

A MEMBER. This evening, do you mean?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, sir; and then I shall ask at a proper time for such disposition of the bill as I have indicated.

Mr. BLISS. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he is willing we shall take up and consider this bill after the committee rises to-night, which will probably be quarter after 10 o'clock.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I did not wish the gentleman so to understand me. I stated that when the committee shall rise I should then make a proposition to the House as to the disposition of the bill. My present request is that its consideration be delayed until the committee shall rise.

Mr. BLISS. I hope that the bill will be favorably considered to-night. I know this man personally. He lives only 20 miles from my residence. The report of last Friday night's proceedings in regard to this case has gone to his home; and I have letters in regard to it. When a man has been unjustly placed in an unfavorable light before his friends and neighbors, I think we ought as soon as possible to repair the injustice.

Six months after the hospital record to which the gentleman from Missouri has alluded, this man went into battle, was wounded and taken prisoner, remaining in prison over thirty days. He could not get a hospital record, and that is the reason the case was rejected in the Department. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that this man has a family; he has children. We have testimony; some of the best citizens in our town have made affidavit in regard to his standing, in regard to his being sick and not able to do a whole day's work. I am simply telling what I know to be the facts.

The idea of denying to a worthy man who lay in the prison at Richmond what right and justice demand, this small pittance of $12 a month, I think is a shame. I want to see justice done to him, and I hope the gentleman from Missouri will reconsider his objection and allow the bill to be acted upon now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be postponed until after the committee rises.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The claimant has the benefit of the statement made by his Representative and the benefit of the report submitted to-night. In that view of the case, I ask that the bill be delayed, as I have before suggested.

Mr. LANE. I will object to any delay in the consideration of this bill that will bring it up in preference to other bills hereafter. If it is withdrawn let it take its course.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Then I will tell the gentleman that it will take a quorum to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—yeas 36, nays 5.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I make the point that there is no quorum voting.

Mr. LANE. I move a call of the House.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. I trust the gentleman will not do that. We can not get a quorum in time to do any business.

Mr. GROUT. I hope some arrangement will be arrived at rather than do that.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have made a reasonable suggestion and request, so that we can go on and do some business.

Mr. LANE. I will not agree to anything that is not an orderly way of doing business. If the gentleman from Missouri wishes to make the point of no quorum and the bill is not withdrawn, there is no help for it, as far as I can see.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I raise the point of order against the point that has been submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has moved a call of the House. That is the only question now before the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the roll be called, and each member present be permitted to call up one bill and dispose of it.

Mr. ADAMS. There is only one other motion in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that there is only one motion now in order, since the House has refused a call of the House; that is the motion to adjourn. The last vote disclosed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Was not a call of the House moved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was rejected. Now, as the Chair understands the rule there is but one motion in order.

Mr. MORGAN. And that is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BAKER. If I may be allowed to suggest, I think, under the circumstances, rather than prevent the transaction of any other business, that our friend from Michigan might let this bill lie aside for the present, and let the point of no quorum be withdrawn and some cases on the Calendar considered. I believe that would be a better course.

Mr. BELKNAP. I have no desire to obstruct legislation here, and will do anything to allow the business to proceed. But I protest against this action against this worthy man. Still there are other worthy men waiting for their pensions, widows and orphans of soldiers who ought to have their dues. I will let the bill be laid aside for the present.

Mr. BAKER. Let the bill be laid aside, say, for an hour; and the gentleman from Missouri can take the papers and examine them, and perhaps he will gather new light from them.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I did not hear the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. LANE. I will object to any such arrangement.

Mr. BAKER. I hope the gentleman will take the papers in the case; then he can retire to the Speaker's room and examine them at his leisure. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman is very kind.

Mr. FLOWER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not stand in the way of passing some of these claims to-night.

Mr. BELKNAP. I am not standing in the way. I am ready to withdraw the bill; I am ready to do anything that will facilitate matters here.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I will have to demand the regular order.

Mr. BAKER. I am willing that the gentleman from Texas may go with the papers in the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. We have done so much already to-day, and have succeeded so admirably at these night sessions, that I think we might as well adjourn.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Do I understand the gentleman from Michigan has withdrawn his bill?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I did not understand that the bill had been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been withdrawn to the extent, as the Chair understands, that its further consideration has been postponed until after the committee rises.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. That is the only proposition I have made.

Mr. LANE. To that I object. If the gentleman withdraws his bill now it must take its chance of coming up hereafter. Let us transact this business in a business-like way.

Mr. BAKER. But we can do some business if the gentleman will allow this bill to be withdrawn.

Mr. LANE. May be we can and may be we can not.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. We can try, at least.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow the filibustering, if there is to be any, to come from those who are not recognized as friends of the soldier. The gentleman from Illinois has been regarded as a friend of the soldiers.

Mr. LANE. I object to a conditional withdrawing of the bill, that is all. As I have said, I want to see the business done in a business-like way. If the bill is withdrawn it must be unconditional.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be postponed until the committee rises.

Mr. LANE. I object.

Mr. BAKER. What does the gentleman desire?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it will be impossible for the House to transact any business until the question of a quorum shall be disposed of. If that is withdrawn we can proceed with the consideration of business. As the matter now stands there is only one motion in order.

Mr. BAKER. We are trying to do something.

Mr. PETERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. Under the rules when it has been disclosed that there is no quorum present, does it require a motion to order a call of the House?

Mr. MORGAN. That motion has been made and voted down.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know of the Chair whether the point that no quorum is present has been made this evening. As I understood the statement, the gentleman—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio will please suspend for a moment. The Chair will answer one question at a time. The Clerk will read paragraph 2 of Rule XV.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained, and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal as present.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The gentleman from Missouri would be entitled to withdraw the point of no quorum if he saw fit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] made an objection.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio will state it.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I inquire of the Chair whether the point of no quorum is present has been made. I understand the gentleman from Missouri to make the point that no quorum had voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the point as made was that there was no quorum present. The point was considered and decided.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I think the record will disclose the fact that the point was made that no quorum had voted.

Mr. MORGAN. Would not the result be the same?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. It would not be the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In that case the vote disclosed the fact that there was no quorum present.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not know the language used, Mr. Speaker, but I desire to say this, that I had no wish, and have none now, to compel a call of the House or to suspend business; and the point I desired to make was made; and if consideration is insisted upon I will make the point that no quorum is present in the House. I made the usual statement, when the vote was taken, that there was no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whether the gentleman from Missouri made that point or not, the Chair, in taking the vote of the House, determined that the vote disclosed the fact that there was no quorum present; so that the point was raised, and the Chair passed upon it.

Mr. SAWYER. I am not a parliamentarian, never have read the rules in my life, and never expect to [laughter], but there are some things I have learned here, and I have learned this: That on these Friday evening meetings any one man can prevent the passage of a bill. Whenever an objection is made by one man here we have got to yield to him or else wind up the concern. Now, here to-night the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] objects to the consideration of this bill. I do not wish to be understood as questioning his good faith in that. He says, "Here, now, I do not want this bill considered."

I have made an examination of this and made some remarks upon it. Somebody else has examined the case and they say that I was mistaken. Now, the position, as I understand, of the gentleman from Missouri is this: "Before I want the House to sit in judgment on the correctness of the review I made heretofore of this question, I want opportunity to re-examine the case and see whether I am right or wrong." That is not the most unreasonable request I have heard made here. I think we can settle this question just as easily as falling off a log. Just so. He asks us to postpone this and give him an opportunity to re-examine the case.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. If my friend will allow me, I will state that I would be as ready as any man in this House upon examining the record, if I am wrong, to publicly say it before all the House.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no doubt of that. He says here: "Let it go to the meeting of the House—the whole House—next Friday."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. He says he will let it come up when the committee rises to-night.

Mr. SAWYER. I am telling the case as I understand it, and maybe I am wrong. I do not want a dozen men to say that I am wrong. I am going on to state it as I understand it. He says that he proposes it shall go before the full House, when a quorum is present on next Friday. That would give him a week's time to look up the case and see whether he was correct in his review of the evidence or not; and let it lie over that he might have such an opportunity. Now, if I got up in this House and said, "I have reviewed this case and I find that there are certain objections to it," and anybody and everybody tells me I am not correct in my views, I should not want the House to sit on and condemn me for my review unless I had an opportunity again to see whether I am correct or not.

I have always voted for any pension case, right or wrong, hit or miss, whether I knew anything about it or not. [Laughter.] I shall vote for this case as I understood it when originally reported; and certainly I shall vote for it as I understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] to make a report after his examination of it. But before I condemn the gentleman from Missouri for making what is claimed to be a very erroneous attack upon this soldier, it is equally fair to him to give him an opportunity to examine the case; and then if he finds he is wrong I have sufficient confidence in his manliness to know that he will rectify the error.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair what is the status of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House was upon the engrossment and third reading of a bill. That question was submitted to the House and the vote was—ayes 26, noes 5. Thereupon the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] raised the point of no quorum. There was some question afterwards as to whether he had raised the point of no quorum voting or no quorum present. The Chair responded that in determining the number who had voted ay and no, respectively, the Chair had determined that there was no quorum present.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent that this bill be deferred temporarily and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing in order but a motion to adjourn, unless the point of no quorum shall be withdrawn.

Mr. PERKINS. Would not unanimous consent be equivalent to the withdrawal of the point of no quorum? If unanimous consent is now requested and given that this bill be temporarily postponed and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, will not that be equivalent to a withdrawal of the point made by the gentleman from Missouri?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will observe that the record as it now stands raises the question of the presence of a quorum and shows that there is no quorum present. That record must be canceled, and it may be canceled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] withdrawing his point of no quorum. If we proceed by unanimous consent, as suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], it will leave the record showing that there is no quorum present. Therefore, in order to proceed we must have that record canceled by the withdrawal of the point of no quorum; otherwise we must adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, this matter can be disposed of now in a moment by either one of two gentlemen. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] made the point that no quorum had voted and stated at the time that if this bill was postponed he would withdraw that point. The gentleman in charge of the bill agreed that that might be done, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] demanded that the withdrawal should be unconditional.

Mr. MORRILL. No; he objected to the withdrawal.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to state what his position was. I understood the gentleman [Mr. LANE] to object, and to say that the withdrawal should not be made unless it was made unconditionally.

Mr. LANE. I wish to make a statement to the House in order that my position may not be misunderstood.

Mr. MORGAN. Please answer my question first. I have stated this to be the situation: The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] raised the point that no quorum had voted, stating that he would not insist upon it if the gentleman in charge of this bill would withdraw it until we had got through with the evening's business in Committee of the Whole, and then bring it up again. The gentleman in charge of the bill agreed to do that, and then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] objected unless the withdrawal was made unconditionally.

Mr. LANE. That is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, either the gentleman in charge of the bill must withdraw it unconditionally or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] must withdraw his objection, or else we must go home.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, the point of no quorum has been raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Is there anything in order, then, except a motion to adjourn or a call of the House?

Mr. GEST. I understand the record shows this situation, that when the point of no quorum was made there was a motion for a call of the House, and that it was voted down. Now, there is nothing in the world for us to do in the present situation of things except to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. If these gentlemen [Mr. BLISS and Mr. STONE, of Missouri] would agree, the one to withdraw his bill unconditionally and the other to withdraw his point of no quorum, we might proceed with the business of the evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it is impossible to transact any business while the point of no quorum stands on the record.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the call of the House was voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. SAWYER. I desire to ask a question for information. Has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] withdrawn his point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has not withdrawn the point.

Mr. BLISS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill unconditionally. I do not want to stop legislation and lose the whole evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly I do.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under the special order.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I move, in fairness to the gentleman who has had charge of this case [Mr. BELKNAP], that it lie over for one week and be then taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion before the House is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the special order for Friday evening.

LUCIAN L. SANBORN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4422) to increase the pension of Lucian L. Sanborn.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

Lucian L. Sanborn was a corporal in Company I, Sixth Vermont Volunteers. He was wounded in the head at the battle of the Wilderness.

He enlisted in December, 1863, and was discharged in March, 1865. He received pension for the disability received at the rate of $3 a month from June, 1865, and at $15 a month from January, 1869, and $20 a month from February, 1871, and $30 a month from August, 1883.

His wound was made by a bullet passing through his face in such a way as to badly deform him, and as a result produce almost total blindness. The soldier is not able, on account of blindness, to do any work, and is to a considerable extent dependent on the personal care of others, while if a limb were gone he might do some work, but would receive a much higher rate of pension. The committee think that the soldier's disability warrants a higher rate of pension, and the committee reach this conclusion from having seen the soldier in committee-room, where he presented such an appearance as seems to warrant an increase of pension.

Your committee recommend that "forty-five" be substituted for "fifty" in line 4 of the bill, and as so amended that the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overlooked the fact that there is an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that amendment is to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five." I do not know but that this bill ought to go over for consideration in a full House. I am not inclined to defeat the passage of the bill, as of course I could—

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. The report of the committee in this case is not based upon the evidence of others, but the applicant appeared personally before the committee, and their knowledge of his condition is derived from personal inspection.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that if this were a case of total blindness the pension would be $72.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. But this man is nearly blind, so that he can not work.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, it would do no harm for this case to take the same course that has been pursued with other bills of like amount.

Mr. GROUT. The proposition is not to increase this man's pension to $72. The bill as introduced would increase it to $50, for which amount the committee propose to substitute $45.

A MEMBER. What is he receiving now?

Mr. GROUT. Thirty dollars, according to my recollection. I can assure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], from my personal knowledge, that this is clearly a case of great merit.

As has been stated, this man was here in person before the committee. He is nearly blind—has to feel his way along with great care, and, as the committee states, is to a considerable extent dependent upon the personal care of others—not enough to entitle him to a pension of $72, but enough, in the judgment of the committee, to justify an increase to $45. There is no question with reference to the merit of the case.

Mr. KILGORE. This is not a large increase such as I have been in the habit of raising a question upon. I believe I will let the matter take its course.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five," it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ESTHER G. BRYANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4132) granting a pension to Esther G. Bryant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to place the name of Esther G. Bryant, widow of John P. Bryant, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

Esther G. Bryant, the beneficiary named in bill H. R. 4132, is the widow of John P. Bryant, deceased, late a private in Company B, Ninth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers.

The soldier died in regimental hospital near Chapin's Farm, Virginia, February 20, 1865, but the records of the hospital do not show of what disease. First Lieut. Edward L. Kelley, who commanded his company, makes oath that the soldier, John P. Bryant, was a good soldier who never shirked, but did his duty well.

The widow named in this bill received on account of the death of this soldier, her husband, a pension, and continued to draw said pension till her marriage on the 13th day of May, 1868, to one Martin Chilson, with whom she lived a short time as his wife; but from his brutal treatment of her she was by the supreme court of Vermont decreed a bill of divorce from him at the January term of court for 1870, less than two years after her marriage. The decree of court says she was divorced for "intolerable severity."

The committee are of the opinion that it would be in strict keeping with full justice to this woman to place her now on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of law, as her neighbors and townspeople make oath that she is in every way worthy, that she is destitute, and that she is in poor health.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation? [The question was put.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I call for a division.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GROUT. I wish to submit a remark to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now dividing.

Mr. GROUT. Not yet.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question before the committee.

Mr. GROUT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the vote risa voce on a question has been completed and a division is called for, is it not in order, between the completion of the vote in one form and the beginning of the vote in another, that remarks may be submitted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question being taken, "Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?" it was determined in the affirmative—ayes 44, noes 2.

FANNIE E. WOODBURY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4424) granting a pension to Fannie E. Woodbury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore to the pension-roll the name of Fannie E. Woodbury, widow of Charles A. Woodbury, late a first lieutenant in Company B, First Vermont Volunteers, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

Fannie E. Woodbury, named in this bill (H. R. 4424), is the widow of First Lieut. Charles A. Woodbury, who enlisted as second lieutenant in Company I, First Vermont Cavalry, in April, 1862, and was promoted to be first lieutenant in Company B in December, 1863, and was killed in action April, 1863, near Broad Run, Virginia.

His widow, Fannie E. Woodbury, named in this bill, applied for a pension on account of the death of her husband, and received such pension by virtue of certificate No. 10205. This pension she continued to draw till August 18, 1885, when she married one Amasa A. Randall, from whom she was divorced in March, 1888, about two years after marriage, for the cause, as stated in the decree of the court, cruel and inhuman treatment and failure to support.

Randall when proposing marriage promised her that he would deed her, in lieu of the pension which she must give up, certain lands in the West, worth $4,000, and represented himself to be worth some $16,000.

It transpired that he was not worth any property as represented, and he did not deed her any land; but abused, neglected, deserted her, so that the court gave her a divorce and restored her to the name of the soldier. Her husband died on the field, so that now in fact she is his widow, bearing his name. She is now fifty-one years old, and dependent on her daily labor for support; she is partially blind and partially deaf.

The widow's own affidavit asserts the facts which appear in this report, and they are supported as to the divorce by a certified copy of the same; as to the fraud perpetrated to induce her to marry, by the affidavits of Lucy F. Graham and Emma W. Scott; as to the dependence and worthiness, by affidavits of L. B. Clough and Mrs. J. B. Hutchinson.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MINNIE A. BAILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Minnie A. Bailey, daughter of Oscar M. Bailey, who was a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey, submit the following report:

A bill identical with this, proposing to put this claimant on the pension-roll at $12 per month, has previously passed Congress, but reached the President too late for executive action, and therefore failed to become a law.

The applicant is a daughter of Oscar M. Bailey, who was a private in Company F, Fifteenth Connecticut Volunteers, and who died May 8, 1863.

A pension was granted to the widow of the deceased soldier, and at her marriage the pension was paid to the applicant until she was sixteen years of age. She is now thirty years old and has been lame from two years since birth from a disease of the hip-joint. She is unable to earn a living and is dependent upon others for her support.

Your committee believe this to be a just and meritorious claim, and therefore recommend the passage of bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCINDA A. CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4423) to grant a pension to Lucinda A. Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda A. Clark, widow of George M. Clark, late lieutenant of Company E, Sixteenth Vermont Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NUTE) was read, as follows:

Lucinda A. Clark is the widow of George M. Clark, late a lieutenant of Company B, Sixteenth Vermont Volunteers. The soldier enlisted in September, 1862; was promoted to be a lieutenant in January, 1863; discharged August, 1863; and died in June, 1883. In the service the soldier contracted, at or near Union Mills, Va., rheumatic neuralgia, which was aggravated at the battle of Gettysburg.

Soldier received a pension of $7.50 a month from August 11, 1863, and $11.25 a month from March, 1883, for the said disability. The soldier died of erysipelas, and his widow is barred from a pension because, as the surgeons say, "there is no pathological sequence between rheumatic neuralgia and erysipelas," though the examining surgeon for the Pension Office says he examined soldier and found him suffering from neuralgia in right hip, impairment of health on account of prolonged suffering from it, and that nutrition of leg became impaired by such suffering that erysipelas quickly developed, and he died. The affidavit of Dr. F. A. Smith accords with this statement, and he says the indirect cause of soldier's death was the disability for which he was pensioned. We think the cause of the soldier's death was the disability for which he was pensioned, and that his widow should draw a pension as his widow. She has not married since his death.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH WARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5626) granting a pension to Hannah Ward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hannah Ward, widow of David A. Ward, late captain of Company A, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, at the rate of $20 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The report (by Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5626) granting a pension to Hannah Ward, submit the following report: Mrs. Hannah Ward is the widow of David A. Ward, sergeant of Company A, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, who died January 10, 1865, of wounds received in action December 16, 1864, near Hopkinsville, Ky., and now a pensioner at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill under consideration provides that she be pensioned as the widow of a captain. This claim is based upon the following facts shown by the evidence before your committee:

David A. Ward was enrolled October 3, 1861, and mustered into service as sergeant of the original Company A, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, December 23, 1861. He reenlisted and was transferred to the Sixth Kentucky Veteran Cavalry January 1, 1864. Only part of the original company re-enlisted, and those that did not, including all the company officers, were mustered out in October, 1864. Ward was placed in command of the company from that date. He was recommended for promotion to captain, but from some cause, undoubtedly due to delay on the part of the governor of the State, his commission was not issued until December 21, 1864, although a vacancy in that rank existed prior thereto, as shown by the report of the Adjutant-General, and under the provisions of the act of June 3, 1864, a remuster was made to correspond and give him the rank of captain from the date of his commission.

As heretofore stated, on the date of the incurring of the fatal wound and for some considerable time prior thereto, he was in command of his company. There was no commissioned officer then serving with the company, and as a matter of fact Edwin M. Hobbs, who finally succeeded as the captain, signed the inventory of the effects of said deceased Ward on February 1, 1865, as sergeant commanding the company. The widow has been, and is now, paralyzed and dependent upon her friends, having no income from any source. The expenses of her maintenance are therefore necessarily greater than in ordinary cases.

Ward was, to all intents and purposes, the captain of the company when he received the fatal wound after more than three years' evidently faithful and meritorious service.

In the opinion of your committee the facts in the case warrant the granting of the relief asked for, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by adding after the word "laws," in line 8, the words "in lieu of the pension now received by her."

The amendment recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH T. GARRETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6166) to grant a pension to Elizabeth T. Garrett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth T. Garrett, widow of Joseph F. Garrett, who was a soldier in Spy Battalion in the Fourth Illinois Regiment, in the Black Hawk war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6166) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Garrett, have considered the same and report: The claimant's late husband, Joseph F. Garrett, was a private in Capt. Elijah Dill's Company, Spy Battalion, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, Black Hawk war, from April 21, 1832, to June 16, 1832. He was granted a pension of $20 per month by special act passed September 3, 1888, and died about fifteen months after said pension was allowed, aged over eighty years.

The claimant also asks a pension at $20 a month, and submits ample proof of her marriage with the soldier; also, that she is almost blind, quite feeble, and in no condition to earn a living. She has no children or kindred to look to for support, and the only property she possesses is a town lot of not over $250 in value. A large number of witnesses swear to the above-named facts, and in addition thereto one hundred and twenty-two citizens of Plymouth, Hancock County, Illinois, certify that the claimant is old, feeble, almost blind, and very poor, and they petition Congress to grant the relief prayed for.

Your committee think the case a proper one for relief by special act, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WALTER P. HARRISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6624) increasing the pension of Walter P. Harrison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of $3 per month now received by Walter P. Harrison, late private Company B, First Regiment Louisiana Volunteers, Mexican war, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $72 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Walter P. Harrison, have considered the same and beg leave to report:

Said bill is identical with bill H. R. 10477 of the Fiftieth Congress, which was reported favorably to the House in Report No. 3987, second session, and your committee adopt said report (No. 3987) as applicable to this bill and recommend that the bill do pass.

HOUSE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10477) granting an increase of pension to Walter P. Harrison, have considered the same and report as follows:

Walter P. Harrison was a private in Company B, First Louisiana Volunteers, Mexican war, and is now a pensioner at the rate of $3 per month under the Mexican pension act of January 29, 1887. He also served as a midshipman in the United States Navy from October 19, 1841, until June 10, 1843, when he resigned.

In 1886 he applied for pension for total blindness, declaring that while in the Mexican war he contracted measles, which settled in his eyes and caused disease of the same, resulting in total blindness about the year 1860. He was unable in his pension claim to furnish the evidence of comrades to show the in-currence of his disability in his military service, and hence his claim for pension for his disability has never been adjudicated. As above stated, he has been allowed a service pension of $3 per month.

Notwithstanding his infirmity, the claimant has for twenty-five years earned his subsistence by acting as a traveling agent, being always attended by another person. He is now sixty-five years of age, his health has failed him, he has no property to afford him a living, and being no longer able to continue business, he is entirely dependent upon his small pension.

Dr. Flavel B. Tiffany, a leading physician of Kansas City, Mo., certifies that the claimant is totally blind from the disease known as choroid retinitis pigmentosa, with secondary cataract following in each eye. There is no history of any disease, other than measles, which might be the cause of Mr. Harrison's blindness.

Many prominent citizens of Kansas City, Mo., certify to his helpless condition.

A prominent attorney, Henry N. Ess, esq., of Kansas City, Mo., states: "I have known W. P. Harrison seven or eight years. He desires an act passed for a pension to him. He served in the Mexican war. He took measles, from which he has wholly lost his eye-sight. There are no records of the disease of the men in service then. The physician, although now living, does not personally recollect this particular disease of Mr. Harrison. Without such outside testimony he can not get any increase of pension under the law as it stands. He is now totally blind, and has been blind for more than twenty-five years. There is just a little failure of evidence that defeats him before the Department. I know Mr. Harrison well, and his character is beyond dispute."

J. V. C. Karnes, of Kansas City, Mo., a prominent lawyer and late United States attorney, states:

"Mr. Harrison is a very remarkable man, and although entirely blind makes a brave fight to do business as far as he can. He is a man of excellent character, honorable in every respect, and entitled to the fullest confidence and consideration. Of course I know nothing of the cause of his blindness, but among those who know him his own statement is all that is required on this or any other subject."

Morrison Munford, editor Kansas City Times, Charles E. Hosbrook, Sanford B. Ladd, and James S. Botsford, all leading citizens of Kansas City, certify to the same effect.

Other testimony before your committee shows the claimant's present condition, and that the eye disease existed for many years before he became blind.

In several similar cases, where pensioners of the Mexican war were totally blind, notably the cases of Titus Wilder and Martin Kellogg, Congress has increased the pension to $72 per month.

Your committee believe the bill one of merit, and therefore recommend its passage, amended by inserting after the word "volunteers," in line 5, the words "Mexican war."

Mr. PETERS. I understand from the reading of this bill, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to increase the pension or to give a pension of $72 per month. Am I correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. That is the amount proposed by the bill.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to know either from the report or from some member of the committee who is familiar with the facts why this amount is given?

Mr. ADAMS. This is a case of total blindness and requires constant attendance. I thought it was stated in the report. I know personally the beneficiary. There is a report referred to, which is made a part of the report that was read, which explains the case.

Mr. TARSNEY. I know the facts from my own personal knowledge. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES H. PERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3383) granting a pension to Charles H. Perry.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3383) granting a pension to Charles H. Perry, have considered the same and report:

The claimant made application to the Pension Bureau March 24, 1887, for a pension under the Mexican war service act of January 29, 1857, declaring that while serving as fourth mate on the United States whaling-ship Edward, commanded by Capt. John S. Barker, the ship touched the shores of Mexico, at a place called San José, where they were spoken by a trading sloop to go to the rescue of the garrison at said place, which was in the possession of our American troops (twenty-eight men), but which was surrounded by several hundred Mexicans, cutting off the water front.

The whaling-ship Magnolia dropped anchor near the Edward, and at the request of the garrison the forces of the two ships were combined, making a force of about sixty men, who landed, drove the enemy back, and remained there until the United States ship Relief relieved them. In order to perform the service above named the ships Edward and Magnolia were left in charge of two men each, and the landing force marched 14 miles to reach the garrison. After relief came the ship Edward took dispatches to Commodore Shubrick, who was stationed at Matland with the squadron. Commodore Shubrick returned thanks in behalf of the Government for the service rendered by the Edward on that occasion, and at his request the Edward carried fixed ammunition, shells, etc., back to the garrison.

The official report of the United States Fish Commission for 1875-'76 contains at the bottom of page 113 the following statement:

"The London Mercantile Gazette of October 22, 1852, said: 'The number of American ships engaged in the southern whale fisheries alone would of themselves be nearly sufficient to man any ordinary fleet of ships of war which that country might require to send to sea. Instances are not wanting, indeed, where whalers have undertaken yeoman service for their country. Thus in November, 1846, Captain Simmons, of the Magnolia, and Captain John E. Barker, of the Edward, both of New Bedford, hearing that the garrison of San José, Lower California, was in imminent danger, landed their crews and marched to its relief, etc.'"

On page 421 of the same volume a table showing returns of whaling vessels sailing from American ports has a marginal note mentioning the fact that Captain Barker, of the Edward, marched with his crew to the relief of the garrison of San José in 1846.

In a letter addressed to your committee under date of February 18, 1890, the collector of customs, port of New Bedford, Mass., says:

"The records of this office show that Charles H. Perry was one of the crew of the ship Edward, Capt. John S. Barker, which vessel cleared from this port July 14, 1845, for a whaling voyage in the Pacific Ocean, and returned from said voyage April 6, 1849."

The application filed in the Pension Bureau by the claimant was rejected January 30, 1888, on the ground that he was not an enlisted man in the military or naval service of the United States.

Your committee believe, however, that in view of the service rendered, by which the garrison of San José and the lives of more than a score of men were probably saved to the Government, the claim is an exceptionally meritorious one and should be so recognized by the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM G. HILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4811) to pension William G. Hill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-rolls of the Government the name of William G. Hill, late orderly sergeant of Capt. Jesse Walker's company, Oregon Volunteers, for meritorious service, and for wounds received in October, 1854, while engaged in battle with the Pi-Ute Indians in the Chewaucan Valley, in Oregon, then a Territory, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to William G. Hill, have considered the same and beg leave to submit the following report:

The records of the Third Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that the claimant served as first sergeant in Capt. Jesse Walker's company, Oregon Indian war, from August 3, 1854, to November 6, 1854, and that he was dangerously wounded in an engagement with Pi-Ute Indians on the morning of October 11, 1854. He asks a pension for said service and wound.

Hon. BINGER HERMANN, a Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon, makes the following statement:

"I have known him for thirty years. He is now old, infirm, and poor. He has indeed nothing, and his brothers aid him largely. He has never recovered from his wounds received while in active service in the Oregon Indian war. His jawbone was broken while struggling with an Indian in battle. His face is disfigured and scarred, and other wounds have largely disabled him for manual labor for life. He can do no severe physical service, and he suffers much pain. He should have $20 or $25 per month, and then it will be hard for him to maintain his wife and those dependent upon him. He is a temperate man."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out the words "subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States," in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh lines of said bill, and substitute in lieu thereof the words "and allow him a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

KEZIAH RANDALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6607) granting a pension to Keziah Randall, of Mattapoisett, Mass., widow of Richard Randall, who served in the coast guard, 1812-1815.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Keziah Randall, of Mattapoisett, Mass., widow of Richard Randall, who served as coast guard in the war of 1812 to 1815.

The report (by Mr. RANDALL, of Massachusetts) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6607) granting a pension to Keziah Randall, have considered the same, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant, who is shown by record evidence to have been born September 30, 1789, asks a pension by special act, declaring that her husband, Richard Randall, with Josiah Sturtevant, Nathaniel Parlow, William Sherman, and Leabod Burgess, all of Rochester, Mass., went to Wareham and served as coast guard at the time the British sloop Nimrod made a raid on Falmouth, Wareham, and other places along the shores of Buzzard's Bay during the war of 1812; that her said husband was away on duty as coast guard about three weeks the first time, and in all he served about three months. He never enjoyed good health after returning home, and the claimant thinks exposure in said service was the cause. She disposed of her husband's knapsack and gun some fifty-five years ago.

Claimant further declares she has never received any aid from the State or National Government and is poor and needy, depending on her friends for support.

Seth Hiller, William Hammond, George W. Lewis, A. M. Jenney, and Dr. W. E. Sparrow, citizens in high standing at claimant's home, certify that they have known her for forty years and upwards and that she has always been a hard-working and prudent woman. They never knew of her veracity being questioned, and her memory, especially of events occurring in her early life, is remarkable; also that she is dependent upon neighbors and friends for support.

It also appears that claimant is unable to find any one now living who served with her husband in the war 1812, and no record of the service can now be found.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Add to said bill the words "and allow her a pension at $25 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill as amended will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANNIE W. METCALFE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6415) to reissue the pension certificate of Nannie W. Metcalfe and allow her a pension as a surgeon's widow.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6415) to reissue the pension certificate of Nannie W. Metcalfe and allow her a pension as a surgeon's widow, have considered the same and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant's deceased husband, George W. Metcalfe, was mustered into the service as an assistant surgeon Seventy-sixth New York Infantry Volunteers January 13, 1862, and as surgeon same regiment to date July 30, 1862. He was mustered out November 9, 1864, by reason of expiration of term of service. During a part of his service he served as surgeon-in-chief Second Brigade, and with the exception of the time between January 13, 1862, and July 30, 1862, he ranked as surgeon and rendered long and faithful service to his country while holding that grade.

The soldier filed an application for pension January 9, 1871, alleging that while in line of duty in Fredericksburgh, Va., in July and August, 1862, he contracted malarial disease and chronic diarrhea, which resulted in disease of liver and kidneys. The soldier died October 28, 1874, of the diseases alleged in his application. The widow (this claimant) was allowed a pension under the general pension laws at the rate of $17 per month, which is the amount fixed by law for the widows of assistant surgeons. The claimant also completed her husband's claim and was allowed the accrued pension, he having died before his claim was completed.

The claimant prays that her pension certificate be reissued so as to pension her as the widow of a surgeon instead of as the widow of an assistant surgeon. She declares that her husband's service was such as to entitle her to this recognition.

It appears from the soldier's allegations and the proof submitted in support of his claim before the Pension Bureau that his diseases were contracted in July or August, 1862. It will be remembered that he was promoted to the rank of surgeon on the 30th of July, 1862.

The soldier was unable to definitely fix the time of contracting the alleged diseases, but at different times gave it as June or July, 1862; July or August, 1862; the summer and autumn of 1862, and once he stated that it was not until after July 25, 1862, that he contracted the diseases claimed for in his original application.

Dr. N. B. Barnes, an assistant surgeon of the soldier's regiment, testifies that the soldier's diseases were contracted in the summer and autumn of 1862. Other witnesses testify that the diseases were contracted while the regiment was at Fredericksburgh, Va., and the soldier himself made the same allegation, but in view of the fact that (as shown by papers in the case) the regiment did not leave that place until some time after the soldier's promotion to surgeon, this throws but little light on the question of the exact date upon which the disability was contracted.

The records of the War Department contain no evidence that the soldier was off duty for any cause until a long time after the date of promotion as surgeon.

In the light of the facts recited herein your committee believe that it is quite as fair to presume the diseases which caused the soldier's death were contracted immediately after the soldier's promotion to surgeon as that they were incurred just before his advancement to that grade. That he contracted disease and received promotion about the same time appear clear, but which appeared first can not, it seems, be definitely shown, and this committee is of the opinion that whatever doubts there are in the matter should be resolved in the claimant's favor.

The passage of the bill, which is respectfully recommended, will give the claimant $25 per month in lieu of the amount she is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. M'KINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4094) granting a pension to James M. McKinney.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4094) granting a pension to James M. McKinney, submit the following report:

A similar bill was introduced during the Fiftieth Congress, and favorably reported by the Invalid Pensions Committee, but was not reached for final action. The report of said committee sets forth the facts in the case as follows:

"The beneficiary named in the bill was second lieutenant of Company A, North Cumberland Battalion Kentucky State Militia. His claim for pension on account of gunshot wound of left shoulder and face, resulting in loss of left eye, was rejected by the Pension Office because claimant was not in the military service of the United States at time of the receipt of the wounds.

"It appears from the evidence on file that McKinney was mustered into the above-named organization October 1, 1864, and mustered out August 28, 1865. While stationed with his command in Union County, Kentucky, in April, 1865, the same was attacked by a force of Confederates. The latter overpowered the militia, and claimant, with others of the command, was captured and taken away as prisoner. The Confederates were shortly thereafter pursued by some Illinois soldiers, and a fight ensued, during which the claimant, while attempting to escape to the Union troops, was shot in the shoulder and face as heretofore stated.

"There being no law now existing under which pensions can be granted to members of State organizations, the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting the claim was proper. Congress, however, has always recognized the justice of this class of claims, and being fully satisfied of the merit of the case under consideration, your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass."

Your committee concur in the conclusions reached in the foregoing report, and likewise recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES S. FERRIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3511) granting a pension to James S. Ferrin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of James S. Ferrin, imbecile son of James W. Ferrin, late of Company F, Fourth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, who died in Andersonville prison, upon the pension-roll, and pay him a pension of $18 per month during life.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James S. Ferrin."

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3511) granting a pension to James S. Ferrin, have considered the same and report that a similar bill to the one under consideration was considered and favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, which report is referred to and adopted by your committee as containing the facts and history in this case. The bill reported to the Fiftieth Congress was not acted upon. They report the bill back to the House with recommendation that it pass with this amendment:

"Said pension payable to the legally qualified trustee or committee of the said James S. Ferrin."

[House Report No. 3937, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3511) granting a pension to James S. Ferrin, have considered the same and report as follows:

The beneficiary of this bill is the imbecile son of James W. Ferrin, who was a soldier in Company F, Fourth Kentucky Mounted Infantry. The soldier was captured on July 30, 1864, and was sent to rebel prison at Florence, S. C., and died there from exposure on November 6, 1864. The child was born on August 15, 1864, shortly after the receipt of news of the imprisonment of the father. The widow was a pensioner until her remarriage in 1869, and the child's pension was paid to the guardian until 1880, when the boy became sixteen years of age. He has been an imbecile from his birth, as shown by testimony, both medical and lay, filed before your committee.

His subsistence is afforded by his mother, who, with a number of small children, has been deserted by the second husband. The family is certified to be in very straitened circumstances.

In several similar instances Congress has afforded relief to the extent asked for in the bill, and hence the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SALLIE T. WARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1622) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Sallie T. Ward, widow of the late General W. T. Ward, a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she now receives, during her natural life.

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1622) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward, widow of the late William T. Ward, have had the same under consideration, and find that a similar bill to the one under consideration was passed by the Fiftieth Congress, but was vetoed by the President. The objections of the President were as follows, to wit:

"The bill herewith returned, while fixing the monthly amount to be absolutely paid to the beneficiary, does not make the granting of the pension nor the payment of the money subject to any of the provisions of the pension laws, nor make any reference to the Mexican service pension she is now receiving. While it is the rule under general laws that two pensions shall not be paid to the same person, inasmuch as the widow is entitled to the pension she is now receiving upon grounds different from those upon which the special bill was passed, and no intention is apparent in the special bill that the other pension should be superseded, it may result that, under the peculiar wording of this bill, she would be entitled to both pensions."

The present bill is drawn so as to meet this objection.

Your committee refer to the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Fiftieth Congress, reporting on a similar bill to this, for a statement of facts and the military history of General Ward, and adopt the same as their report.

They recommend that the bill pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "receives," and insert therein instead the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

[House Report No. 1404, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8574) granting a pension to Sallie T. Ward, widow of William T. Ward, have had the same under consideration, and find that a similar bill to the one before your committee was introduced into the Forty-sixth Congress and passed, but was not called up and acted on in the Senate.

As to the facts and history of this case, the report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions of that Congress is adopted as the report of this committee.

Said report shows that he was mustered into the service October 4, 1847, as major of the Fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served with his regiment in Mexico to July, 1848, and was honorably mustered out with his regiment at Louisville, Ky., July 27, 1848.

He was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers 18th September, 1861, and brevetted major-general of volunteers 24th February, 1865.

His services were: Organizing brigade in Kentucky from September 20 to December 1, 1861; commanding troops at Green River Bridge, Kentucky, to January 8, 1862; commanding Sixteenth Brigade, Department of the Ohio, to March 12, 1862; commanding camp of instruction at Bardonia, Ky., and all the troops on the lines south of Louisville, Ky., to July, 1862; commanding troops at Lexington, Ky., during part of July, 1862, and in pursuit of Morgan to August, 1862; commanding at Munfordsville, Ky., to September 5, 1862, and a brigade in Army of Ohio to November, 1862; commanding post and brigade at Gallatin, Tenn., to June, 1863; commanding Second Brigade, Third Division, Reserve Corps, Department of the Cumberland, to October, 1863, and brigade in the district of Nashville, to January 8, 1864; commanding First Division, Eleventh Corps, to April, 1864, and First Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Corps, to June 29, 1864; commanding Third Division, Twentieth Corps, to September 23, 1864; on leave of absence to October 10, 1864; commanding Third Division, Twentieth Corps, until corps was discontinued, June, 1865. Honorably mustered out of service August 24, 1865.

He distinguished himself in the battles before the fall of Atlanta and in the fights preceding the surrender of General Joseph E. Johnston's army.

While leading his brigade in a charge at the battle of Resaca, Ga., he was severely wounded in the arm and side, but refused to leave the field. He was absent on leave only seventeen days during the whole war.

The fractured bone by the wound at Resaca gave him much trouble, and he finally found the arm useless. On account of his wounds he was receiving a brigadier's pension of $30 per month at the time of his death (certificate No. 100492).

He died October 12, 1878, a few months after completing his seventieth year of life.

While we can not say that his wounds and exposures in the service of his country were the direct cause of his death, they doubtless tended to diminish his powers to resist the effects of old age and hasten his death.

He left a widow now past sixty years of age and without property or means of support.

Your committee find many precedents for the legislation asked in the accompanying bill passed at every Congress since the war. Among them we will only refer to the pensions to Elizabeth York, widow of Shubal York, surgeon Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteers (chapter 53, page 582, 14 Statutes at Large); Rose Webster, widow of Reason H. Webster, Company E, One hundred and twenty-third Illinois (chapter 116, page 530, 20 Statutes at Large); Grace Atkins, widow of William R. Atkins, Company A, Eleventh Iowa Volunteers (chapter 226, page 575, 20 Statutes at Large); Caroline S. Webster, widow of Col. Fletcher Webster, $50 per month; and widow of General James Shields, $100 per month (chapter 46, page 3, first session Forty-sixth Congress).

Your committee recommend that the accompanying bill be passed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANASTASIA M'GRIEVEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3256) granting a pension to Anastasia McGrievy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anastasia McGrievy, widow of Henry McGrievy, late of Company K, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3256) granting a pension to Anastasia McGrievy submit the following report:

Anastasia McGrievy is the widow of Henry McGrievy, who was a private in Company K, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who enlisted August 14, 1861, and served until the close of the war; was mustered out of the service July 13, 1865, died December 24, 1873. His widow made application for pension September 22, 1879, alleging that the soldier's death was caused by reason of injuries received while in the service and in the line of his duty by being run over by a hand-car on the railroad, said car having five men upon it, by which he received internal injuries which resulted in his death.

That said soldier, after having been injured as before stated, was sent to the general hospital at Rome, Ga., where he was treated for his injuries.

This claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that the soldier's death was not attributable to his Army service. The evidence on file clearly establishes prior soundness. He was a strong, healthy, robust man when he entered the service, and the records in the War Department report him absent, sick in hospital. He was treated in the general hospital at Rome, Ga., and also in the regimental hospital.

Capt. H. Rhoades, of Company K, testifies he was a good, faithful sergeant, and during the latter part of his service he was poorly, and, for some cause he does not remember, was partially disabled.

Michael G. Robie and Levi Bates, members of his company, testify that on or about May 1, 1863, they were with the soldier in company with five men on a hand-car on the Mobile and Ohio Railway as a guard to bring up the paymaster from Henderson to Fort Hooker, Tennessee. While the car was going very rapidly the soldier was struck in the back by the crank and was thrown very violently from the car in front of it, and the car passed over him. He was picked up for dead, but he regained consciousness, and upon examination it was found that no bones were broken. He was carried back to the hospital at camp and was off duty for some time, having been badly bruised and injured by said accident. The evidence goes to show that the soldier suffered from this injury ever afterward and was material in producing his death.

Samuel Lawler and John Syreian testify:

"We were intimate with the soldier from the time he returned from the Army up to the time of his death, December 23, 1873; saw him frequently during his last sickness. He was sick when he came home, and did not work for three or four months, and was attended by Dr. Neff; but he got better after awhile and went into the railroad blacksmith shops as a helper, and worked under these assistants as a helper. He was never strong, and whenever he overexerted himself he complained of suffering in his stomach from injuries alleged to have been received in the war. At times the pain in his head made him somewhat wild, and Dr. Neff had to give him hypodermic injections over the temples and forehead. He worked in the shops for years, but never able to do a full day's work. He left the shops and was confined to his house. He was a man of good moral habits."

In fact the case well establishes prior soundness, incurrence of injuries in the service, from which he never recovered, and no doubt was the cause of his death in the opinion of your committee. The cause of the rejection in the Pension Office was by reason of an opinion expressed in the testimony of one of the attending physicians, in his last illness, that the disease of the stomach of which he complained was of a cancerous nature.

This opinion, there is no doubt in the minds of your committee, was a mistake; there was no post mortem examination, and no evidence on file to prove that this physician had the opportunity of correctly informing himself so as to give an intelligent opinion as to whether this was cancer or not. Unfortunately for claimant, this doctor's opinion has been the sole cause of the rejection of the claim by the Pension Office, which, to say the least, leaves a grave doubt in the opinion of your committee as to the correctness of his diagnosis. Under the circumstances, there is no reason why this poor dependent widow, with six children, should not be given the benefit of the doubt. Your committee is of the opinion that this is a meritorious bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRISON WAGNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 645) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner.

Mr. YODER. Mr. Chairman, I made the report in this case, and upon an investigation I find that there are some other matters to be embodied. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report, and I will make a supplementary report hereafter, allowing the bill to retain its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOSEPH D. WILLIAMSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6603) granting a pension to Joseph D. Williamson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph D. Williamson, late private in Company C, One hundred and nineteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Veterans, and allow him a pension from the date of the filing of his claim in the Pension Office.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6603) granting a pension to Joseph D. Williamson, has had the same under consideration, and beg to submit the following report:

The facts in this case are as follows:

Claimant enlisted April 27, 1861, and re-enlisted as a veteran volunteer December 31, 1863, and served continuously to the date of his muster out of service, June 16, 1865, a term of four years one month and twenty days. During this time he was captured on Weldon Railroad, August 19, 1864, and remained a prisoner of war to March 23, 1865, a term of six months and nine days. On April 18, 1873, he filed a claim for pension, claiming as a cause chronic bronchitis, and December 13, 1879, an amended application, claiming as an additional cause affection of right lung, and on May 1, 1885, a second amended application, claiming disease of rectum and heart, all of which he alleged to be the result of exposure while held in Salisbury prison, during the winter of 1864-'65.

The proofs show that he had severe cough and cold while in prison, and that when paroled he was so weak and feeble that he could not march, but had to be transported by conveyance to place of parole; that when he arrived at Camp Parole, Maryland, he was not able to ride on horseback from the railroad station in Pennsylvania, near his home, without being held on his horse. That his family physician, while home on said furlough, despaired of his life or recovery from his then critical condition. That his furlough was extended thirty more days upon his physician's affidavit that he was unable to travel because of his condition then due to his prison hardships and exposure. That he recovered sufficiently to report to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he was discharged June 16, 1865, on a medical certificate of disability.

That he remained at home and under treatment for disease of lungs and heart and general debility. That his condition became somewhat improved by his treatment and his good constitution, favored by his youth; when, on January 20, 1866, he gained an acceptance in the regular Army, to serve on the frontier, in New Mexico and Arizona, believing that the climate would be favorable to his permanent recovery. That he served in the Third United States Cavalry to October 22, 1868, when he was honorably discharged. That for several years he remained in Texas and the South after his discharge, on account of his disease of bronchitis and lung affection, and finally returned to Pennsylvania, still suffering in a mild or violent form with said disease, and has been continuously suffering on account of said several afflictions in various degrees of severity to this date.

It also appears that claimant's claim has been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because the record fails to show treatment for said afflictions while a member of the Third United States Cavalry; the only record of treatment being for catarrhal ophthalmia and blistered feet at the hospital at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., once on March 30, 1867, and June 14 to 17, 1868. This record the claimant claims is erroneous, inasmuch as he never was afflicted with ophthalmia or blistered feet. He claims this treatment while in said hospital was for hemorrhoids, or piles, and nothing else. His claim of error in the record counts with plausibility, because, as he says, he was always mounted, and never traveled on foot, whereby his feet would likely become blistered.

In view of this failure of record, the Department has applied the doctrine of stopper to the claimant's claim for a pension, and holds that notwithstanding the incurrence of said afflictions in the service and line of duty, his residence in the regular Army, and the absence of any record showing the continuance of said disabilities while therein, the claimant is estopped under the well established rules of that Department from setting up a claim for pension thereafter.

The evidence shows that the claimant entered the service at the breaking out of the rebellion, at eighteen years of age, a stout and healthy man, and that he was a good soldier, discharged for disability due to his prison hardships; that he is now over forty-five years of age, has an invalid wife and eight children, is now and has been for many years unable to perform manual labor, and is and has been dependent on the charity of his friends for his support.

In view of the evidence carefully considered, aside from any arbitrary rules in its application, it seems to us that in this case the presumption herefore held by the Pension Office ought not to be applied to this case; that claim has great merit and ought to be allowed, and therefore we recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHANNA ECKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2958) for the relief of Johanna Eckle.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Johanna Eckle, widow of Joseph Eckle, late private Company E, Second Regiment of Maryland Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2958) for the relief of Johanna Eckle, submit the following report:

Johanna Eckle is the widow of Joseph Eckle, who served as private in Company E, Second Maryland Volunteers, from July 23, 1861, to July 28, 1864. In action before Petersburg, Va., June 16, 1864, he was wounded in left leg, which wound resulted in an aggravated case of varicose veins, for which he was pensioned at $14 per month.

The widow's claim has been rejected on the ground that soldier's death from fall out of his window is not chargeable to his military service.

It appears in evidence that the soldier was a great sufferer by reason of the diseased condition of the wounded leg, losing much sleep. On the night of his death, the weather being intensely hot, he got up about midnight, telling his son, who was sleeping in the room, that his leg pained him much; went to the window, placing his foot upon the sill, which was but 17 inches from the floor, and applied some liniment.

The son, who had fallen asleep again, was suddenly awakened by a noise on the steps below, and getting up found that his father had fallen out of the window. A physician was immediately called, but before his arrival the soldier had expired. Some of the neighbors testify that they were with the soldier as late as 11 o'clock on that night; that he complained much of the pain in his leg, was perfectly sober, but cheerful as usual.

The reviewer of the Pension Office, in summing up the case, says:

"The evidence shows prima facie that soldier's leg was in a most wretched condition, subjecting him at any moment to the possibility of a fall, and that one night in July, 1864, a very hot one, while suffering intense pain and worried with the heat, he got up about midnight, etc. * * * There is nothing particular to arouse the suspicion that soldier was an intemperate man or that he had been drinking on the night in question, the theory being that on getting up to the window to return to bed his leg gave way, and that being unable to recover himself in time he was precipitated into the street with fatal result."

Upon the showing made, the Commissioner of Pensions, under date of December 15, 1886, forwarded the papers in the case to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in pursuance of the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress approved May 29, 1880, for its favorable consideration, but no action appears to have been taken upon his recommendation.

Your committee are of opinion that the facts in the case, together with the dependent condition of the widow, warrant favorable action in the case, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARBARA SCHNAPPINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4482) granting a pension to Barbara Schnappinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barbara Schnappinger, widow of Frederick Schnappinger, late private in Company K, Second Maryland Infantry.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from date of soldier's death.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4482) granting a pension to Barbara Schnappinger, submit the following report:

The petitioner, Barbara Schnappinger, is the widow of Frederick Schnappinger, who enlisted August 28, 1861, in Company K, Second Maryland Volunteers, and was discharged September 13, 1864. He died July 8, 1880, and was at the time of his death on the pension-rolls on account of double inguinal hernia.

On August 7, 1880, his widow filed a claim for pension, alleging that soldier's death was due to the hernia for which pensioned, which was rejected by the Pension Office in May 22, 1883, on the ground that soldier's death from apoplexy was not shown to be due to his military service.

From the records of the War Department it appears that the soldier was treated in several hospitals for chronic diarrhea, remittent fever, and rheumatism, and the testimony on file in the case shows that subsequent to his return from the Army the soldier complained of general debility, besides the double rupture; that in 1879 and 1880 he received benefits from a lodge of which he was a member on account of sickness due to rheumatism; and Dr. F. Reinhardt testifies that he treated the soldier during the month of February for articular and muscular rheumatism; that he left him uncured, and that in his opinion his sudden death a few months later was caused by these ailments.

On July 7, 1880, the soldier was suddenly taken ill, and Dr. Birch, who was called, testified he found him unconscious from apoplexy, and when calling the next morning he found him dead.

There can be no doubt that the claim is a meritorious one, and that the apoplexy which caused death was a direct result of the rheumatism which is of record in the service, and which was evidently the general debility testified to by his neighbors and fellow-workmen as having existed since his discharge and for which he received treatment by Dr. Reinhard.

Could it be shown in a more satisfactory manner that the rheumatism had existed continuously since soldier's discharge the widow's claim would have to be admitted by the Pension Office, as said disease is accepted as the exciting cause of apoplexy; but owing to soldier's removal from place to place, remaining in each but a short time, such proof can not be filed by the widow.

The committee believe the claim to be a meritorious one, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, striking out, however, all of section 2 of the same.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MINERVA JANE OLIVE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1982) granting a pension to Mrs. Minerva Jane Olive.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Minerva Jane Olive, mother of William H. H. Ryman, deceased, late a private of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1982) granting a pension to Mrs. Minerva Jane Olive, submit the following report: We have had the same under consideration and recommend that the bill do pass, hereby adopting as our report the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is as follows, to wit:

"That the petitioner, Mrs. Minerva Jane Olive, is the mother of William H. H. Ryman, deceased, who was a private in the Nineteenth Regiment of the United States Infantry, and who subsequently, after his discharge from the first service, enlisted in Company C, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and was mustered into the service of the United States on the 7th day of December, 1863, for the term of three years, by Captain Farquhar, United States Army, mustering officer.

"The said W. H. H. Ryman, the son of the petitioner, served through the war of the rebellion, was six months a prisoner at Andersonville, and was returning home with others of his regiment on board the steamer Sultana, which vessel was in the service of the Government as a transport, on the 27th day of April, 1865, when she exploded and was wrecked, with much loss of life, on the Mississippi River, about 8 miles above the city of Memphis, Tenn.

"The claimant has not applied for a pension to the Commissioner of Pensions, on account of lack of technical or legal proof of the death of her said son while in the line of military duty and service; but we think the proof of his loss upon the steamer Sultana aforesaid amounts to very near a positive certainty. The explosion took place twenty-four years ago last April. It appears from the affidavits of the mother and other friends and acquaintances of the soldier that he has not been heard of or seen at any time since.

"The certificate of the adjutant-general of Indiana, N. R. Ruckie, containing evidence of the enlistment and service of the soldier, sets out at the close of it: 'Supposed lost on steamer Sultana, April 27, 1865.' The affidavit of Joseph T. Elliott, on file, shows that the affiant was second lieutenant of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and states that—"I was on the steamer Sultana with the said William H. H. Ryman the night before the explosion of the vessel. I was well acquainted with him; he was a member of my company, and I talked with him the night before. I know that he disappeared during the explosion. I am morally certain that he was one of the lost on the vessel. I saw him the night before and I have never seen him to this day since."

"This affidavit bears date November 29, 1880.

"We think this evidence, accompanied by the presumption arising from such long absence, is sufficient proof of the death of the soldier. The facts of his enlistment and service and that he was returning home with others to be discharged (not having been discharged) on board a Government vessel, and so in line of duty, are also sufficiently proven.

"The petitioner has been twice married since the death of her first husband, Ryman, father of the soldier. All her three husbands are now dead. She had no children by any except the first husband. By him she had three sons, all of whom entered the Army and served honorably in the war of the rebellion. Two of these are yet living. One is a United States pensioner; the other is in broken health; neither are men of any means or property.

"William H. H. Ryman, the youngest of the three sons of the first marriage, who was lost, as we think, on the Sultana, as aforesaid, contributed, as the evidence shows, substantially to the support of his mother, the petitioner, both before the war and during his service therein. This son was never married; left neither wife nor children surviving him.

"The petitioner is seventy-three years old, is in very feeble health, and has no property or means of support except her own labor and the charity of friends.

"We therefore report herewith and recommend the passage of a bill for her relief."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE B. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1983) granting a pension to George B. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George B. Smith, late private in Company F, Ninety-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1983) granting a pension to George B. Smith, submit the following report:

The committee respectfully submit that they recommend the passage of the bill as it passed the Senate, and upon examination of the facts found to be established by the evidence herein they adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions as their own, which is as follows, to wit:

"That the said George B. Smith was a private in Company F, Ninety-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, enlisted in August, 1862, and served until September 22, 1864. He is now a pensioner, drawing $8 per month on account of chronic diarrhea and resulting disability. But the present petition is filed for an increase, upon the ground of total blindness. There seems to be no question as to his present condition being that of total blindness, and it has been such since 1877.

"The petitioner alleges that the disease of the eyes which caused blindness originated from being overheated during a two-day march from Moscow to Memphis, Tenn., which occurred on the 7th and 8th of June, 1863; that since said time his power of vision has gradually become weaker until he totally lost his sight in 1877 as aforesaid. The petitioner's claim upon this ground has been presented to the Commissioner of Pensions and has been rejected by the Commissioner, and said rejection has been affirmed upon appeal to the Secretary of the Interior on the ground, chiefly, that the disease of the eyes did not originate in the service in the line of his military duty, and also upon the strength of certain medical opinions that the disease could not have originated from overheating, but that it is due to inflammation of the eyes after the term of service had expired.

"We are not concerned about effects of the technical distinction between overheating and inflammation. We think the evidence in the case, of the facts in the case, shows the origin of the disease to have been during the military service of the soldier. Three special examiners, Thomas W. Burke, under date of November 5, 1887, George E. Woolsey, under date of June 30, 1887, and John W. Clappitt, under date of August 8, 1887, have each certified that they believe there is merit in this claim of total blindness.

"George S. Walker, under date of November 5, 1887, testifies that—"I was a lieutenant in the same company with the claimant. That while on the march to Memphis in the spring of 1863 from Fort DeHart, near Moscow, the petitioner had to be hauled in an ambulance, as he had been overheated and overcome so that he could not march. This was on the line of march just before the command reached Memphis. It took two days to make the march. It was in the spring of 1863. The weather was very warm. It had been intended to make the march in three days. The distance was 45 miles. The men having just left winter quarters, the march in two days was a very severe one, they not being toughened by previous marching to stand it.

"I waited upon claimant afterwards. He was suffering from diarrhea and sore eyes. The eyes looked sore and angry. He complained that he could not see well out of his eyes, and of his eyes hurting him. After that I understood that he was always troubled with sore eyes in the service and otherwise. I saw him again about January 1, 1864, at Scottsborough, Ala. He had sore eyes when I rejoined him at that place, but while attending on duty."

"This statement of Lieutenant Walker, an eye-witness to the condition of the soldier at the time of the origin of the disease, is corroborated, if it needed corroboration, by the testimony of Manley C. Ramey, who was a private in the same company, and it appears from the evidence of David C. Little, Frederick Jennings, John C. Kitchfield, and Dr. W. W. Butterworth, as well as other comrades and acquaintances, whose affidavits are on file, that this disease of the eye was continued and existed in some degree up to the time of his discharge, and became worse after his discharge, gradually disabling him from work or labor of any kind, until he totally lost his sight in 1877.

"It is true there is some evidence that he (the petitioner) had conjunctivitis of the eyes before this and years prior to his enlistment; but physicians say that when that disease is cured it is cured for good, just the same as other diseases, and it appears that the petitioner was cured of that and that he was in sound condition at the time of enlistment and, as is stated by Special Examiner Woolsey in his report before referred to—

"Physicians also say that overheating would or might cause congestion of the optic nerve, and, though apparently being of no importance at the time, might eventually result in total blindness. As there is no other hypothesis to account for the soldier's present condition, if that was not the cause of the blindness, what was?"

"After a careful examination of all the evidence in this case—and it is very voluminous—we have concluded that the petitioner is entitled to relief principally upon the ground, we think, that more weight ought to be given to the testimony of eye-witnesses, personal acquaintances and neighbors of the soldier, both as to the origin of the disease and as to its continuance and character, than to that of medical experts as to the effect of statements of the same made upon paper.

"The petitioner is now fifty-four years old. He has, he says, 40 acres of broken land, encumbered by $500 of mortgage, and he has no other means of support. He can not attend to the land himself, and his hire, the interest on the mortgage debt, and the taxes leave no income from that source.

"We therefore report herewith and recommend a bill for his relief."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARENT S. VAN BUREN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2057) for the relief of Barent S. Van Buren.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2057) granting a pension to Barent S. Van Buren, submit the following report:

The case of Barent S. Van Buren, formerly a musician of the Fourth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers (claim for invalid pension No. 389923), was rejected by the Pension Office September 17, 1885, on the ground that the evidence on file in the case did not show that tumors of breast and thigh originated in the service and the line of duty.

The history of this case is as follows: Soldier, who was the son of Judge E. Van Buren, of Chicago, was a musician and joined the regiment composed of the Fourth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers in October, 1861; was discharged with the other members of the band at Cairo in the spring of 1862. The testimony on file in his case in the Pension Office goes to show that soldier contracted tumors of chest, abdomen, and thigh, on the march from Fort Henry to Fort Donelson, Tennessee, in February, 1862. The weather was wet and cold, and the constant riding day and night and the constant exposure brought on sickness, which resulted in said tumors, which were hard and soft alternately and at times suppurated; always tender and troublesome.

These tumors existed at the date of discharge in April, 1862, and Dr. Joseph W. Freer, who treated him immediately after arriving home, after discharge, for these tumors, is dead, and soldier has been unable to furnish the testimony of a commissioned officer of the regiment as to the incurrence of his disability in the service, owing to the fact that the members of the band were not with the regiment when traversing the country from Fort Henry to Fort Donelson, Tennessee.

He has furnished the testimony of the different members of the band who were with him at the time, and to whom he showed his tumors at Randolph Forges in February, 1862, after the ride across the country.

The testimony shows that he was a strong, healthy man when he enlisted, by parties who knew him. This is shown by several witnesses, and that he was afflicted as above set forth on his return from the Army. It is certain from the testimony on file that this man was sound and well when he enlisted, and it is equally certain that he was discharged because of his sickness, which he contracted after his enlistment. It seems that by an equitable construction this claimant contracted this disability while in the service and in line of duty.

Therefore the committee recommend that this bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATLENA LYMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5206) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5206) granting an increase of pension to Catlena Lyman, submit the following report:

This bill passed the Senate of the Fiftyeth Congress, and the following report was made to the Senate on said bill, which report your committee adopt as their own, and which is in words as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was re-referred the bill (S. 2626) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman, widow of William C. Lyman, have examined the same and report:

"That the claimant is now a pensioner at the rate of $25 per month, the rate allowed by law for her husband's rank, that of passed assistant surgeon in the Navy.

"Since the recommitment of the bill it is shown by additional evidence submitted to the committee that the husband, William C. Lyman, although having officially only the rank of passed assistant surgeon, did actually serve as surgeon in the Navy in the war of 1861 with marked ability. He took the place of surgeon at the United States naval rendezvous at Chicago. He had charge of several ships in quarantine outside of New Orleans; he was in the expedition against the forts and fleets of the enemy in the Lower Mississippi. In the discharge of his duties there he took the yellow fever, and only recovered after long suffering.

"He served as surgeon on board the Portsmouth, the flag-ship of Admiral Farragut, and in recognition of the meritorious character of his services he received a testimonial from the Admiral, being a box of surgical instruments, inscribed to him by that officer, which has been shown by the widow, in whose possession it is, to the committee.

"The claimant lost all her property by the Chicago fire, and is now without means of support save the pension. The sum now paid her is inadequate.

"The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how much the claimant in this case is now receiving.

Mr. LAWLER. Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. KILGORE. The probable foundation of that claim is that this claimant lost her property in the Chicago fire. Now, if the Government undertakes that—

Mr. LAWLER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LANE. The ground for the application for increase in this case is that the husband of the claimant served in a different rank from that to which he was commissioned.

Mr. KILGORE. I will tell you what I will be willing to do about this: Let this case go over the way we have been doing in other cases and go before a full House; let it be considered in the House and give the claimant a chance at it there. This is a considerable increase. I am not inclined to object to the bill to-night, but am willing that it shall go over.

Mr. LAWLER. There is merit in the bill, and for that reason I wanted the gentleman from Texas to listen to the reading of the report, which was short. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE], the husband of this woman served in a higher position than that to which he was commissioned.

Mr. KILGORE. There is nothing in that. I never knew a lieutenant who was not willing to serve as a captain. I believe I will insist on the arrangement I suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that next Friday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the bill shall be taken up, the previous question to be considered as ordered, the privilege of amendment reserved, and that fifteen minutes be given for debate on each side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JAMES McCUSKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2066) granting a pension to James McCusker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McCusker, late of Company M, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2066) granting a pension to James McCusker, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted December 31, 1861, and was discharged September 25, 1865.

The basis of the claim is rheumatism contracted at Gettysburgh, Pa., and also by a fall from his horse at Fredericksburgh, Va., also ague and piles. The claim was rejected at the Pension Office because the injuries complained of were not due to his army services. The soldier himself testifies to the incurring of the several disabilities mentioned. Several comrades testify that the soldier was very sick in the Army, and remained sick for some time, and the report of the examining surgeon rates the disability of this soldier as total. He served nearly four years in the Army. He is nearly sixty years of age and is poor, with a wife and family.

We recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2067) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Clark.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Clark, widow of Thomas J. Clark, deceased, late captain Company G, Second New York Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2067) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Clark, submit the following report:

Thomas J. Clark, the husband of complainant, was on the pension-roll as pensioner in his lifetime for gunshot wound in lung, and at his death his widow applied for pension, but the same was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that the soldier's death was not due to his army service.

Dr. John A. Robison testifies in the record that he treated the soldier from April, 1865, to May, 1865, for cancer of the larynx, undoubtedly caused by a bullet wound of the left lung received in the service. He further testifies that, in his opinion, the injury to the lung was the exciting cause of the cancer which caused the soldier's death.

Dr. Franklin Brooks swears substantially to the same state of facts. These facts are further sustained by Dr. N. F. Ruall.

Dr. Walter F. Knull testifies that it does not admit of a doubt that the wound of the lung was the beginning of the cancer which caused the soldier's death.

The committee think there can be no doubt that the soldier's death was due to his army service, and therefore recommend that the name of the widow of this soldier be placed on the pension-roll, and therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARBARA MADDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3046) to grant a pension to Barbara Madden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Barbara Madden, widow of Bartholamew Madden, late private Company D, Eighty-eighth New York Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, to be paid a pension from

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3046) granting a pension to Barbara Madden, submit the following report:

Bartholamew Madden, the soldier and husband of this widow, enlisted June 23, 1864, and was discharged January 18, 1865, and died August 30, 1875.

This claim was rejected on the ground that the complainant could not show by competent testimony that the soldier's death was due to his army service.

Corporal Peter Coyne swears that the soldier was a sound and healthy man and free from disease, and particularly disease of lungs or throat, and continued in good health up to January, 1865; that about that time, while lying in front of Petersburg, Va., by reason of exposure in sleeping upon the damp and frozen ground the soldier contracted a cold, resulting in a severe cough, affecting him very much, and continued to grow worse, having great difficulty in breathing, and became very hoarse up to the time of the battle of Hatcher's River, about February 5, 1865, when he was very feeble and greatly emaciated.

August Rettig swears substantially to the same state of facts.

Patrick Knight and Patrick McGinnelly testify in the record that they knew the soldier for five years before he enlisted, and that at the time of his enlistment he was a sound and healthy man, and that he was wounded in the Army, and they saw the wound, and that they knew he drew a pension for such wound; that they knew when he came out of the Army, and until his death that he was unable to work on account of said wound, and that the soldier did not die of any disease that he inherited, but as a result of his Army service.

Other witnesses testify to similar facts, all tending to show that the soldier died, as the result of his Army service, of lung trouble caused by a cold caught in the Army.

The committee, therefore, are of opinion that the death of this soldier was due to his Army service, and his widow's name should be on the pension-roll. We therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN SHEA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3051) granting a pension to Ellen Shea.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Shea, mother of Michael Shea, late of Company A, Thirtieth Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3051) granting a pension to Ellen Shea, submit the following report:

This pension was granted by both branches of the Fiftyeth Congress, but failed to secure the signature of the President. The following report was made on said bill at that time, which report this committee adopt as their report, and is in the following language:

"The accompanying bill (H. R. 3579) was introduced in the Senate in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and the Committee of the Senate on Pensions made a favorable report thereon, which report your committee adopt as their own, and which report is as follows:

"The claimant filed her application on July 1, 1884, alleging that her son, Michael Shea, had contracted a fever in the Army, which resulted in insanity, and that, having wandered from home, he lost his life by reason of a snow-slide which occurred at Woodstock, Colo., on March 10, 1884.

"Mrs. Ellen Shea is a widow, seventy-six of age, lives at Chicago, and is in poor circumstances.

"The deceased soldier, Michael Shea, enlisted on January 13, 1862, in Company A, Thirtieth Illinois Volunteers. He is reported sick in 1863, and sick on furlough, but the nature of the ailment does not appear. He returned to the service, and was discharged January 20, 1865.

"The physician who treated Michael Shea during his furlough testifies that he had brain fever; that he returned to the Army, but never after had the right use of his mind, and could not support himself.

"The claim was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground that the soldier's death was not a result of the service; but your committee are of the opinion that the cause of death may reasonably be traced to the insanity contracted in the service, and that therefore this claim for a pension may properly be allowed."

"In view of the facts of this case your committee recommend that the bill do pass."

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I object to this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MORROW having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration sundry bills and had directed him to report them back with various recommendations. The committee had also had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5206) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman and recommended that the same be made the special order for next Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal, with the previous question to be considered as ordered, with the right of amendment and debate of fifteen minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report first the bills recommended to the House by the Committee of the Whole without amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I desire just a moment to make a statement. I hold in my hand four bills, one to pension Ellen Shea, one to pension Keziah Randall, one to pension Elizabeth T. Garrett, and one to pension Esther G. Bryant. The persons on account of whose services these bills were introduced served, one of them in the war of 1812, one in the Black Hawk war, and two in the late war. These are bills of a character such as I have been objecting to the passage of.

Now, I make this proposition, to which I ask the unanimous consent of the House: That these four bills may go over, to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal on Friday next and to be discussed in the full House for a reasonable time. Then, if the full House shall decide that such bills as these ought to become law I shall have nothing more to say in regard to them. I have no disposition to waste the time or to consume the time of the House at these Friday night sessions unnecessarily. I simply want an expression from a full House in regard to this class of legislation. My proposition is that these four bills go over; that they be taken up after the reading of the Journal on Friday next; that the previous question shall be considered as ordered, after the close of the debate, upon the passage of each of the bills; that two hours, one hour on each side, be allowed for the discussion of the bills, and that I may control one hour of that time leave to print being given for any gentleman who desires to do so, and with the understanding that I shall have the right to occupy as much of the hour on my side as I desire.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Does the gentleman mean two hours on each of the four bills?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Oh, no; one hour on each side upon the four bills taken together, I to have control of the hour in opposition to the bills and to occupy as much of it as I please.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Thirty minutes on each bill?

A MEMBER. Fifteen minutes on each bill on each side.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I suggest to the gentleman, as he wants to make a test case, that he had better send one bill to the House in that way, because if he takes two hours' debate on each of these four bills—

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. My friend misunderstands me. I do not care to make a fifteen-minute speech upon each one of these bills, but I want to make a single speech upon the whole four of them, and then let a vote be taken after the close of the debate, first upon one and then upon the others in succession. I can discuss the whole four of them at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] asks unanimous consent that the four bills indicated by him shall go over until next Friday after the reading of the Journal; that the previous question shall be considered as ordered after debate upon the bills; that two hours shall be allowed for debate upon all four bills, one hour on each side, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to control the hour in opposition to the bills.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Can we lump these bills in that way? I have no objection to the proposition, but I don't think we can do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that order may be made, and if there is no objection, the order will be made.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. With leave to print remarks in the RECORD if any gentleman desires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BILLS PASSED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the bills recommended favorably to the House from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, and if there be no objection such bills as reported will be deemed to be engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KILGORE. I have no objection to that except that I think it better to consume the remainder of this night's session in passing these bills regularly. I don't like this lumping business. However, I will not object.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

A bill (H. R. 4424) granting a pension to Fannie E. Woodbury;

A bill (H. R. 4423) to grant a pension to Lucinda A. Clark;

A bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey;

A bill (S. 1982) granting a pension to Mrs. Minerva Jane Olive; and

A bill (S. 1983) granting a pension to George B. Smith.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were taken up, the amendments severally concurred in, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4422) to increase the pension of Lucian L. Sanborn;

A bill (H. R. 5626) granting a pension to Hannah Ward;

A bill (H. R. 4811) to pension William G. Hill;

A bill (H. R. 3511) granting a pension to James S. Ferrinn;

A bill (H. R. 1622) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward; and

A bill (H. R. 4882) granting a pension to Barbara Schnappinger.

Mr. O'DONNELL moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were severally passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS POSTPONED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five bills, of which the titles will be read by the Clerk, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, will, without objection, go over until next Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal, the previous question to be considered as ordered on such bills—

Mr. KILGORE. With the right of amendment and fifteen minutes' debate on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to have, however, the opportunity to discuss four of the bills in one speech, not exceeding an hour.

The titles of the bills referred to were read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2051) granting a pension to Ellen Shea;

A bill (H. R. 4132) granting a pension to Esther G. Bryant;

A bill (H. R. 5206) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman;

A bill (H. R. 6166) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Garrett; and

A bill (H. R. 6507) granting a pension to Keziah Randall, Mattapoisett, Mass., widow of Richard Randall, who served in the coast guard, 1812-1815.

There being no objection, the proposed order was made.

MARY A. VAN ETEN.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1041) granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Van Etten, widow of James F. Van Etten, late of Company A, Thirtieth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1041) granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten, submit the following report:
A bill for the relief of this claimant passed both Houses of the Forty-ninth Congress and was vetoed by the President.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of said Congress, as follows:

"The claimant, Mary Ann Van Etten, is the widow of James F. Van Etten, to whom she was married January 9, 1861, at Rochester, Monroe County, New York, by Rev. Israel Foote.

"The husband enlisted and was enrolled on the 14th day of May, 1861, at Elmira, as a corporal in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, for two years. He was subsequently transferred to Company A of the same regiment. At the battle of Gaines's Mills he was wounded and taken prisoner, and confined at Richmond, Va. Subsequently he was paroled at City Point July 19, 1862, and was subsequently treated in hospital, where he was sent as sick and wounded.

"This was in Bellevue Hospital, New York City, whither he was transferred by hospital steamer Vanderbilt, July 24, 1862. From August 16, 1861, to February 28, 1862, he was on detached service at Dry Tortugas. He continued in the service until the end of his term of enlistment, being with his company May 31, 1863, at Rochester, N. Y. On the 16th day of July, 1875, he was accidentally drowned, with a son, then nine years of age, at Braddock's Bay, near his residence, being, as alleged, unable to save himself or son in consequence of rheumatism contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

"It appears that the soldier was a good swimmer. This last-mentioned fact appears by the claimant's application for widow's pension, and also by the affidavits of Charles M. Hanford and Asa W. Chappell, credible witnesses. He left surviving him the claimant, his widow, Esther N. (daughter), born October 17, 1865; Martin A. (son), born October 1, 1869, and Rose V. (daughter), born July 8, 1871.

"On the 28th day of July, 1885, the widow filed an application for a pension as such widow, and in addition to her own sworn application and statement of facts she filed the affidavit of Dr. Lovinus L. Hillman, a well known and reputable physician residing at Greece, Monroe County, New York, who had known the soldier for six or seven years prior to his enlistment, and who swears that the soldier was a sound man before such enlistment, and who treated the soldier subsequent to his discharge for inflammatory rheumatism during the summer of 1861 and at different times during the years subsequently; that in 1874 Dr. Hillman found his rheumatic difficulty complicated with organic disease of the heart.

"Also, the affidavit of Myron H. Andrews, who was a comrade and tent-mate in the service, who testifies to the inflammatory rheumatism and trouble from sickness of the soldier in the service.

"Also, the affidavit of Lieut. James Hutchinson, of his company, who testifies to the soldier's enlistment, participation and being wounded in the battle of Gaines's Mills, June 27, 1862, and that he was mustered out with his company May 13, 1863.

"Also, the affidavit of Joseph P. Cleary, who carried soldier off the field at Gaines's Mills, and was with him a fellow-prisoner, and swears that soldier was sick while in prison and suffering from his wounds.

"The widow's application for pension was rejected on the ground that the origin of death (drowning) was not due to his military service.

"Your committee believe that but for the disabilities of the soldier, contracted, it fairly appears, in the line of duty as a soldier, he would have been able to save himself and son from drowning, inasmuch as it is shown he was a good swimmer.

"The man's record as a soldier is good. This claimant, his widow, is poor and needy. She has dependent children. In our judgment her case is entirely meritorious."

"Your committee are of opinion that the widow's claim for pension is entitled to the consideration of Congress, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK TRAYNOR.

Mr. FLOWER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6078) granting an increase of pension to Frank Traynor.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank Traynor, late of Company F, One hundred and second New York Volunteers, a pension at the rate of $18 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid him, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. TURNER, of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6078) granting an increase of pension to Frank Traynor, submit the following report:

Frank Traynor is a pensioner on account of gunshot wound of right side, at $8 per month. The wound was received at Chancellorsville. The ball also passed through the right arm, and still remains in the body. He suffers much pain from the wound, and, while the motion of the arm is not greatly impaired, the member is weak.

On the night of July 15, 1882, pensioner, living in the third story of a building in this city, the weather being very warm, he, as had been his custom, fixed his bed on the balcony of said story to get the breeze and sleep. About 3 o'clock in the morning the balcony gave away, he falling to the second-story balcony. He grasped the awning post to save himself from the fall to the street, but could not hold on by reason of the weakened condition of the arm and side, and fell, fracturing his other arm. The injury was such as to necessitate amputation of same below elbow joint. The circumstances under which this injury was incurred are fully shown by evidence before your committee.

By reason of the serious disability incurred in service and the subsequent injury, he is now almost entirely disqualified for the performance of manual labor.

Following numerous precedents, your committee believe themselves justified in returning the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLOWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JONATHAN DEAN, SR.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2418) granting a pension to Jonathan Dean, sr.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jonathan Dean, sr., a soldier in the war of 1812, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

SEC. 2. That the said Jonathan Dean, sr., be allowed all arrears of pension due all soldiers of said war of 1812, and that he be paid a pension at the rate of $8 per month, dating from the date of the filing of his application in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the time to which this evening session is limited has expired.

DEPRESSION OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the resolution of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in regard to the depression of agricultural interests be taken up for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. VOORHEES on the 17th instant, as follows:

Whereas the deep and widespread depression and decay of the agricultural interests of the American people, the enormous and appalling amount of mortgage indebtedness on agricultural lands, the total failure of home markets to furnish remunerative prices for farm products, the palpable scarcity and insufficiency of money in circulation in the hands of the people with which to transact the business of the country and effect exchanges of property and labor at fair rates, are circumstances of the most overwhelming importance to the safety and the well-being of the Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the highest duty of Congress in the present crisis to lay aside all discussion and consideration of mere party issues and to give prompt and immediate attention to the preparation and adoption of such measures as are required for the relief of the farmers and other overtaxed and underpaid laborers of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the Republican party was restored to power at the last Presidential election on account of its position upon the tariff. It is pledged to a reduction of the revenues to an amount sufficient only to meet the necessities of the Government, but in such a manner as to insure the welfare of American industries. The issue was squarely made between the protective system and tariff for revenue only; between the Mills bill, which had passed the House and was the embodiment of the theories of Mr. Cleveland and the free-traders—for tariff for revenue only is nothing but free trade—so far as was practicable for the Democratic House, with so many local interests, some of them demanding protection, to embody those theories into a bill, and the Senate bill, which was framed with the view to secure the necessary reduction of the revenue without injury to the industries of the country or abandoning the policy of protection to American labor and American capital.

The people decided for the national policy of protection, that the present tariff policy should be continued, and that whatever revision of the tariff was required should be made by its friends. It only remains for the dominant party in Congress to execute the will of the people and redeem its pledges. This it is proceeding to do with all possible dispatch considering the magnitude and intricacies of the subject, and before the present session of Congress adjourns it is safe to say that some measure not greatly dissimilar to the Senate bill of last session will become a law.

As was to have been expected, the Democratic party has not profited by defeat. The attitude of the two political parties towards the tariff question has not changed. The contest is to be fought over again on the same lines and with the same old arguments used by them in the last Congress and in the Presidential campaign. The Mills bill, or a measure substantially like it, is to be the proposition of the Democratic party, with which the measure of the majority is to be antagonized.

The Democratic policy at the present session of Congress, as it was at the last, is to continue heavy protection to Louisiana sugar and to place wool, lumber, salt, and vegetables and other farm products, and the products of the mines and raw material generally on the free-list.

Having put their hands to the plow in this matter, the Democratic leaders will not turn back. Having been committed by President Cleveland to free trade, there is no retreat. His free-trade message was the Rubicon, which once crossed was crossed forever. Recognizing this the Democratic leaders, aided by the Cobden Club, are making herculean efforts to propagate free-trade theories. Taking advantage of the overproduction of corn and the low price of farm products in the Western States, they are industriously seeking to convince the farmers of those States that the depression of the farming industry is caused by the protective system and to array them against the other industries of the country. Tons of free-trade literature are being circulated among them, and it is hoped and apparently believed by the Democratic leaders that, aided by the discontent which naturally prevails in times of business depression, Republican farmers can be brought to adopt the Democratic theory of the tariff, or at least be induced to try a change.

In accordance with this general policy, the senior Senator from Indiana a few days ago made a speech, intended no doubt to have a wide circulation, embellished with brilliant rhetoric and glittering generalities, in which his imagination was drawn upon, more than facts, to show that the present depressed condition of the farming interests was due to the protective policy, and to endeavor to turn the present discontent to the advantage of the Democratic party.

I do not propose to answer his speech, but in my humble way to attempt to show that the protective tariff has in no degree contributed to the depression, that the present condition of the farmer is far more prosperous than it would have been under a system of tariff for revenue only, more prosperous than it ever has been in this country when the principle of protection was abandoned, and is far better than the condition of the farmer in any free-trade country in the world.

I listened, in entire accord with him, to his eloquent laudation of the farmer. Agriculture in some form is the oldest of the occupations of man, and is still the most important. There are probably more persons engaged directly in farming and dependent upon the earnings of the farmer than are engaged in or dependent upon all the other industries of the country. I hope I shall be credited with equal sincerity with him when I say that all laws, whether State or national, ought to be so framed as to promote the interests of the farmer in common with the interests of all other citizens engaged in honorable and useful occupations, and so as to prevent all combinations, monopolies, and speculations which have a tendency to control the supply of and demand for farm products; that whenever any existing law can be shown to operate unjustly upon any class of citizens I will be as ready to vote for its repeal as he; and that whenever any measure is proposed which in my judgment is calculated to benefit the farmers of this country, without injustice to other equally deserving classes, my voice and my vote will be found in favor of that measure.

Every impulse of my nature is in full sympathy with the men who till the soil and labor with their hands in every useful occupation. Labor is honorable and the source of all wealth. Idleness is a curse to the individual and the community. I first saw the light on a farm and from necessity passed through an experience which has made me familiar with all phases of farm life. But when we come to discuss the remedies proposed for the existing depression of the agricultural interests, the Senator and myself, on some of them, are as far apart as the poles. He would endeavor to array the farmer against all other classes of producers, while I believe that the interests of the farmer are intimately connected with the well of every other producing class, and that the adjustment is so delicate and sensitive that a blow to one injures the whole. If the manufacturers are not prosperous, farming languishes; if farming is not prosperous, manufactures are depressed. In fact, the surest way to destroy the farmer would be to first destroy the manufactures, which would destroy the home market for farm products and drive the operatives to the cultivation of the soil and to competition with the present farming class.

Employment, not cheapness, is the true basis of all national prosperity. The way to make a nation prosperous and the people happy and contented is to give every one an opportunity of being employed. The measure of our prosperity as a nation is the value of the fruits of labor, of the wool we grow, the cattle and horses, the wheat and corn, and other agricultural products we raise, of the articles we manufacture, and of the useful and precious metals we mine. When all our diversified industries are profitably carried on together, when the soil, the mines, and the forests are all laid under contribution to add to our wealth, when the hill-sides, which are not well adapted to cultivation, are profitably devoted to the raising of sheep, when the cattle industry is fairly remunerative, when wheat and corn bring a fair price, when there is a demand for the products of our mills and our factories which keeps them in operation, every one is prosperous; and individual prosperity makes a prosperous whole.

But let the price of wool be low, let there be a partial failure of the wheat crop, or, as now is the case, the corn crop be in excess of the demand, or the factories and mills compelled to shut down, and prosperity is at once checked, other industries suffer, and hard times are threatened. Let no one suppose for a moment that one class or the class interested in one industry is not interested in all the others. All are intimately connected. The destruction of the wool industry and the throwing of several thousand men out of employment would be an injury to every man, woman, and child in the United States. The man thrown out of employment by the destruction of that industry would be obliged to crowd into some other. The lands now profitably used for grazing purposes would many of them be idle and unproductive.

Whatever hurts Maine hurts Texas and what hurts Massachusetts hurts Oregon. The people of the entire Union are interested in the prosperity of every part. Massachusetts manufactures Oregon wool, but to do so she buys the wool and helps to make a home market for it, and she also buys the food products of other States to feed the operatives in her factories and her mills. The Senator from Indiana and the party to which he belongs two years ago thought they could single out and strike down the wool industry; but the people of this country understood that one industry could not be stricken down without injury to all the rest, and they made common cause with the wool-grower.

THE PRICE OF CORN AND WHEAT.

The low prices of corn and wheat in the West are producing a depression of agricultural interests in the principal corn and wheat growing States. The advocates of free trade charge that the fall in prices is caused by the protective system; but fortunately the cause for the decline in prices is neither obscure nor difficult to understand. The price of corn is fixed by the same law that fixes the prices of all other commodities: the law of supply and demand, in connection with the cost of transportation from the States of production to the places of consumption. But the free operation of this law is often interrupted by combinations of middle-men. The States which produce a surplus of corn, and therefore are sources of commercial supply, are Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska. Owing largely to climatic causes, the crop of corn last year was the largest ever produced in the United States and the largest in the rate of yield since 1880. From a table contained in a report of the statistician of the Agricultural Department, issued in March of this year, I extract the following:

The production of corn in 1887 was 1,456,000,000 bushels; in 1888, 1,988,000,000 bushels; in 1889, 2,113,000,000 bushels; showing a very large increase of the crop during the last two years, and that it has now reached the surprising proportions of over 2,000,000,000 bushels.

From the same table I learn that up to March 1 of this year there had been consumed and distributed a greater amount, with one exception, than in any previous year up to the same period. The amount consumed and distributed up to March 1, 1889, of the crop of 1888 and of the surplus of previous years, was 1,201,000,000 bushels, and the amount consumed up to March 1, 1890, of the crop of 1889 and of the surplus of previous years, was 1,443,000,000 bushels.

These figures show that the demand and consumption have not decreased, but that the supply has largely increased and that the present unmarketable surplus and low prices are caused by overproduction, and that alone. The freight rates for the transportation of corn and other farm products are in many cases too high, but the rate of transportation is not the cause of the present low price of corn. When the question is examined it will be found that rates of transportation have been from time to time reduced, and by some transportation lines, notably the Union Pacific, greatly reduced, upon corn to meet the present emergency; but the situation has not improved, as it could not be; the market has been supplied. There is no legitimate demand for the surplus for present consumption, and if bought at all, must be bought by operators who speculate as to the future demand and therefore buy at their own price. The home market is the principal market; and when the production is largely in excess of the demand for home consumption a fall in prices is inevitable.

On a former occasion I discussed in the Senate the cause of the decline in the foreign market of the price of wheat and presented elaborate tables to show the value of our exports and imports, the amount of agricultural products exported, the amount of wheat and flour exported through a series of years, the amount of the production and distribution, the growth of the production of wheat in India, the aggregate importation of wheat and flour in Great Britain and the countries whence imported. The latter tables were taken from the report of General Bonham, consul-general of the United States at Calcutta. Referring to these tables I summed up the matter as follows:

The facts stated in this report fully justify the views of Judge Bonham, that India is to become a formidable competitor with the United States in the wheat markets of Europe, and in my judgment explain the cause of the decline of wheat in Europe in recent years. The table showing the aggregate imports of wheat and flour into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland from the several countries named is especially instructive. It shows that, while the imports into Great Britain, although somewhat fluctuating, have not materially increased since 1881-'82, the imports from Russia have increased from 4,089,308 cents in 1881-'82 to 11,986,350 cents in 1885-'86; the imports from India have increased from 7,337,924 cents in 1881-'82 to 12,101,963 cents in 1885-'86, and that the imports from other countries, not including the United States, have increased from 12,229,230 cents in 1881-'82 to 17,083,501 cents in 1885-'86; while the imports from the United States have decreased from 43,776,662 cents in 1881-'82 to 36,007,187 cents in 1885-'86, and that the export of wheat from India has increased from 299,385 cents in 1887-'88 to 21,060,519 cents or 35,100,865 bushels in 1885-'86, a period of nineteen years. These figures show that we are already engaged in a ruinous competition with Russia and India, which must continue to grow greater as the production of wheat in those countries increases to crowd the American product out of the European markets; and yet the free-traders tell us to let our home markets go, buy our manufactures in England, and raise more wheat.

Protection to industry, by creating a diversity of employment and increasing the number of those who are not engaged in farming, but must depend upon the farmer for the means of subsistence, gives him a steady, remunerative market for breadstuffs and creates a market for crops which can not be profitably exported. The foreign market for our wheat is mainly created by England, and is growing every year more uncertain and unsatisfactory. The amount of our corn and wheat required by England depends in the first place upon the crops of Europe, which usually supply from two-thirds to three-fourths of what is needed; then upon the yield in Russia and India; so that the American farmer first takes the chances of his own harvest, and then of a scarcity in Europe, and in late years the further chance of having the price of wheat fixed by the competition of Russian and Indian wheat. And still free-traders assert that the true principle is to buy where you can buy the cheapest, and say that, if our manufacturing industries can not successfully compete with cheap capital, organized industries, and pauper labor of England, our people should turn their attention to something else—that is, to farming—destroy our home markets, and lead our farmers to depend upon a foreign market for the sale of their surplus products.

They propose that we shall increase our exports to pay for our increased imports, and in endeavoring to do so that our farmers shall enter the field in competition with the miserable ryots of India, who live on a few cents a day. If it were proposed to import into the United States several millions of the Indian ryots or of Chinese for agricultural laborers, to enable us to compete with India in producing wheat, every white laborer in the United States could see that American labor was threatened. How does the case differ when it is proposed to drive several millions of American laborers from the manufactures into agriculture and then to force them into competition with the Indian ryots by increasing our surplus wheat crop, which we will be compelled to get rid of by underselling Indian wheat?

In the report of the statistician of the Agricultural Department, already referred to, the cause of the present depression of agriculture is admirably stated. Mr. Dodge shows that the low price of corn and wheat is due to overproduction; that the farmers of this country can not successfully compete with the wheat-growers of India, Russia, and other countries; that other industries should be encouraged and maintained in order to create a home market for farm products and employment for our people, and that farmers should engage in diversified farming and produce all the products we now import. He says:

AGRICULTURAL DEPRESSION AND ITS CAUSES.

There is almost universal complaint among farmers of all nations of the prevalence of low prices. The agricultural depression of Great Britain has probably been more severe than that of any other nation. A potent cause in this case is the competition from all parts of the world, unrelieved by any taxation of imports. France and Germany are somewhat disturbed by similar complaints of unremunerative rural industry. Italy has also had occasion to make official investigation of the causes of agricultural depression. Other countries are vocal with similar cries of dissatisfaction with the proceeds of agricultural labor. So the trouble appears to be general in monarchies and republics, whether the monetary circulation is gold or silver or paper, and under the influence of various and diverse economic systems.

Not all countries are in the same depths of distress. In ours farmers and farm laborers are doubtless better fed and clothed, able to maintain a higher style of living, and enjoy more of the benefits of civilization and culture than those of any other country. It may be said with absolute truth that in thirty years the scale of living has advanced immensely in this country, not equally in all sections, but manifestly everywhere. There is a tendency to extravagance in town life that has been imitated in rural circles, and the natural ambition for progress and precedence, when generally aroused, will express itself in dissatisfaction with prevailing conditions and a determination to overpower all obstacles to advancement. This is a hopeful sign. It is an indication of conscious dignity. It is a prophecy of progress.

While, therefore, our own country feels the effect of agricultural depression less than almost any other in the world, the reduction in prices of most staples, and in domestic animals and their products, forces a disagreeable comparison with agricultural values at their highest, compels reduced expenditure to keep outgo subordinate to income, increases the number of unfortunates who can not make "both ends meet," and reduces the profits of the enterprising and skillful who are still able to strike a balance in their favor. Retrenchment is not an agreeable alternative, and is therefore delayed until its compulsion is imperative and perhaps destructive. "The times" are universally regarded as "hard" in comparison with more prosperous eras of the past.

It matters not that the prices of implements, utensils, and fabrics, of goods desired by the farmer, have been reduced proportionally: his interest account, if he has one, is unredressed, and his mortgage is a greater burden to lift. His sighs for the good old days of high prices, though they may have been war or famine prices, necessarily temporary, and though they may have been the source of extravagant views, unnecessary expenditure, and the foundation of his present indebtedness. He naturally resents and deplores low valuation of farm products. What are the causes of low prices? They may be various, but the prime cause is the operation of the inexorable law of supply and demand. Abundance leads inevitably to low prices; scarcity, to high prices. With either there is fluctuation, a see-saw of prices which increases cost and reduces profit. Medium and uniform values are therefore best for the farmer.

There has been an increase of production in this country even more rapid than the increment of population. America has long been the synonym of plethora. Her people probably consume more than those of any other nation and have a larger surplus for foreign needs. Immigration has been heavy and unrestricted; railroad building has been stimulated until an empire of new and productive lands have been opened; and these lands have been given of liberal settlement to native or foreign birth. Speculation first, and profitable utilization afterwards, have been the motive for settlement and development which have astonished the world and caused overproduction and low prices. The following statement shows the increase in thirty years in certain products of the farm, as reported by the census:

Corn.....bushels.....	592,071,104	838,792,742	760,944,549	1,754,381,076
Wheat.....do.....	100,485,944	173,104,924	287,745,626	459,181,187
Oats.....do.....	146,584,179	172,643,185	282,107,157	407,884,999
Potatoes.....do.....	65,797,899	111,148,867	143,337,473	160,488,839
Cotton.....bales.....	2,469,083	5,387,052	8,011,996	5,785,489
Hay.....tons.....	13,838,642	19,083,896	27,316,948	35,150,711

If we extend the comparison to the present date, we find that the corn crop exceeds 2,000,000,000 bushels, wheat approximates 500,000,000, oats exceed 700,000,000, and hay and potatoes have increased in similar proportion. While the product may be three or four times as large, the population is less than three times as much, though the proportion of workers engaged in agriculture was larger than now.

During the forty years from 1850 to the present time the cotton product increased from a little over 2,000,000 bales to more than 7,000,000 bales. Cattle have also increased very rapidly; cows from between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 to about 16,000,000; other cattle from scarcely 12,000,000 to more than 36,000,000. While sheep have doubled in number, the wool production has quadrupled. While the milk cows are almost three times as many, their average rate of yield of milk has probably doubled. The improvement of other cattle, through breeding and feeding, has reduced the time required for maturity and increased the weight of carcasses to such an extent that the amount of beef produced annually in proportion to numbers of animals kept is immensely increased. Relative numbers, in comparison with the past, in all kinds of domestic animals, have far less significance than improvement in weight and quality, in thriftiness and early maturity.

It is difficult to force a market abroad for a surplus of any product. Every nation is seeking to produce its own food, and as far as possible its raw materials.

for extension in all forms of industrial production. The instinct of self-preservation compels the adoption of such a policy. This furnishes the motive for the corn laws of France and Germany and other continental countries, and the laws of European nations prohibiting the introduction of our pork products. We can not sell our crops abroad, as a rule, except to fill the gaps in supply that are made by bad seasons or other results of the inevitable or inexorable.

In wheat overproduction has destroyed the grower's profit. Wheat-growing has become a philanthropic mission for supplying cheap bread to Great Britain and encouraging her manufacturers to keep wages on a low plane. The North-western missionaries are still diligently sowing their seed and floating their bread across the waters, and mourning that the profits do not return to them after many days of weary transportation. The area of the crop of 1889 included about 10,000,000 acres more than the home consumption of the year will require; and the price in Liverpool has of late been the lowest for a century.

We can not force foreigners to buy our bread. There has been a mass of ineffable nonsense regarding "the markets of the world" for wheat. Less than a fourth of the people of the world eat wheat. Half of the people of Europe scarcely know its taste, while few of the nations of Asia and Africa have any knowledge of it. Elsewhere the statistician has thus presented the limitations of our distribution of the wheat surplus:

"South America is now no market for flour, as more wheat is grown there than is required for domestic consumption, and an annually enlarging outlet for wheat is now sought in the distribution of the surplus. Australasia makes more than a home supply. India has a surplus of 10 to 15 per cent. Eastern Europe always has wheat to sell, leaving only Western Europe to supplement its nearly full garner with the contributions of all other countries, those of Europe included. Of the average 4 bushels consumed by each inhabitant of Europe only a half bushel comes from other continents, and this is practically the measure of the market for the wheat surplus of the world, a market which neither reciprocity nor the persuasion of any international comity can enlarge. Nothing but war, famine, or pestilence, nothing but an act of God or a change of crop distribution utterly at variance with long-settled policy and practical sense can swell to sudden importance the demand for wheat and flour that will relieve prevailing stagnation and advance prices."

The production of meat has also advanced faster than population. In 1880 the cattle of all kinds were returned as 39,675,533, and the numbers as now estimated, on farms and ranches, are 52,801,907, or 33 per cent. more. Excluding cows, the increase of other cattle, which includes the heaves, is equivalent to about 40 per cent. Then heaves are brought to maturity more rapidly than formerly, and more meat is made in proportion to numbers, so that the beef supply is greater than in 1880 in proportion to population. The ratio of supply has been very greatly increased since 1850. Our export of beef has grown up in the past thirteen years, and the export of cattle has not only increased, but its character has changed from the shipment of Texas or Florida long-horns to Cuba to the export of fat heaves to Europe, one of which commands the price of five of the original style of Gulf coast cattle. This difference represents not precisely the meat-making capacity of the cattle of 1850 and 1890 respectively, but it suggests the wide disparity between the ratio of meat to numbers of cattle at the two dates.

It is futile to attempt to defy the law of supply and demand. So long as farmers insist on growing only the bread grains, cotton, tobacco, and cattle, and to neglect other products which are needed, which we import at a cost of more than $200,000,000 annually, just so long will the lamentation over low prices continue. Diversification is essential to agricultural salvation. There are writers and speakers who are doing incalculable injury by their influence in repression of any tendency to a wider range of rural production, encouraging idleness and idleness, paralyzing enterprise, intensifying rural inertia, and encouraging dependence on foreign production, and the draining of the resources of the country to foreign lands. They appear to deprecate any effort towards independence or the cultivation of self-reliance, the stimulation of invention, the acquisition of manual skill, or the development of rural taste. Their advice points in the direction of aimless poverty and practical serfdom.

The agricultural exports of the United States during the past year amounted to about $530,000,000 at the seaports, or about $400,000,000 on the farms. The agricultural imports amounted to over $348,000,000 at ports of shipment, and fully $600,000,000 with freights and commissions added, without further allowance for undervaluation. Thus it takes most of our agricultural exports to pay for agricultural imports. These imports are largely food and fibers. The heavier items for 1888-89 were as follows:

Animals and their products, except wool.....	40,419,502
Fibers, animal and vegetable.....	59,453,936
Fruits and nuts.....	18,746,417
Barley and other cereals.....	8,971,722
Tobacco, leaf.....	10,868,226
Wines.....	7,706,772
Total.....	239,464,443

Most of this importation should be produced here, and many minor products not named; in fact, there is little on the list, except tea and coffee, that should be imported. There are many plants yielding fruits, dyes, medicines, and other products useful in the arts or for food that could be profitably grown, after suitable experiment, for the supply of a demand already existing or to be created, and utilizing rural labor and increasing the wealth of the country.

There may be minor causes of depression which have not been considered, but they are impotent and unimportant in comparison with those outlined. The main difficulty is, there is overproduction of a few staples and quite too limited a list of rural products. There is too much hog and hominy, and a narrow range of delicacies that are so eagerly sought by the buyer and so profitable to the producer. There is too much rural labor unemployed, and too much mechanical and manufacturing labor idle in both cases for lack of sufficient variety, and because $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 are spent in foreign countries for products that could better be made here. It is useless, it is foolish, to say that we can not sell our surplus unless we buy our food and clothing abroad.

We did sell last year to a single country to the amount of $201,000,000 more than we bought of that country, and a similar disproportion exists every year. As we become more independent, more self-sustaining, producing all substantial of life, wealth will more abound and be more equally distributed under the industrial than under the commercial idea; and while imports will still be heavy, they will be mainly for luxuries and superfluities of the rich, and will not reduce the resources or limit the comforts of the people.

In a primitive country the first business of farmers is to produce food, to cater to the wants of the stomach; if they go no further, as population advances and its wants increase with the progress of culture and civilization, and so neglect to supply the "raw materials" for the uses of the industrial arts, their country will forever remain primitive and poor. This country can not claim exemption from the inexorable rule. Cotton, by the invention of the gin, and the existence of a suitable soil in the South, became the salvation of its agriculture, and then threatened its existence by its refusal to tolerate other raw materials for other arts. The cotton crop is valuable and will represent a larger value, yet it would not suffice to board the people of the South at first-class hotels for a week. A score of other products should further enrich her agriculture to relieve existing depression. All the worsted wools and all the carpet wools that can be woven in the country can readily be produced in the South. Only the invention of an effective decorticator is required to make ramie a great industry, supplementing rather than rivaling cotton; and jute and many native and foreign fibers should swell the list of raw materials.

And there should be no more need of going to Italy or Japan for raw silk than there is to India for raw cotton. Further, there should be just as little need of going to Cuba for sugar. Nine-tenths (at least) of all the raw materials required for textile, metallic, mechanical, chemical, oleaginous, or other manufacture can be produced primarily by our farmers, diverting their labor to profitable channels, and swelling the value of their products, steadying the prices of the food staples, and insuring prosperity and comfort to all. No other panacea will cure hard times: a profitable outlet, by diversification and extension, for constantly augmenting rural labor, can alone make rural industry profitable. If the policy of going abroad for all fibers except cotton shall be but into permanent practice, and for all sugar and fruits, barley and oil seeds, to be paid for in corn and wheat and cotton, which are already crowded into foreign markets to the last pound and bushel, there will be no necessity for a "single tax" to make the farmer's land valueless, and no need of account-books or pocket-books, and little demand for books of any kind.

And yet there is gross ignorance abroad of the extent of these limitations of our agriculture and of the means of recuperation. Many of our farmers are delaying the emancipation of rural industry, and seeking to import cordage to bind upon their backs still closer their present burdens. Instead of enlarging the range of profitable production, they are seeking to restrict it. The wheat-growers insist upon going to the antipodes for binder-twine, while a million acres of flax fiber is wasted in adjoining fields, and when they could produce hemp enough within six months to bind the wheat of the world. The cotton-growers want to go to India for jute, which will grow in their cotton fields as readily as weeds. If we will not produce the twine to bind our sheaves or the jute or hemp or flax to cover our bales, we shall have no right to complain of 50 cents per bushel for the one or 5 cents per pound for the other.

During the last ten years more than two million workers in agriculture, armed with improved implements, have been added to the seven millions that were making corn and wheat and cotton; and shall they still insist on the same limited range of effort, walk in the same furrows their fathers turned, and seek to live and die in the same overdone and profitless routine? If so, agricultural depression will become chronic and intensified to a degree unknown at present. Shall farmers hug the chains of their dependence, limit the range of their industry, refuse to strike out into new paths, and sink into comparative idleness and poverty? There are millions of them too intelligent and enterprising and ambitious to co-operate in any such scheme of self-degradation.

Little can be added to this admirable statement of the case. If Mr. Dodge's facts are correct and his conclusions well drawn, it follows that instead of removing duties upon imports of labor products into the United States, the duties should be maintained in order to stimulate every industry which gives employment to labor and creates a demand at home for farm products. Instead of admitting into this country free of duty wool and other farm products we should maintain the present duty, and in some cases the duties should be increased so as to make them practically prohibitory.

In times of business depression, from whatever cause produced, it is natural to blame the laws for the existing condition. The laws may or may not be to blame. The price of every commodity is determined by supply and demand. There is no way in any industry to restrict production to the probable demand, where so many are engaged as are employed in farming, and as a consequence the supply must vary, even if the demand remains reasonably stable. So with other productions. It follows that a business, during the most prosperous condition of the country and under the best possible laws, can not at all times be equally profitable. The farmer will have his good and his bad years. One year the manufacturer will be able to operate his factory at a profit; another year he must operate it at a loss or not at all.

What can Congress do now to aid the farmers? The Senator from Indiana and those who think like him say, "Remove the duties which keep out foreign goods, and let the farmer obtain them at the foreign prices." I and all who believe general employment necessary to national prosperity say, "Continue the protective system so as to maintain existing industries, bring others into existence, build up and strengthen the home market so as to consume at home more farm products, and bring the consumer and producer together, and thus save the cost of transportation." I say also, increase the duties upon all the farm products that are imported into the United States, to enable our farmers as far as possible to produce them at home.

If we examine the last published reports of our imports and exports we shall find that an enormous sum is paid to foreign countries for articles of food, every particle of which should be produced in this country. Why is it necessary to import into this country $2,500,000 worth of vegetables, including cabbage, from Holland, 317,156 bushels of potatoes from Scotland, 1,441,466 bushels of potatoes and 608,432 bushels of beans and peas from Canada and Nova Scotia? Why is it necessary to import over $1,000,000 worth of hay and nearly $8,000,000 worth of breadstuffs, and over 16,000,000 dozen eggs, some of which came from Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] says, some of them from Italy?

I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping from a Canada paper, or at least what purports to be a telegram or letter from Ottawa, Ontario, in which is stated the amount of certain articles imported into Canada from the United States free of duty, the amount of dutiable articles, and the amount of similar articles exported from Canada into the United States. I will submit the table, simply saying that I understand the first two columns represent the value of the articles which are imported into Canada, and the last column represents the articles and the value thereof exported from Canada to the United States.

Mr. President, I am glad to know that the dominant party in Congress, at least in the other House, are disposed to take the same view of the question of duties upon agricultural products which I have just indicated.

I hold in my hand an article clipped from yesterday morning's Washington Post, with the heading, "A protection for the Grangers." As the newspapers are supposed to know everything, I presume it to be correct, and from the best information I can obtain I believe it to be so. The article is as follows:

TRUSTS.

There is another way in which the producer may be benefited by legislation, and that is by enacting and executing laws to prevent gambling and speculation in the products of labor. I am sorry to say that the power of Congress is limited to deal with this matter; but the power of the States is ample and should be exercised.

Labor is the source of all wealth. No other means of producing wealth have ever been or ever will be found. It must be wrung from the soil by patient toil; it must be brought up from mines deep in the earth by the labor of man; it must be coined from the forest by the axman and the millman; it must be wrought out from raw materials by the skill, the patience, and the labor of human operatives. The curse of this and all other communities to-day is that so many persons are trying to escape this Heaven-ordained law, and to secure something for nothing, wealth without labor.

This is at the bottom of every wild scheme to create wealth without labor and to create its representative (money) by legislation alone, to have the Government do by legislation for the citizen what he can only do for himself by labor. This is at the bottom of all gambling contrivances, speculative combinations, all the attempts to control the products of the mills, factories, and farms, and to fix the prices for both consumer and producer. This fever of speculation grows hotter during times of business depression when capital is unemployed. Combinations, monopolies, speculators, may indeed acquire wealth, but it is wealth that has been produced by labor. I repeat, labor only can produce wealth, and all schemes, whether of legislation or of speculation, to produce it otherwise will fail. The strong arm of the law should be interposed to protect the producers and consumers of the country from being plundered by such organizations.

The advocates of free trade tell us that trusts and combinations to control products and prices are fostered by the tariff. But every one knows that some of the most gigantic and oppressive trusts in this country were formed to deal in articles of purely domestic manufacture, the prices of which are not affected in the least by the tariff; that others are formed to deal in articles which are imported free; and others still are formed to deal in articles which are both imported and produced in this country. The truth is that the tariff has nothing whatever to do with the question of trusts.

FARM MORTGAGES.

A great deal has been said on this floor and elsewhere about farm mortgages, and it appears to be thought by some that if the number of farm mortgages is large in any State or Territory it indicates an unprosperous condition of the farmer. But nothing is further from the truth. Nothing can be absolutely predicated as to the prosperity or lack of prosperity of the farmers of a community from the existence or non-existence of farm mortgages. The inference to be drawn from the number of mortgages in an old, settled country, like one of the New England States, might be very different from the inference to be drawn from the same thing in a newer community. In a new State a large number of farm mortgages may indicate great prosperity, may represent cultivated and productive farms and comfortable homes, where, without the ability to borrow, there would have been a waste and unproductive area. They may have been the means by which day laborers on the farm have been converted into prosperous farmers on their own account. In many cases they represent additional lands, purchased on credit, which are a source of increased prosperity, and so a blessing.

In the State I have the honor in part to represent I can remember when, in the beautiful and fertile Willamette Valley, most of the original claimants still owned and occupied their donation claims of 640 acres free from mortgage and when many of the claims did not even furnish the agricultural productions necessary for the support of their families. But another generation grew up. Enterprising young men, without means, from nearly every State of the Union, went to that State, bought lands on credit, gave mortgages for the purchase price, began to raise from 40 to 60 bushels of wheat to the acre, and in probably forty-nine cases out of fifty have paid off the mortgages and have become wealthy and prosperous farmers.

Mortgages are only necessarily an indication of a want of prosperity of the farming class when they represent indebtedness for living expenses or losses in conducting business; and such cases are as likely to be the result of extravagance and bad management as poor crops and low prices. I repeat, the statements which we hear from time to time in this Chamber and published in the free-trade press, as to the number and amount of farm mortgages, may as well be taken as evidence of prosperity as of the reverse.

UNEQUAL DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] dwelt at length upon the unequal distribution of wealth in this country. There is, it is true, a great inequality in the distribution of wealth. This inequality has naturally increased with the growth of the country, the division of labor, and the multiplication of large establishments to conduct every kind of business. But it is produced by causes largely beyond the control of legislation. It will continue while the world endures, for some men will always be industrious, economical, and acquisitive, while others will be indolent, extravagant, and wasteful. Some will possess the ability to make and keep money, while others will have the capacity only for spending it. Some will be enterprising and successful, while others will fail in every undertaking. Fathers will continue to acquire fortunes to be squandered by their sons. If the wealth of the world were to be equally distributed to-day, within five years there would be larger fortunes and more paupers than ever before in the world's history.

Nor do I think there is as much difference between the prosperity of the farmers and of those engaged in other industries as the free-trader would have the farmer believe. In this country every occupation is open to all. A man may obtain a farm from the public domain, by living on it, and it requires but a comparatively small capital to work it. If a farmer believes that he can do better at some other occupation there is nothing to prevent him from entering it. Where there is such freedom for selection of occupation the tendency must constantly be for those engaged in the less profitable to seek the more remunerative employments; and it would appear that if the profits of a farmer are not as large as the profits of those engaged in other occupations there must be some other compensating advantages to induce him to continue his calling.

It is no test of the merits of the protective system that under it, during a season of depression and overproduction, the farmer is not prosperous. The real tests are his condition during periods when the protective policy has prevailed as compared with his condition during periods when the policy of a tariff for revenue only has been tried, and his condition in this country during periods of protection as compared with the condition of farmers in countries where free trade prevails. I have not time to enter into details in contrasting the present condition of the farmer in this country with his condition prior to tariff legislation under a Republican administration. Besides, I have something to present, to show his condition as compared with that of the farmers of free-trade countries, quite as important and not so generally understood.

Suffice it to say, in a word, that the condition of the farmers of the United States to-day, notwithstanding the depressed condition of agriculture, is immeasurably better than before the war. I think there is no doubt that in proportion to their numbers there are fewer mortgages upon their farms. Their houses are homes of luxury compared with the farm-houses of that period. The log cabins and the cramped and inconvenient farm-houses, the kitchen fire-places, the bare floors, the rough walls, the home-made furniture, the cupboard of rough shelves, which largely prevailed within my own recollection, have been supplanted by modern cottages, containing the conveniences of life, and the farmers' tables are loaded with food that was then considered luxuries. The appliances for cultivation, the tools for plowing, sowing, reaping, and thrashing, and the facilities for marketing have all been improved. The farmer, as a rule, works fewer hours, and his children do not go to the field as so tender an age. The hardest portions of his work, once done by hand, are now accomplished by machinery. His children are better clothed and better educated. In short, in every way the farmer of to-day, even if his farm is mortgaged, lives better than the man who held the mortgage did in the ante bellum days.

What does our experience as a nation during the century of our existence show as to the effect of a protective policy upon the farmer and other productive interests of the country? As I read our history in connection with the tariff it shows that absolutely all the prosperity of the farmers of this country, as well as all the prosperity we have enjoyed as a nation, has been enjoyed when the protective policy has prevailed, and that the abandonment of that policy in whole or in part has always caused business depression, scarcity of employment, low wages, and hard times, and that at such times the farmer has always suffered most.

I have not time upon this occasion to review the history of tariff legislation in this country, but I will briefly refer to a few of the salient points of that history.

One of the strongest reasons which, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, were urged in favor of a stronger government was that the power to regulate commerce, to impose duties upon imports for the protection of manufactures, was necessary to revive and make prosperous our languishing industries. The preamble of the first tariff act, signed by President Washington, recited that the imposition of duties was necessary for the encouragement and protection of manufactures. Until 1816 the duties levied were not sufficient to afford adequate protection to American industries, but under the tariff acts of 1816, 1824, and 1828 more ample protection was given, and the country entered upon a career of unexampled prosperity; every industry prospered and the Treasury was full.

This policy was stricken down, at the demand of the South, by the act of 1832, which provided for a gradual reduction of duties, and which as gradually brought on a crisis which culminated in 1837 in the greatest commercial crash the country ever witnessed. The suffering, low wages, and low prices produced a political revolution, and the Whig party came into power in 1840 pledged to re-enact a protective system, a promise it redeemed in 1842. Again the country began to recover from its business prostration and to prosper.

But under the promise—at least in Pennsylvania—to maintain the tariff of 1842, the Democratic party carried the Presidential election of 1844, and again struck down the protective-tariff system and checked the prosperity of the country. The great commercial crisis of 1857 was a legitimate result of the Democratic tariff policy.

The Republican party came into power in 1861, and the protective policy came to the front. I need not describe the wonderful prosperity of this country under the policy adopted and maintained by the Republican party. It has been without a parallel in the history of the world. Our growth in wealth, in population, in resources, has been constant and rapid, resulting in the improved condition of every class of our citizens.

HOW DOES THE CONDITION OF THE AMERICAN FARMER COMPARE WITH THE CONDITION OF THE FARMER IN FREE-TRADE COUNTRIES?

It did not occur to the Senator from Indiana, when he was painting the condition of the poor and the depression of the farming interests in contrast with the luxury and splendor of the rich and advocating tariff for revenue only as a remedy for this inequality, to tell us what had been the effect of free trade where it had been tried; whether it had there secured employment for the laboring classes and filled their homes with comfort.

England is the great free-trade country, and the Senator would have done better to tell us, in his splendid oratory, of the blessings which free trade had conferred on the laborer and the poor there, rather than to draw on his imagination for the blessings tariff for revenue only would confer upon the same classes here; before he charged the present depression of the farming industries in this country to the protective system, it would have been instructive and would have helped to arrive at correct conclusions to consider how free-trade has affected the farmer in England and her dependencies.

For forty years the tariff-for-revenue-only policy has been tried in England, and during the whole period the condition of the laboring classes has been growing comparatively worse. If the system has benefited any class it has been the rich. It has promoted the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few and prevented its distribution among the many. The wealth of the favored classes has been wrung by the employers of labor from the labor of the poor, and has, in turn, been wrung from them by the bankers, brokers, and financiers. It has promoted the interests of four millions of capitalists at the expense of thirty millions of workers.

In the present condition of England we have an object-lesson we would do well to study. On one side, four millions of capitalists, titled aristocracy, with wide country seats devoted to parks and game preserves; with magnificent baronial castles filled with costly works of art; stables filled with horses which have never been used in any useful or profitable employment, and are better cared for every day than the thirty millions of human beings who are ground into the earth to supply all this magnificence; bankers who go on from day to day adding bond to bond and stock to stock, who loan their millions to kings and control kingdoms by their wealth; four millions who live in luxury such as no similar number of men in any other country in ancient or modern times ever lived, squandering often in vice the gains wrung from labor under the unequal and unnatural industrial system of Great Britain.

If my friend from Indiana had chosen to picture their great wealth, their baronial castles, their festive boards, and their splendid equipages, their extravagances and their vices, what a field it would have been for his rhetoric. But let us turn to the other side of the picture.

Thirty millions of people, millions of whom were once prosperous farmers, small traders, employers of labor, well-to-do merchants, and day-laborers, under the system which placed their labor in competition with the labor of the world, have been growing poorer and poorer, and their condition has gone from bad to worse. The harvest of the system is thirty millions out of thirty-four millions of people who dwell in poverty and starvation and rags. There are among them one million of paupers; millions who are half clothed; millions out of employment, while fourteen millions find employment for but a portion of the time only, and work for starvation wages at that.

If my friend from Indiana had wanted examples of business depression, poverty, squalor, and wretchedness from which to draw conclusions as to the relative merits of the American system of protection and the British system of free trade, he could have found them in free-trade England, and if he had wanted an illustration of what Great Britain would make this country if she had the power to force her economic theories upon us, he could have found it in Ireland. Does England advocate free trade for the United States from unselfish motives? Do her rich manufacturers maintain agents and circulate their free-trade literature in this country for our good? No; England would like to monopolize the workshops of the world and make the people of all other nations hewers of wood and drawers of water.

All remember how, when President Cleveland sent his free-trade message to Congress and the Mills bill was reported in the House, the whole press of England and Scotland teemed day after day and week after week with eulogies of President Cleveland; how they heralded the message as in the interest of free trade; how they predicted prosperity for their depressed and languishing industries if the Cleveland policy should prevail in the United States. It is for her own interest, or rather, I should say, in the interest of the governing classes, that she advocates free trade. It is with the hope of breaking down the manufacturing and commercial industries of other nations and promoting her own.

In a speech which I made in the Senate on the 12th of March, 1888, I had a passage read from the speech of an English free-trader concerning the controversy between the United States and Great Britain over the Oregon Territory. My apology for repeating it, if one is needed, is its peculiar interest for the people of the Northwest. I then said:

SHALL ENGLAND CONQUER THE OREGON TERRITORY BY FREE TRADE?

The present conspiracy against the material interests of the Pacific coast reminds me of the remarkable utterances of an English statesman, Mr. Fox, nearly forty-three years ago, at Covent Garden Theater, London, April 9, 1845, in discussing the Oregon controversy, during President Polk's administration, when the rallying cry for political parties was "54° 40' or fight." I ask the Secretary to read this remarkable prediction of Mr. Fox.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HISCOCK in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Quarrel about this? Why, we might just as well be invited by Peel and Polk to fight about mountains in the moon.

"But let men have something to do with it; let those who have found no preferable home go there and see what effect they can produce upon the best portions of the soil; as their numbers increase and their exertions tell it will soon become more valuable. And when man has occupied it, when industry has driven its car of peaceful conquest around the borders of that vast land, when towns have arisen and cities appeared with their thronging numbers, when the Rocky Mountains are tunneled and rail and canal have united the Atlantic and Pacific, when the waters of the Columbia swarm with steam-boats, why, then will be the time to talk of the Oregon territory; then, without a regiment or line-of-battle ship, without bombarding any town whatever, free trade will conquer the Oregon territory for us, and will conquer the United States for us also as far as it is desirable either for us or for them that there should be any conquest whatever in the case. Free trade will establish there all the insignia of conquest. When their products come here, and those of our industry return, there will be scarcely a laborer upon the pine forest that he is clearing but will wear upon his back, to his very shirt, the livery of Manchester. The knife with which he carves his game will have the mark of Sheffield upon its blade as a testimony of our supremacy. Every handkerchief waved upon the banks of the Missouri will be the waving of an English banner from Spitalfields. Throughout the country there will be marks of our skill and greatness, and tribute paid for us received not by warriors or governors, not coming directly into the national treasury, but flowing into the pockets of the industrious and toiling poor, refreshing trade and enriching those who pursue it, giving them an imperial heritage beyond the wide Atlantic. Why, they will be conquered, for they will work for us; and what can the conquered do more for their masters? They will grow corn for us, they will grind it, and send us the flour; they will fatten pigs for us upon the peaches of their large wooded grounds; they will send us whatever they can produce that we want, and without asking us to put our hand in our pocket in order, by taxation, to pay a governor there for quarreling with their representatives or soldiery to bayonet their multitudes. There is nothing upon earth worthier the name of empire than this; this is a nobler kind of dominion, less degrading both for the one party and for the other, less debasing than any sovereignty that was ever won by armies, and, being so won, reluctantly swayed by scepters."

Mr. DOLPH. This passage has heretofore appeared to be a piece of brilliant oratory, the offspring of a vivid imagination. It now, in view of the recommendations of a Democratic administration and the action of a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, seems almost like the voice of prophecy, and it begins to look as if the Cobden Club, re-enforced by the Administration, is about to succeed in conquering Oregon, destroying her wool interest, and bringing to pass the event predicted by Fox, when there will be scarcely a laborer in Oregon, not only in the pine forests that he is clearing, but in the valleys and on the hill-sides he is tilling, but will wear on his back to his very shirt the costly livery of Manchester, and that to be paid for in wheat at 60 cents per bushel laid down in Liverpool.

Mr. President, the more the boasted prosperity of England under free trade is examined the clearer will it appear to be the prosperity of the privileged classes, a prosperity measured by the increasing fortunes of her millionaires, by the bank accounts of the rich, by the luxuries which inherited fortunes and fortunes wrung from the laboring classes insure to them. Her system of political economy has destroyed agriculture, has driven many important industries from the country, has thrown a large proportion of her population out of employment and driven them to more prosperous countries. Not only is the prosperity of 4,000,000 of her population secured at the expense of the other 30,000,000, but at the expense of her dependencies wherever they have not rebelled against the system, and at the expense of other and weaker nations wherever she could succeed by diplomacy or force in destroying their industrial interests to build up her own.

But as even the rich can not long prosper when labor is unemployed, when agriculture is depressed, when other industries are paralyzed, it was inevitable that a time should come when the depression caused by free trade should become universal. To-day the English capitalist finds it difficult to employ his capital in England and foresees that there is bound soon to be a breaking up of the present system, that a day of reckoning is at hand, and he is casting about for some safe and profitable field for investment. Strange as it may appear, free-trade English capitalists are investing their surplus millions in this country, where labor is protected against the cheap labor and cheap-labor products of England. Millions of dollars of British capital, which, under a system of political economy that would foster industries and give employment to home labor, would be invested in England, are being invested in the United States. English capitalists with free trade drove English artisans and English laborers to protected America, and were themselves driven there to find employment for their capital.

Every great industry in the United States which has been built up by the maintenance of the American system of protection, and which has given employment to American citizens in our towns and cities, and thus created a home market for the products of the farm, is to-day being examined by agents of English capitalists with a view of being purchased by English syndicates. Several important industries of the United States within the past year have been transferred to British owners. I saw a statement not long since—I know not what foundation there may be for it—that a syndicate of English capitalists were negotiating for the purchase of the salmon canneries on the Columbia River with a view of controlling the cannery business in Washington and Oregon. All this shows that at last free trade, by destroying many industries of England, has, in its depressing effects, reached the men who have heretofore been benefited by it, and is driving them for the employment of their capital out of Great Britain, as it has heretofore driven millions of artisans and laborers from England and Ireland to find employment elsewhere for their labor.

THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL.

The Senator from Indiana predicted that the handwriting is on the wall foreshadowing the downfall of the protective system. On the contrary, let me tell him that the decree is already written in the history of the near future for the abandonment by Great Britain of her nonsensical and suicidal economic system, and that with that will fall the whole fabric of free trade, which is to-day only supported by England and her Crown colonies, which have no power to impose duties for their own protection. To prove that I have not overdrawn the picture of the condition of England under free trade, I will quote from an English writer whose burning and eloquent words will show that he possesses the requisite knowledge and ability to enable him to speak with certainty as to facts and to draw correct conclusions from them. He is not one of the thirty million reduced to poverty and pauperism by free trade; he belongs to the aristocratic four million. But his eyes have been opened to see the iniquities of a system which has produced such sad results in England, his ears are open to the cries of distress that come up for relief from every quarter of the United Kingdom, and, in the interest of humanity, inspired by patriotism, he has voiced the wrongs of his countrymen. I hold in my hand a pamphlet entitled A Forbidden Subject; or, Protection to British Industry, by Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart. I wish the rules of the Senate permitted me to incorporate in my remarks the suggestive cut upon the first cover, which represents the British Lion securely chained in a barrel labeled "Free trade;" his tail, protruding through a hole, is twisted into a knot on the outside, to further secure his safe confinement, while above him, sailing in cloudless skies in freedom and sunshine, is a bird, which I suppose represents the American Eagle.

Nowhere have I seen the questions of free trade and protection presented with greater terseness and pungency than in this pamphlet. Nearly every sentence is a text. The subject is discussed in a series of short essays under the following titles:

"A forbidden subject." "Near is my shirt, but nearer is my skin." "The cheap loaf No. 1." "The cheap loaf No. 2." "The necklace of Sirva." "General employment." "Is England to go out of tillage?" "Sham." "Shrinkage." "The logic of facts." "Prosperity by arithmetic." "Protection." "A five-shilling duty on corn." "The burning question." "The capital of labor."

I wish every voter in the United States had a copy of this pamphlet that he might read the baronet's eloquent plea on behalf of the 30,000,000 workers in England for protection, and their protest against the foolish free-trade policy of England, and that he might learn, what is the fact, that there is a serious growing sentiment and movement in England against that policy. I propose to incorporate in my remarks quotations from some of these essays, that they may reach some of the farmers and laboring men of my State.

Under the title of "A forbidden subject," the baronet says:

We know perfectly well that very many of us are in our hearts thinking scandal of "free trade;" praying for higher prices, though we know that higher prices can only come with protection.

Yes, there are actually idiots going about the country talking scandal about freetrade—and I am one of them—and this is what I say: That after forty years' experience of one-sided free trade the condition of labor in the United Kingdom is very alarming. That many industries have died out or removed to other countries; that in nearly every industry English labor is undersold by foreign labor; that in most industries four days is now considered a week's work. That agricultural wages are dropping to a point never before reached; that in many counties the laborers are competing for work at 10s. and 9s. a week. That, in spite of excessive cheapness, there are millions in the country who only taste fresh meat once a week, or once a fortnight, and milk never. That the pauper class number 7,000,000 in a population of 34,000,000. That there are 14,500,000 of the community receiving less than 10s. 6d. per week. That flesh and blood never was so cheap, the sweating system never so cruel. That land is rapidly going out of cultivation. That every year, with a rapidly increasing population, we are growing less food. That agriculture in all its branches is rapidly declining. That whilst our lands are going out of tillage those who are ready and anxious to till them are standing idle.

That land-owners, tenants, laborers, county tradesmen, represent 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 directly or indirectly dependent on agriculture. That agriculture, the growing of food for the people, must always be the most important interest in every community. That, of all the ways in which capital can be employed, agriculture is by far the most advantageous to society. That no equal capital puts into motion so much productive labor as that of the farmer. That to impose conditions under which the land can not be cultivated is devising the most gigantic "lock-out" ever conceived. That the United Kingdom is the only country in the world that is going out of tillage. That everywhere else, in France, in Germany, Belgium, tillage is extending. That to advocate a return from tillage to grazing is like advocating a return from express trains to stage wagons. That tillage produces eight times the amount of human food, employs three times the amount of human labor that grazing does. That, therefore, the return from tillage to grazing means the emigration of one-half of the population. That all production that does not pay its cost ceases.

That, therefore, if growing food does not pay its cost, it will cease. That employment, not cheapness, is the mainspring of national prosperity and contentment. That the way to make a nation happy and prosperous is to give everybody an opportunity of being employed. That the idea of supplying a population of 34,000,000 with everything at a lower price than they can produce it is probably the most preposterous nonsense that ever entered the human mind. That this is actually what free trade pretends to do; we are attempting to supply ourselves with everything cheaper than we can produce it. That, in other words, we place before our workers cheap food, but put it out of their power to earn the money to buy it. That there is hardly an article in the world that can not be produced cheaper in some other country than in England. That freight and transport are so cheap that nearly everything will now pay the cost of transport to England. That, owing to her insular position, surrounded on all sides by ports and harbors, England is more vulnerable to industrial invasion than any country in the world. That, owing to the extravagant and unthrifty character of her people, England is the one country in the world that requires to protect its labor.

That it is impossible the price of labor can be maintained in the face of the labor competition of the whole world. That England is now suffering from industrial invasion. That foreign labor is driving out English labor, as the brown rat has driven out the black rat. That, as it is the duty of the government to protect us from an armed invasion, so it is the duty of the government to protect us from an industrial invasion. That an armed invasion means temporary disgrace; that an industrial invasion means ruin. That protection means protection to labor, protection to native industry, protection to those who eat their bread in the sweat of their face. That free trade means untaxed foreign competition. That foreign competition means competition in cheapness; competition in cheapness means competition in cheap labor; competition in cheap labor means competition in flesh and blood; and competition in flesh and blood is slavery. That excessive competition is the greatest curse that can be imposed on a working community. That the unrestricted labor competition of the whole world is rapidly making the conditions of English labor impossible. That cheap clothing and cheap food are of no value if human labor is cheaper still. That excessive cheapness is of no value to the community without employment. That employment means cheapness. That those who have employment can buy. That those who have not employment can not buy.

That the first and paramount duty of every Government is to encourage conditions under which every one can find employment. That we import manufactures and export manufacturers; import agricultural produce and export agricultural laborers; export strong men and import helpless paupers. That to advocate emigration, with our fields untilled and 7,000,000 of our population half clothed, is monstrous. That board of trade returns are mere floundering, the food of fools. That foreign imports and foreign exports alone are no proof of national prosperity. That internal production and internal consumption are the only proofs of national prosperity. That free trade has ruined Ireland, and protection alone can restore it to prosperity and contentment. That the cheapest countries are those most unfavorable to labor. That free trade means cheapness to the rich, the idlers, those with fixed incomes; but longer hours, lower wages, harder work to the workers. That the workers are twenty to one to the idlers, and therefore free trade sacrifices the interests of the nineteen to the interests of the one.

That in no other community in the world has the Government ventured to impose the tyranny of unrestricted foreign competition on the workers. That foreign competition cheapens everything the working classes produce, but cheapens nothing they consume except food. That protection raises the price of one article they consume, but also raises the price of everything they produce. That higher prices for what they produce mean higher wages, less grinding competition, a higher standard of life. That five shillings spent on the produce of English labor benefits the working class more than fifty shillings spent on the produce of foreign labor. That it does not follow we eat more corn because we import more corn; we may grow less. That it does not follow we consume more silks because we import more, if we give up producing silks. That it is home trade enriches the working classes. That 25,000,000 of the population depend on the supply and demand of home trade. That they consume no foreign articles whatsoever. That it is manifestly unjust as between class and class to make everything the poor produce artificially cheap. That indeed the tendency ought to be the other way; that the agricultural classes are the best customers of the manufacturing classes. That they consume no foreign manufactures. That, with the exception of food, foreign competition does not cheapen one single article the working classes consume; as a rule they consume entirely goods of English manufacture. That when the agricultural classes are doing well they buy; that when they are doing badly they "do without." That the wealth of a nation is the value of what it produces. That under foreign competition the value of everything we produce is decreasing every year. That to say that under these conditions we are getting richer is absurd. That every year the balance of foreign trade is £100,000,000 against us. This has to be paid.

Economists may argue until they are black in the face how it is paid; it does not signify twopenny; it has to be paid somehow. That one-sided free trade is a game of heads I lose, tails you win. That every one is getting poorer who deals in labor and every one is richer who deals in money. That unrestricted foreign competition is so evidently destructive of the vested interests and rights of labor that out of England no single statesman has ever considered it worth a moment's consideration. That in America the working classes believe to a man that in England the aristocracy have forced free trade on the working classes in order that they may buy their foreign luxuries cheap. They can not conceive that any working community can be such fools as to invite unrestricted foreign competition, that is killing their industries and driving them out of their country. That thirty-nine fortieths of mankind look upon free trade as absolute nonsense, unworthy a moment's serious consideration. That it is only a question of the majority.

If 5,000 desire protection and 20,000 do not it is a monopoly. If 20,000 desire it and 5,000 do not it is common sense. When the majority are for protection, protection is right; when the majority are against protection, protection is wrong. That free-traders conceal the truth from the working classes. They tell them that labor is in a worse condition in America, France, Germany, and Belgium than it is in England, which is not true. They tell them that under any circumstances they can beat the foreigner, which is not true. They do not tell them that under protection the wages in France, Belgium, and Germany have nearly doubled. That forty years ago these countries had no manufacturing industries; that now they are teeming with them. That fifty years ago America had no manufacturing industry whatever; that now she supplies the entire wants of 50,000,000 of people, besides exporting everywhere. They do not tell them that in every country in the world, except England, agriculture is progressing. They do not tell them that for every sovereign that was in circulation forty years ago there are three sovereigns to-day. That it is the increased circulation of gold and the spread of steam—not England removing her import duties—that have caused the increased trade of the world. They do not tell them that English laborers, with 15s. a week (it ought to be 20s.), can not grow wheat as cheaply as Indian ryots, with 2s. a week; that English operatives, working fifty-two hours for 25s., can not produce as cheaply as French, German, or Belgian operatives, working seventy hours for 20s. The working classes do not know the truth, and those who want their votes have not the courage to tell them.

If English consumers are to be supplied by foreign producers, how are English producers to live? How can they buy if they have not got any money? and how are they to get any money if they don't earn any wages? and how are they to earn any wages if they don't get any work? How can they consume unless they first produce? Did the folly of man ever conceive more suicidal nonsense than a scheme for supplying an industrial community of 34,000,000 with everything they consume from abroad cheaper than they can produce it themselves? It is simply a scheme for depriving our workmen of work. It is only political economists run riot who could have conceived it.

The foolish fellow in the fable who pulled down his chimneys and bricked up his fire-places because the almanac told him it was June was a wise man compared to those who throw off their coats in order to keep warm and encourage cheap labor in order to keep up high wages.

Let me repeat the proposition. If an industrial community insists upon being supplied with everything it consumes cheaper than it can be produced at home, there will soon be no work for that community to do. It must leave the country or starve. It was always a certainty that directly our workers realized the fact that the foreigners were taking the bread out of their mouths they would call for protection. Well, that time has come, and they do realize it. The instinct of self-preservation is awakened, and it is possible they may make it very hot for those who have so long been leading them astray from the paths of common sense. Industrial depression has been so long reaching wages that people began to fancy it would never reach them at all. But it has. The great industrial boom put it off ten years, but at last it has come.

The cause of the delay is very simple. Up to the present time the immense industrial capital of the country has stood between English and foreign workmen, and so long as that buffer remained the former did not feel the full shock of the competition with cheap labor; now it is gone, and they are face to face with their enemy. First the employers lost their profits, then they lost their capital, and now at last the workers are losing their wages. The shoe is beginning to pinch, and the reaction has commenced. It was a certainty. The employer may manage to live without his profits; he may struggle on even if he loses half his capital; he has his political economy to console him; but when the workman loses employment he is done. No theories will help him then; he wants remedies, and very quickly, too. It is a case of work or the workhouse.

Under the head of "Near is my shirt, but nearer is my skin," he says:

In every industrial country in the world except England it is recognized that the first duty of the Government is to promote the employment of the people; in other words, to protect their industries. In every other industrial country but England the industries of the people are protected. Is it so certain that all the whole world is wrong and England only right? In every country except England it is allowed that the interests of those who both produce and consume are greater than the interests of those who only consume. In every industrial country out of England it is allowed that employment is of more importance than mere cheapness. In England alone it is maintained that cheapness is of more importance than employment. Are even free-traders infallible? Is there any doubt which is right? Employment gives the means of buying; cheapness does not give the means of buying.

The penny roll is now down to a halfpenny; and thousands of the unemployed would be much better off with the penny roll at twopenny if they had twopenny-halfpenny to buy it with. When a cry goes up from the unemployed in England it is met by an assurance from the Cobden Club that workmen are far worse off in foreign countries. The information I have gathered on this subject with much care satisfies me that this statement is absolutely untrue; that it is, in fact, the actual reverse of the truth. There is industrial distress in other countries, no doubt, but nothing like the industrial distress that exists in England. There is this immense difference: Other nations suffer chiefly from the results of their own overproduction, whereas England suffers from the overproduction of the whole world.

Under the title of "Cheap loaf No. 2," he says:

It is important for Englishmen to understand this one great fact, that a population of 34,000,000 of people inhabiting a country of 77,000,000 of acres, with all the resources of civilization and with the cheapest coal and iron in the world, with still working capital left, a good climate, a splendid seacoast, can with the greatest ease supply all its food and all its manufactured requirements, provided the people wish to work; if they won't work, quæstio; but they are like other workers all over the world: they will work if the conditions of labor are sufficiently favorable; if they are not, they will not work. The farmers will till their fields if they can make a profit by doing so; if they can not, they will let them lie fallow. Those who tell Englishmen they can not supply their wants in agricultural and manufactured produce tell them what is not true.

Our total imports (1879) were £378,000,000. If we were to return to the practice of common sense and of "civilized mankind," and admit duty free tea, coffee, cocoa, sugar, tobacco, that we can not produce at home, and put a high duty on all foreign luxuries, wine, spirits, and on all agricultural and manufactured produce that interfere with employment at home, we should, if the importation continued, relieve our taxation to the extent of £30,000,000 a year; or, if the importation ceased and we produced these articles ourselves, we should, without exaggeration, add £60,000,000 or £70,000,000 directly and indirectly to the wage-earning class of the community. Now, this is no exaggeration. The nightmare of one-sided free trade, in which England has been away every-thing and received nothing in return, is passing away. The sleeper is already half awake and asking himself uneasily, "Is this true or is it only a dream?" Alas! it is no dream. May the awakening be complete and soon; it can not be too soon.

Under the caption of "Necklace of Siva," he says:

From Cape Comorin to Cashmere the credulous Hindoo bows himself before the great god Siva the Destroyer. From the Land's End to John O'Grout's House the credulous operative bows himself before the great god Competition the Destroyer. The Siva of the Hindoo is a cruel god, adorned with a necklace of skulls, and propitiated with oblations of blood and human sacrifices. The Siva of the British operative is also a cruel god, adorned with a necklace of skulls and propitiated with the life blood of many millions of workers.

Of course, competition must come in this industrial world; but woe to those who add competition to competition till there is no place left for the worker. In the fierce struggle for gold and the fiercer struggle for life, the weak, of course, will go to the wall and get crushed and trodden under foot. All I ask of political economists is to devise laws that shall minimize the number of those that must fall in the industrial strife, not laws that multiply it. The greatest benefactor to industrial mankind is the legislator or economist who diminishes competition, and the greatest curse to industrial mankind is the one who artificially increases it. "But," say our instructors, "competition is not a cruel god that delights in a necklace of skulls," etc. Let us see. A wretched woman stitches shirts at 4d. a dozen, her very life all the time passing through her fingers into her work. "You must look alive, my good woman," says the slopmaster; "you must stitch a good deal harder than you have done if you wish me to employ you. I have been paying you 4d. a dozen for stitching these shirts, but now I find I can get them stitched as well in Belgium, Saxony, and Italy for 3d. per dozen. You must do them for 3d. a dozen or lose my work."

"But I can't stitch them for 3d. a dozen," answers the poor woman; "already I stitch sixteen hours a day, often more; my fingers are sore; I have to pay for my light and for my needles and thread, and all I can earn is 3s. 6d. per week. I will try to stitch cheaper, I will indeed; but for God's sake don't take away my work, or I starve." "I am very sorry," says the slopmaster, who realizes her misery, "but what can I do? Business is business; competition is so severe that I must have the cheapest labor. If shirts can be stitched for 3d. a dozen abroad I must get them stitched for 3d. a dozen at home or lose the trade." And so another skull is added to the necklace of Siva. The same with chainmakers or nailmakers. "Now, then, my man," we say to the foreman or gangman, "you must make these women and children of yours work harder than they have been doing. I find I have been paying you too much. I can get the work done cheaper abroad." "But," says the gangmaster, "I can't get any more work out of them. I work them as long as the law allows me, and longer, too; and if you look at them I think you will see by their appearance that I do not allow them to waste their time."

"Well, I don't know anything about that; all I know is that unless you can supply me with chains and nails cheaper than you have done I shall be obliged to buy my chains and my nails abroad." And so there is another turn of the screw and more skulls added to the necklace of Siva. Sooner or later the competition for cheapness becomes competition in cheap labor, and competition in cheap labor means competition in flesh and blood. Flesh and blood is plenty, pennies are scarce, and therefore the holders of the pennies have the game in their hands. They get a great deal of flesh and blood for their pennies. And then flesh and blood has no claim on them; they have not to replace it. You buy your horse, and if you work him to death you must buy another, but you do not buy the women who stitch your shirts, or your chain-makers, or your nailmakers, or those who make cheap clothes in the sweating den. They cost you no money. If they worked themselves to death it is no loss to you; a hundred others are always ready to take the vacant place. When men, women, and children can work no more they go to the hospital or the workhouse to die, probably to many of them the happiest hours of their poor, joyless lives, to learn, perhaps, alas, too late, that there are conditions under which life is worth living. But does it signify? Who cares?

"Rattle his bones over the stones;
He's only a pauper, whom nobody owns."

It's only a few more victims on the altar of competition, a few more skulls added to the necklace of Siva. This is not the fault of the employers of labor. They may be, and very likely are, as kind-hearted as their neighbors, but they have no choice. It is the fault of those vain theorists who have artificially stimulated competition until the conditions of labor have become fatal.

In his essay on "General employment" he says:

The prosperity of an industrial community like England may be summed up in the two words, general employment. General employment means contentment, sobriety, self-respect, and the general progress and improvement of the working classes. The want of it means the very reverse of all this. General employment is of far greater importance to an industrial community than cheap food; the cheapest food will be dear if there are no earnings wherewith to purchase it. It is of far more importance than cheap luxuries. It is of far more moment to the community that the producing class should have general employment, should be able to earn wages to keep themselves and those depending on them in health, comfort, and respectability, than that the owners of realized and fixed incomes should be able to buy their luxuries at a somewhat cheaper rate.

Under the title of "Is England to go out of tillage?" he says:

"Are you appraised," said Grattan, ninety years ago, in one of his magnificent orations, "that the population of Ireland is not less than 6,000,000, and that a great proportion of that number are people connected with tillage? If you go out of tillage, what will you do with that population?" We can answer Grattan's inquiry. Since he spoke one-third of Ireland has gone out of tillage and one-third of her population has left the country; and at her present rate of decrease a few years will see one-third of England also gone out of tillage and one-third of her population leave the country. England and Ireland are going out of tillage. That is the terrible truth I wish to bring home to the conviction of all thinking people. Why are they going out of tillage? For the very simple reason that tillage does not pay, because the value of the article produced is not equal to the cost of producing it.

Under the title of "Sham" he says:

After all, the whole question with the working classes is one of wages. What on earth do they care for theories of political economy, for Adam Smith, or Mill, or Cobden, or Bright, except as guides to a "better land?"

The cost of agricultural produce is everywhere more than anything a case of wages, and when we are urging our agricultural classes to produce corn as cheap as it can be produced in India, in America, Wallachia, Egypt, Turkey, Poland, etc., we are urging them to do what, with their present rate of wages, is impossible. In India, agricultural wages are 1d. a day; in Turkey, Egypt, the shores of the Baltic, about 3d. or 4d. In America and Canada daily wages are very high; but agricultural labor is only employed four months in the year. The farmer only employs labor to plow and sow the seed and harvest the crop. Directly harvest is over he sends his corn to the nearest depot, locks up the farm, and all hands, himself very often included, go off into the forest lumbering till summer comes again. We say to our farmers, "You must grow wheat in competition with Poles, Turks, ryots, fellahs, Wallachians." Suppose they were to answer, "Well, we can do so if we have labor at 1d. a day," what would our economists say then? They want to have their cake and to eat it too. They want high wages and cheap produce, but this is impossible.

And under "Shrinkage" he says:

Now, what do the working classes really want? They want their industrial lives to be brighter, gay, more hopeful, less laborious; they wish to be protected from excessive competition; from the competition of underpaid labor; from competition that makes their industrial life intolerable to them, that lowers their wages, lengthens their hours of labor, destroys their industry. What a sham it is to tell the agricultural laborer he should have 20s. a week, and at the same time to make him compete with the ryot of India, who gets 2s. a week, or with the fellah, who gets 3s. What a sham to tell the poor needlewoman she ought to get 1s. a dozen for stitching shirts, and at the same time to make her compete with the Swiss, or Saxon, or Belgian, who will stitch them for 3d. a dozen. The working classes want protection to wages, protection to labor, protection to industries, protection from "rings" that artificially increase the price of meat, and fish, and bread; protection from adulteration, from false weights and measures; they want a tender poor law for the old, the infirm, those who can't work, a hard one for the able-bodied loafers who won't work. They want free elementary education. They want technical education, agriculture, horticulture, farriery, natural history, taught in every school of the country. What the country requires is legislation that will before all things and in every way encourage and stimulate the employment of the people; that will not, if possible, allow a single industry to be crushed out; that will promote the distribution of wealth instead of the accumulation of wealth.

In France, Germany, and America, protection argues thus: "We have large populations, amounting to from 35,000,000 to 50,000,000. Every individual of this population has to be fed and clothed and housed and supplied with necessities and luxuries. This constitutes an immense home market. If we keep it as much as possible to ourselves, stimulate supply to keep pace with increasing population, exclude foreigners, our workers will find employment, our money will be employed at home and will fructify at home; whereas, if we invite foreign supplies into our markets, our money will go abroad to pay foreign labor and our workers will be thrown out of work." This is what the economists, the statesmen, the thinkers, the workers, all say in France, Germany, Belgium, America. They proclaim aloud that home trade is ten times more profitable to the community than foreign trade, that employment is of ten times greater importance than mere cheapness. Home trade, they say, is the citadel of national wealth and prosperity. Foreign trade is the outworks; we will protect the citadel first of all. "Hang the outworks," say our free-traders; "let that look after itself; we will protect the outworks;" and so the citadel of home trade is neglected in favor of the outworks of foreign trade, internal production and consumption are put on one side in favor of exports and imports. But, in the words of Cicero, "Urbem proditiis dum castella defenditis,"—you may lose the city while you defend the outworks,—and we have done so.

In England we have actually reversed the practice of all other nations. We also have a magnificent home market, a population of 34,000,000, great eaters and drinkers and consumers, every one of whom has to be fed, to be clothed, and housed; but instead of keeping this splendid market to ourselves we hand it over to the foreigner. "Come over and supply us," we say. "Certainly," they reply, "but remember you must not come over and supply us." We not only admit them to our markets on equal terms, but we actually offer them special advantages in the way of cost or transit to come over and supply us. Was there ever such a case of national madness, of industrial suicide?

Every year our population increases, every year their consumption of everything increases, every year our production diminishes, every year we spend less money on production at home and spend more money on production abroad. Are we mad? I think so. It is well the country should realize, if in the ominous murmur of approaching revolution she can realize anything, that the process of industrial shrinkage that is now going on is universal. It affects every industry, manufacturing and agricultural, almost without exception. England is bleeding at every industrial pore. Foreign trade profits individuals, home trade profits the whole community. The money that is turned over once in foreign trade is turned over ten times in home trade. Foreign trade enriches the dealers, home trade enriches the producer. A dozen or so great bankers and brokers and financiers and foreigners and dealers in money are now making money, but all the rest of the community are losing it.

The Senator from Indiana proposes, as a remedy for the existing depression of the agricultural interests of this country, a policy which has been the cause of the destruction of the agricultural interests of Great Britain and of all the misery and wretchedness so vividly and truthfully portrayed by the writer of the foregoing extracts.

But, for fear that it may be claimed that the distress in England has been overdrawn by Mr. Sullivan, I will quote briefly from an official report to the same effect.

I am indebted for it to the speech delivered in the Senate on the 16th of October, 1888, by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. The report I refer to is a report from a commission that was appointed on the 29th day of August, 1885. On that date Victoria, "by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, defender of the Faith," issued a commission to certain "trustworthy and well-beloved counsels and counselors" and others, numbering twenty-six, the Earl of Iddlesleigh being the first and the Earl of Dunraven being the second, the object whereof is set forth in the commission, as follows:

Whereas we have deemed it expedient that a commission should forthwith issue to inquire and report upon the extent, nature, and probable causes of the depression now or recently prevailing in various branches of trade and industry, and whether it can be alleviated by legislative or other measures.

Sir James Caird, the senior land commissioner for England and a great authority, testified before the commission to the continual depression and ruin among the agricultural classes of England. After giving the result as to the different countries, he was asked:

Have you made any generalization of the result?
Answer. Yes, I have. The present as compared with ten years ago as deduced by me from these figures, which I have already given, would show on an average that the landlords have lost 30 per cent., the tenants 60 per cent., and the laborers 10 per cent., and putting that into figures, it brings out that on 265,000,000 of rental for the United Kingdom the landlords' loss of 30 per cent. would be equal to about £20,000,000, and the tenants' 60 per cent., inasmuch as their income may be taken at half the rental, would be just the same; that is to say, 60 per cent. on half the rental is also £20,000,000. With regard to the laborers there was a difficulty in estimating the amount of reduction, but I will place before your lordships the way in which I endeavored to arrive at it.

The following is from the final report:

With very few exceptions trade is reported to be depressed, and in many cases it is considered to be more depressed than at any previous period. The number of workmen out of employment at the time when the answers were drawn up showed considerable variation according to the districts and trades to which they belonged, but there appears to have been a greater want of employment among the unskilled than among the skilled workmen. The rate of wages for time work appears on the whole to be slightly higher than the average of the last twenty years, but it is not now at its highest point. The rate for piecework has diminished for nearly all cases. A reduction is reported in hours of work of from three to four hours a week during the last fifteen years. Both the quantity and the quality of the work produced have largely increased. Summarizing very briefly the answers which we received to our questions and the oral evidence given before us, there would appear to be a general agreement among those whom we consulted—

A. That the trade and industry of the country are in a condition which may be fairly described as depressed.
B. That by this depression is meant a diminution and in some cases an absence of profit, with a corresponding diminution of employment for the laboring classes.
C. That neither the volume of trade nor the amount of capital invested therein has materially fallen off, though the latter has in many cases diminished in value.

D. That the depression above referred to dates from about the year 1875, and that, with the exception of a short period of prosperity enjoyed by certain branches of trade in the years 1880 to 1883, it has proceeded with tolerable uniformity and has affected the trade and industry of the country generally, but more especially those branches which are connected with agriculture.

As regards the causes which have contributed to bring about this state of things, there was, as might be expected, less unanimity of opinion, but the following enumeration will, we think, include all those to which any importance was attached:

First. Overproduction.
Second. The continuous fall of prices caused by the depreciation of the standard value.
Third. The effect of foreign tariffs and bounties and the restrictive commercial policies of foreign countries in limiting our markets.
Fourth. Foreign competition, which we are beginning to feel both in our own and neutral markets.
Fifth. An increase in local taxation and the burdens of industry generally.
Sixth. Cheaper rates of carriage enjoyed by our foreign competitors.
Seventh. Legislation affecting the employment of labor in industrial undertakings.

Eighth. Superior technical education of the workmen in foreign countries. Those who may be said to represent the producer have mainly dwelt upon the restriction and even the absence of profit in their respective businesses. It is from this class, and more especially from the employers of labor, that the complaints chiefly proceed. On the other hand, those classes of the population who derive their income from foreign investments, or from property not directly connected with productive industries, appear to have little ground of complaint. On the contrary, they have profited by the remarkably low prices of many commodities.

We may therefore sum up the chief features of the commercial situation as being:

A. A very serious falling off in the exchangeable value of the produce of the soil;
B. An increased production of nearly all other classes of commodities;
C. A tendency in the supply of commodities to outrun the demand;
D. A diminution in the profits obtainable by production; and
E. A similar diminution in the rate of interest on invested capital.
The diminution in the rate of profit obtainable from production, whether agricultural or manufacturing, has given rise to a widespread feeling of depression among all the producing classes. Those on the other hand, who are in receipt of fixed salaries or who draw their incomes from fixed investments, have apparently little to complain of, and we think that so far as regards the purchasing power of wages a similar remark will apply to the laboring classes.

We are disposed to think that one of the chief agencies which have tended to perpetuate this state of things is the protectionist policy of so many foreign countries, which has become more marked during the last ten years than at any previous period of similar length. The high prices which protection secures to the purchaser within its protected area naturally stimulate production and impel him to engage in competition in foreign markets. The surplus production which can not find a market at home is sent abroad, and in foreign markets undersells the commodities produced under less artificial conditions. The natural growth of the industries of foreign countries, possessing in many cases the population and other resources required for successful manufacturing enterprise, has also contributed to produce the same result.

We have, as above pointed out, suffered a serious loss in our purchasing power by reason of the deficient or unremunerative character of the produce of the soil. Sir James Caird estimates the loss in purchasing power of the classes engaged in or connected with agriculture at £12,800,000 during the year 1885, and the loss in several of the preceding years must no doubt have been equal to or even greater than this. This amount has been lost to the markets in which it was formerly agent, and can not fail to have had an important influence upon the demand for manufactured goods.

All the colonies of England which have the power to do so have repudiated free trade and adopted a protective system. Under protection the condition of the Canadian Dominion has wonderfully improved. She calls the system "the National System." She follows the example of the great Republic, and hopes to secure under that policy some measure of the prosperity we enjoy. Australia is also demonstrating the wisdom and benefits of a protective policy. Her industries, which languished under free trade, are to-day flourishing under a tariff which protects her people against the manufacturers of Great Britain. All this could not take place without creating doubts, not only among the 30,000,000 workers, but among the privileged classes of Great Britain, as to the wisdom of free trade; and, as I have said, the sentiment there in favor of protection is to-day strong and rapidly growing.

Injurious as free trade has been to England, it has been far more so to her colonies, where they have had no power to set up barriers against her commercial policy.

IRELAND AND INDIA.

Ireland and India illustrate the ruinous effects of free trade. The squalor and wretchedness of the masses of Ireland exceed that of any other civilized people on the face of the globe. Her people flee from her borders into exile to escape starvation; and yet Ireland is a fertile and productive country, possessing abundance of resources, if developed, to sustain all her people in comfort and even luxury. Her people are naturally industrious and economical. Ireland, under a protective system, has been made to bud and blossom as the rose and her people to prosper. Under such a system contentment, happiness, and good order reigned. All her poverty and all her woes to-day can be traced to the commercial policy of Great Britain. A writer, discussing the processes by which Ireland has been impoverished, says:

Ireland has an extremely rich soil and is pre-eminently adapted to the raising of cattle, sheep, and all kinds of grain. She has the richest pasture land in Europe, has an abundance of cheap fuel, is rich in mineral resources, and has many of the finest natural harbors in the world.

The Irish, at a very early date, devoted their attention to the raising of cattle for English markets. In the seventeenth century it became a very lucrative business and the first great source of Irish wealth. But Parliament, in obedience to the demand of England landlords, passed a law prohibiting the importation from Ireland of all cattle, sheep, and swine, of beef, pork, bacon, mutton, butter, and cheese.

The source of Irish industry having been destroyed, the Irish having a few ships built others and betook themselves to commerce, establishing a large and flourishing trade with the colonies, with the East and West Indies and the continent. But again England interfered, and Parliament, to please English shipbuilders and traders, passed the celebrated navigation laws, prohibiting the Irish from carrying on trade with the colonies, and thus Ireland's flourishing colonial trade was cut off and forever destroyed.

Ireland was now completely at England's mercy. Forbidden to raise cattle for English markets, forbidden to build up a merchant marine, forbidden to trade with other nations, they were still determined to live on the beautiful soil God had given them. Though crushed in spirit and discouraged they still had the indomitable pluck so characteristic of the Irish race, and they turned their attention to the raising of sheep and manufacturing wool, and it soon became a flourishing industry. "Irish wool," says Froude, "was the finest in Europe, and Irish cloth was eagerly sought after." All were for a time prosperous, but England became alarmed and jealous at Ireland's prosperity, and Parliament again crippled them by prohibitory laws.

The Irish wool industry was wiped out and the ruin was absolute and complete. At the time of the destruction of the woolen industry it afforded employment to fifty thousand families. They were thrown upon the land; rents rose to a ruinous state; thousands had no employment, and those who had work earned only their board. Many emigrated to America.

What did the Irish do next? They developed their fisheries, but as the industry became profitable they were once more pounced upon by England, and the poor Irish fisherman, blessed with an abundance of fish in his own waters, was by statute compelled to fish in English ships manned by English sailors. No wonder the spirit of the people was for a time broken—their commerce swept from the seas, their manufactories closed, their operatives perishing from want and famine, or fleeing to other countries to find a home.

But soon after, a few leaders came to Ireland's rescue. Grattan, Flood, Charlemont, and others worked for this downtrodden people. The Irish Volunteers with Grattan, supported by Flood, made demands of England which were granted, and once more Ireland was free. One of the first acts of the newly enfranchised legislature was to introduce measures for the protection of Irish industries by placing heavy duties on all imported goods. Then sprung up a wonderful spirit of enterprise, and soon Ireland's industry and prosperity was the greatest she had ever known. The island was dotted over with busy hives and marts of industry. Her ports were alive with commerce, her ships visited every sea, her flag floated in every port, her people were peaceful, contented, and happy; landlord and tenant were alike satisfied.

There was a ready home market for produce, and a continually increasing demand for the wares of the manufacturer. The laborers had steady employment at high wages; they were well fed, comfortably housed, and decently clothed. This was Ireland under "protection." But, alas, it could not last long. English monopolists and landlords could not brook such growing prosperity. Pitt came upon the scene, and by one of the foulest acts known to history Ireland was drawn to England, and England's free trade was forced upon her. Thus again was Ireland robbed of her prosperity. English manufacturers glutted the Irish market, undersold them, crushed them. Five million of operatives were thrown out of work. Almost all manufacturers closed their doors and sought elsewhere a living.

According to the Government report, in 1892, the first year of English free trade under the "act of the Union," there was a population of 8,000,000; employed, 2,000,000; unemployed, 6,000,000. Those without work had to seek it somewhere, and many, as in 1699, went upon the land. Rents rose from one pound to ten. There being no home consumption, the price of produce fell almost to nothing. The tenants could not pay the rent; the landlords were bankrupt; the whole island was in gloom and despair. Then came the famine, with all its horrors; whole families lay down and died. Over 2,000,000 perished by famine and 2,000,000 more came to America. And so it has continued to this day.

Ireland is a down-trodden country, and Irishmen at home are suffering want and poverty and degradation, and simply for the want of self-government and the right to adopt and maintain a protective policy.

Free trade was forced by Great Britain upon British India, and her extensive manufactures were annihilated, her factories dwindled away, her commercial activity was destroyed, her agriculture impoverished. In short, like a blight, free trade blasted and scorched her prosperity, made her a producer of raw materials for English manufactures, and bound her people in abject and hopeless commercial servitude to English masters.

FRANCE.

France has had for three-quarters of a century a protective system, and by her tariff laws the importation of many articles is absolutely prohibited, and as to others her duties are prohibitory. Her tariff is so comprehensive in its character that the smallest industry is protected and the largest not neglected.

GERMANY.

Germany, on account of the alarming depression of many of her industries, was compelled to adopt a protective policy. A little over a decade of protection has there produced the same beneficent results that it has always produced elsewhere; new life has been infused into old industries; new ones have been prosperously inaugurated; wages have advanced, and the condition of her laboring people has been greatly improved.

I do not believe a case can be found of any civilized country which has tried the protective policy whose prosperity has not been materially increased thereby, and I do know that, judging by the standards by which the people of a Republic measure prosperity, there is not a civilized country on the face of the globe whose material interests have been advanced by free trade.

THE INDUSTRIES OF THE COUNTRY ARE AT PRESENT IN THE HANDS OF THE FRIENDS OF THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

Whatever is done by Congress at this session, and as long as the Republican party has a majority in either branch of Congress, will be in accordance with that policy. The friends of protection, however, ought not to be forgetful of the position of the Democratic party upon the tariff issue or unmindful of the consequences of a victory which would enable them to put those theories into practice. A good illustration of the difference between the policies of the two parties is afforded by the manner in which they propose to treat two important productions of the country.

WOOL AND SUGAR.

The Senator from Indiana and the party to which he belongs propose to put wool on the free-list and to maintain a heavy duty upon sugar. The Republican party proposes to maintain and strengthen the tariff on wool and to reduce or remove the tariff on sugar.

What would be the effect of putting wool on the free-list?

President Cleveland, Mr. Manning, and Mr. Mills all said it would make wool cheaper, and they justified their attempt to put it on the free-list by the assertion that it would make clothing cheaper. But some demagogues, during the last Presidential campaign, at least in Oregon, undertook to make the people believe that removing the duty would not decrease the price.

What fixes the price of wool? The same law that fixes the price of any other commodity: the law of supply and demand. The wool clip of the world and the demand of the world govern the price of wool in London, the great wool market; and the price in the United States is fixed, and has been for the last quarter of a century, by the London price, and has always been the London price with the cost of transportation and duty added, except when the customs laws have been avoided and wool imported at an undervaluation. Every time the price of wool has gone down in London it has gone down in this country, and the only reason that it has not gone as low in this country as in London is that our tariff prevented its importation.

There has been no free wool since the year 1816. Duties were increased in 1830, and this was followed by an advance of over 5 cents per pound in the average price of American wool. From 1833 to 1842 the tariff was systematically reduced each year. When this reduction began the price of wool was 61 cents per pound, and when it ended the price was 43½ cents, and the tendency of prices was generally downward.

When the tariff was reduced in 1883 wool in the United States fell, in anticipation of the admission of foreign wools under the new tariff, 5 cents per pound, although the reduction in the duty was less than 2 cents per pound.

It is apparent to every thinking person that wool-growing in the United States would be doomed should wool be placed on the free-list or the tariff on imported wool reduced. Consider the magnitude of the loss which would ensue. It is estimated that in the United States there are 700,000 wool-growers, employing 500,000 additional men as assistants. The most of these men have families, and there are probably 4,000,000 persons interested in the industry, about one-fifth of our entire population. There are probably 150,000 more owners of small flocks. These wool-growers own 700,000 farms, averaging 160 acres of land, or 112,000,000 acres in the aggregate, portions of which are too rough to be cultivated, but are valuable for sheep-raising.

The effect of putting wool on the free-list would be to make wool-growing unprofitable. It would render unproductive the rough and poor portions of these seven hundred thousand farms now used for grazing sheep; it would decrease the value of the sheep and of the wool clip; it would decrease the wages paid to the employes and deprive the farmer of his profit. I have seen this loss put in this way:

Depreciation of the value of land, $2.50 per acre.....	$280,000,000
Depreciation of the value of labor.....	25,000,000
Depreciation of the value of sheep.....	25,000,000
Depreciation of wool.....	25,000,000
Total.....	355,000,000

The loss on account of the price of wool would be an annual and continuing loss.

The free-traders assert that if wool is placed on the free-list our manufacturers can make their goods cheaper and send them into foreign markets and successfully compete with foreign manufacturers, but before they can do this we must supply ourselves, which we have not yet done. In 1887 we imported $45,000,000 worth of woolen goods, which not only bore the cost of transportation but paid the duties. In the year ending June 30, 1898, we imported nearly $50,000,000 worth of woolen goods. Before we can supply the markets of the world we must supply our own market, and to do this we must reduce the price below the cost of woolen goods now sent to our country from abroad, and in addition pay the transportation to distant countries. This we can never do and pay existing wages to the laborers who make the goods and existing prices to farmers who produce the wool.

The free-traders, while industriously endeavoring to make the farmer believe that he is unjustly taxed by a protective tariff, are seeking to put wool on the free-list, which is one of the principal sources of revenue to the American farmer. Who demands this sacrifice? Not the wool-growers; not the farmers; not the manufacturers, who, with few exceptions, are in favor of according the wool-grower the same protection enjoyed by themselves. No organization, no class of citizens engaged in industrial pursuits, demands it. It is proposed to sacrifice this great industry for a theory, upon the theory that the members of the Cobden Club know better what is to the advantage of the farmers of the United States than they know themselves; that the sugar and cotton planters of the South know better what is good for the laboring men of the North than they know themselves.

It is said free wool will reduce the price of clothing. So far at least as the price of the poor man's clothing is concerned this is untrue. Clothing is cheaper to-day in the United States than ever before in the history of this country; the laboring man can now buy more and better clothing with the product of a month's labor than ever before. The fact is that the domestic competition in a nation of 60,000,000 of people, with skilled artisans, with improved machinery, and a long and constant demand of the best market on the face of the globe, has reduced the cost of plain clothing to the lowest living prices. But consider how trifling the effect of the tariff on wool must be on the price of a suit of clothes. There are from 3 to 5 pounds of wool in a suit of clothes. The average duty is, say, 10 cents per pound. The price of the wool in a suit of clothing would, until our wool industries were destroyed and our sheep driven to the slaughter-pen, be decreased from 30 to 50 cents per suit, but as soon as our wool industry was destroyed it would be largely increased.

The fact is that the wool which is in a suit of clothes is but a small part of its cost. After the wool is prepared for market by the grower there is the home buyer with his commissions, the wool broker with his charges, transportation, storage, insurance, the manufacturer of the cloth, the profits of the wholesale and retail merchants who handle the cloth before it reaches the manufacturer of clothing, the manufacturer of the clothing, the wholesale merchant and the retail merchant who sell the clothing, with their profit. Undertake to trace this 30 or 50 cents reduction in the price of the wool which is used in making a suit of clothes from the wool-grower until it comes back to him in clothing.

and how much would be returned to him? You might as well expect to irrigate your garden by pouring a pail of water on a mountain top 10 miles away as to expect to see the visible effects of cheaper wool under free trade in cheaper clothing. Then only a small proportion of the laborer's wages is expended for woolen clothing.

No complaint has ever been heard from the laboring man about the price of clothing, and American laborers and their families are better clothed to-day than ever before in the history of this country, and better than the laboring men of any other country on the face of the earth at this or any other time in the history of the world. The crusade against the protective tariff on wool is conducted by the free-trader upon a deceptive plan. He tells the farmer that free trade will increase the price of wool and benefit him; he assures the manufacturer that it will decrease the price of wool and benefit him; the laboring man that it will cheapen clothing by foreign importation, and the manufacturer that he can make goods cheaper and thus keep out the foreigner and be enabled to find a market abroad; while at the same time importers and foreign manufacturers are intriguing and subscribing funds to place wool on the free-list. If they succeed some one will be cheated, and it will not be the importers or foreigners. Clothing will not be perceptibly cheapened. The power of the farmers and laboring men to purchase will be reduced, the demand for home consumption diminished, foreign importations greatly increased, and home production decreased.

For a period of nearly forty years a heavy duty has been imposed upon imported sugar in the interest of the sugar-planters of the South. More than a thousand millions of dollars has been during that time paid by the consumers of sugar in the United States to swell the profits of sugar-planters, who for a portion of the time raised their cane and manufactured their sugar with slave labor, and since the war, owing to the peculiar conditions in the South, have carried on business with the poorest paid labor in the United States, and yet the production of sugar in the United States is chiefly carried on in Louisiana, and is now only about half as large as it was in 1862. The tariff has not, owing to the peculiar conditions in the South, developed the sugar industry in the United States, and to-day, while we consume one-fourth of the sugar manufactured in the world and more than one-fourth of our entire revenue from customs duties is derived from the duty on sugar, we raise less than one-tenth of the sugar we consume.

How can we account for the fact that the advocates of tariff reform propose to place wool, lumber, vegetables, fruit, and other articles, the production of Northern States, upon the free-list and to retain the enormous duty on sugar? Is it because the sugar industry is an industry of the South, the support of which is indispensable to the Democratic party, that Louisiana demands protection for it, and the Democratic party, North and South, dare not refuse to comply with her demand? There can be no other conclusion.

In order to reduce the surplus $5,000,000 and to reduce taxation, if it be admitted the consumer pays the duty, 8½ cents per capita upon an estimated population of 60,000,000, the Democratic party proposes to put wool, which is a profitable industry in almost every Northern State, upon the free-list, in order to sustain a tax of $58,000,000 upon imported sugar, which is a necessity to every household in the Union, and thus taxing, if the duty be a tax upon the consumer, all the people of the United States 96½ cents per capita annually to protect a few sugar-planters in Louisiana.

The duties paid upon imported wool have averaged about 41 per cent.; the duty on sugar as the law now stands is 83 per cent.

There is another thing in this connection worthy of note. The wool industry not only is an important industry in nearly every Northern State, but it gives employment to white laborers, to the laborers who are not only citizens of the United States in name, but in fact, who are independent and intelligent, whose votes count for as much in the control of public affairs as the votes of the millionaires (men who work or decline to work, as interest or caprice dictates), men who constitute the very foundation upon which the superstructure of our political fabric rests: the farmer, the herder, and the shearer, who all share in the profits of the business.

But the profits of the sugar industry in Louisiana and other Southern States go alone to the planters. The men who plant and cultivate and harvest and crush the cane are free only in theory, they are citizens only in name, they enjoy only such civil rights as the dominant class chooses to accord to them. As to political rights, they are permitted to exercise none where their votes would affect the result. They must work for such wages as are offered. They are not even allowed, in many cases, to freely dispose of the wages earned. They are compelled to take it in barter, and, between low wages, excessive profits of the planter, and interest paid to the employer, the laborer receives only starvation wages. If they combine for an improvement of their condition, strike for better wages, they are forced into submission.

The protection afforded by the tariff on imported sugar, on account of the peculiar social, business, and political condition of the South, is in no sense a tariff to protect American labor, but a tariff which taxes 60,000,000 of people at the rate of nearly $1 per capita annually to enrich a few men, many of whom tried to destroy the Union in order to construct upon the ruins of the fabric a confederacy the corner-stone of which should be slavery and free trade, and who now, disregarding the Constitution and laws of the United States, are depriving the former slaves of their political rights and have reduced them to a condition little better than slavery.

Let me make another suggestive comparison. The bulk of the cane sugar is raised in Louisiana; all the balance of the domestic product is raised in two or three Southern States. It is all the product of the South. There were in 1887 only 9,241,410 sheep in the thirteen Southern States; of these, 4,761,831 were in Texas. The total number of sheep in the United States is 44,759,314. The total number of sheep in the Southern States is only about one-fifth of the whole number in the United States. The three Pacific Coast States have more sheep than the thirteen Southern States. New Mexico has nearly as many sheep as Texas, while California exceeds Texas by about 2,000,000.

THE SURPLUS REVENUE.

The surplus revenue has been exaggerated—magnified for political purposes—to advance the free-trade policy. For this purpose appropriations demanded by public necessity and in the interest of economy have been withheld. Money has been hoarded in the vaults of the Treasury or deposited with favored banks which should have been used in carrying on public improvements and paying off the interest-bearing debt. In some remarks I made in the Senate on December 21, 1887, I called attention to the fact that the surplus revenues were being overstated and to some objects of national and public importance to which the surplus could be profitably applied. If Congress had then adopted a policy which would have distributed among the people the surplus revenues, after providing for the sinking fund, by expenditures for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the erection of necessary public buildings, the survey of the public lands, and the construction of coast defenses, it is more than probable that the present stringency of money and consequent depression of the farming interest would not have arisen.

The senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] the other day presented in the Senate a statement of the estimated probable revenues and appropriations for the next fiscal year. I will incorporate it in my remarks. It is as follows:

Estimated revenues, $450,400,000. That includes post-office revenues. Per contra, probable appropriations, exclusive of deficiencies, $323,080,000; permanent appropriations, including sinking fund, $101,600,000; probable deficiency—a guess, but a guess from the best judges of what it will be—$31,000,000. That makes on the other side $455,680,000. But add proposed appropriations reported to the Senate and not included in probable deficiency—return of direct tax, $17,500,000, which we have passed and sent to the other House; Blair bill, $7,000,000; French spoliation claims, which the courts have adjudged that we owe, and we owe as truly as we owe our board bills, $1,742,000; naval ships, $7,000,000; increased pensions, $35,000,000, as the committee has told you here. This aggregate makes $98,242,000, and added to $455,680,000 it makes proposed appropriations $553,922,000. The estimated revenues being $450,400,000, there is in view a probable deficit, if that be anything like truth, of $73,442,000.

This statement does not include all the proposed appropriations. On the other hand, the Blair bill has probably been defeated for this Congress, and it is not likely that some of the other appropriations will be made, at least to the amount stated. But some of them will be, including the item for pensions, and it is possible that some of the estimates will be exceeded. These figures are worthy of the attention of those who are immediately intrusted with the tariff legislation, and of those who are demanding a great reduction of the revenues.

HOW ARE PENSIONS TO BE PAID IF THE TREASURY IS DEPLETED?

The Senator from Indiana, after advocating a revenue policy which would inevitably impoverish the country, empty the Treasury, and prevent any further increase of pensions and of the list of pensioners, and after enumerating certain measures which he supposed would remedy the existing agricultural depression, said:

In the interest of the farmer I would add a liberal policy of pensions.

And adds:

But for the large sums which for years have been distributed by the Pension Office, and thus reached nearly every neighborhood in the United States and gone into general circulation, the present financial crisis among the farmers and laborers would have come at an earlier day.

I am, the party to which I belong is, and the members of the Senate on this side of the Chamber are in favor of recognizing the just claims of the men who, when the Union was assailed, the national existence threatened, and republican institutions were imperiled in the interest of human slavery, carried the flag to victory, overthrew the great rebellion, and saved the Union. We are in favor of caring for them in their old age and decrepitude, and for their widows and orphans, not as a charity to them, but as the discharge of an obligation. Their necessities and just claims should be the measure of our response to their demands. Whatever is just, whatever is equitable, whatever is dictated by patriotism and grateful recognition of the services of the Union soldiers, should be done, even if it should become necessary to increase taxation and the public debt.

But it appears to me that the argument that distributing the public revenues among the people in the way of liberal pensions is a public blessing, is the weakest of all the arguments in favor of pensions. The same argument may be made in favor of other expenditures of the revenues for public purposes. The Republican party, while it favors just and liberal pensions for the Union soldiers and would discharge every obligation to them and to those dependent upon them, is in favor of maintaining sufficient revenues to enable the obligations of the Government to them to be met, knowing that if large disbursements are to be made for pensions the ability of the Government to meet them must be maintained.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

This reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana, of liberal pensions for the relief of the farmer, is made in part as an introduction to something I desire to say in regard to another expenditure of public moneys, which not only distributes them among the people, and thus benefits the farmer, but is of direct and lasting benefit to the farmers and producers of the country, but which, like increased appropriations for pensions, can not, or at least will not, be made unless the Government maintains a tariff policy which affords a sufficient revenue for the purpose. Already what is termed the extravagance of Congress, both in regard to pensions and appropriations for rivers and harbors, is being denounced in and out of Congress, and it is evident that the condition of the Treasury is to be used as an argument against large appropriations for these purposes.

How does the improvement of rivers and harbors benefit the farmer? Experience has demonstrated that water routes are the only effectual cheapeners and regulators of railroad charges. The tendency is to the consolidation of railroad lines; and what are intended as competing lines of railroad when constructed often become parts of existing systems, and, instead of cheapening freight charges and proving beneficial to the farmers and consumers, only add to their burdens. But wherever railroad lines come in competition with free and unobstructed water ways no combination is possible, and the cheapest water transportation becomes the rate for transportation by rail as well.

The cost of transportation is an onerous tax upon producer and consumer, and it is the part of wise statesmanship to endeavor to reduce it to the minimum by improving and utilizing the great water ways which nature has abundantly provided for us in such a way as to promote the freest competition in our internal carrying trade. We have a grand system of water transportation, which is already of incalculable value to the people, which should be adequately improved by the General Government. It is time we realized that we have a great country, great in territory, in resources and possibilities for the future, and by wise legislation help to lay broad and deep the foundations of our future prosperity.

The farmers and producers have come to understand—at least in the State I have the honor in part to represent—that the money expended for the improvement of rivers and harbors is spent directly for their benefit; that river competition and improved harbors will lessen the cost of transportation, and that whatever does this increases the price of everything they have to sell and lessens the cost of everything they have to buy. They have learned by disappointing experience that insufficient appropriations, instead of being economical, are wasteful and extravagant. The less the cost of transportation the more the producer receives.

The market price is composed of, or at least represents, two elements: the cost of production and the cost of delivery; and often the cost of transportation forms a large part of the commercial value of the product at the place of consumption. Unfortunately for the farmer who produces the wheat and the wool, the market price of wheat and wool is not fixed by the cost to him of the production and of transportation, but he must compete in the foreign market with the wheat and wool growers of other countries, and even in the home market with foreign wool. He can not control the cost of transportation. He must be content to receive for his labor and the use of his capital what is left of the selling price of his product at the place of delivery after the cost of transportation is paid, whether it is fair compensation or not. Low rates of transportation not only benefit the producer and the consumer, but stimulate production, develop the resources of the country, increase the amount of transportation, and increase the individual and aggregate wealth of the country.

If time would permit I could show, in like manner, how a protective policy which stimulates industry and gives employment to labor drawn from agriculture, and thus in manufacturing pursuits lessens competition to the farmer and at the same time furnishes him a market for his surplus products, supplies the Government with revenues, and enables it to undertake public works which directly and indirectly benefit the farmer.

Take one instance more. Once the Government relied to a great extent for current expenditures upon the proceeds of sales of public lands, and then the object of the Government in disposing of the lands was to realize as much revenue as possible from them. But, with the advent of the Republican party to power and with the tariff which at once started the country upon the highway of prosperity and filled the public Treasury, the policy of the Government has been changed, and now free homes upon the public domain are given to all citizens who will avail themselves of the gift.

HOW SHOULD THE REVENUE BE REDUCED?

The Republican party says by placing articles which we do not produce on the free-list, by repealing the tobacco tax and tax on alcohol used in the arts, and reducing the tariff on sugar. How does the Democratic party propose to reduce the revenue? The revenue of the Government is principally derived from duties on imports and from internal-revenue taxes. The total annual revenue derived from these sources is something over $300,000,000. Of this about $212,000,000 is derived from duties on imports and nearly $100,000,000 from internal-revenue taxes, mainly from tobacco and spirits. The Democratic party does not propose to remove the war or internal-revenue taxes; that would reduce the revenue without benefiting British manufacturers and without injuring American industry or removing protection to the American laborer. To secure votes in the tobacco-growing States they did yield in the Mills bill to the demands of the tobacco-planters for a reduction of taxes on tobacco and cigars. But they propose to obtain the principal reduction of the revenue by reduction of the duties upon imports, not upon articles which we do not produce at home, but, so far as possible, by the reduction of duties upon articles which our own people manufacture. The revenue at present derived from tariff duties may be divided as follows: About fifty-eight millions from sugar, nearly fifty millions from luxuries, and about one hundred millions from manufactured articles, woollens, cotton fabrics, clothing, steel, and various products of the looms, factories, furnaces, mills, and shops, and about twelve millions from what the free-traders term raw material. "Raw materials" as used by them embraces wool. For the same reason that the Democratic party does not propose to repeal the internal-revenue taxes, namely, that the repeal of such taxes would not permit interference with the manufacturing interests of the country, they propose to retain protection to the sugar industry. They say that the sugar produced in the United States is so small a portion of the whole amount consumed that the fact that the price of the domestic product is increased by the amount of the duty on imported sugar (which is not admitted) is not objectionable like the duty upon wool, which, collected on a hundred millions of pounds of imported wool, increases the price also of three hundred millions of pounds of the domestic product.

The $50,000,000 received from duties on luxuries, as it is paid altogether by the rich, all parties agree must not be touched. This leaves as the only alternative the reduction of revenue to be made from the $100,000,000 derived from manufactured articles and from raw materials, and the policy of the party, as unequivocally and emphatically stated in President Cleveland's message and in the annual reports of the Secretaries of the Treasury under his Administration, is to make the necessary reduction of the revenue in this direction. If this policy should be carried out, what sources of revenue would be left? The internal-revenue tax, duty on sugar, and the duty on luxuries, that is all.

The Democratic policy strikes at the whole system of protection to American industries, threatens the destruction of our American manufacturing and the prosperity of the entire North. Is it any wonder that in foreign countries, and especially in England, it is popular? Why should it not be? It is the policy which Great Britain has advocated for the United States for many years, which she endeavored before the Revolution to enforce in the colonies, which she has enforced in Ireland and India, where she has the power, which her manufacturers and capitalists have spent millions of dollars to promulgate in the United States, and which even now they are contributing to advance—a policy which, if it ever prevails, which may God grant it may not, will open up to the manufacturers of England the markets of sixty-odd millions of people, who consume more of the products of labor than any other equal number of people in the world.

In the United States the land required for manufacturing purposes, for raising agricultural products, the buildings and other improvements used for carrying on the great industries, the tools and machinery, the profits of the manufacturers and returns for the capital invested, the savings of the laborer, whether invested in a house or placed in a savings-bank, or loaned on bond and mortgage, are taxed, and bear their proportion of the public burdens. They contribute to support a State government, maintain a county organization, build and keep in repair highways, to support municipal governments, and to support schools. The more prosperous the business, the more it contributes.

Home industries, diversified labor, increased manufactured products, all help, by increasing the amount and value of taxable property, to bear these public burdens and to decrease the burden to be borne by any one member of society. The duty which is levied upon foreign products at the custom-house for the support of the General Government is but an equivalent for the State, county, city, and school taxes levied in this country upon the plant of manufacturers and product of labor. What is proposed by the free-trader or the advocate of a tariff for revenue only? It is to place our manufacturers at a disadvantage with the foreign manufacturers, by admitting to this country the products of foreign labor untaxed to compete with the products of domestic labor, which in every stage, from the raw material to the finished product, has in some manner been subject to taxation.

But, says the Democratic party,

BUY WHERE YOU CAN BUY CHEAPEST:

obtain what you consume at the lowest price, no matter how reached. The great argument made against protection is that we shall be able with free trade to get from abroad at a lower cost articles which we now produce for ourselves under the protection of the tariff. Once remove the barrier against the cheap-labor products of foreign countries, which has been erected by a protective tariff, and, as surely as water seeks its level, the prices in the United States, not only of labor products, but of labor itself, will find a level with the prices of those commodities in the countries where they are cheapest.

The law of supply and demand is as certain as the laws of nature. Let us see where this principle of buying where you can buy cheapest would lead us. There is scarcely a product of human industry that, owing to more favorable conditions of climate, cheaper lands, or cheaper labor, can not be produced cheaper in some portion of the world than in the United States, unless we are willing to cheapen labor in the United States to the standards in Europe and Asia. To buy where we can buy cheapest would be to buy our wool of Australia, the Argentine Republic, Africa, Asia, and Turkey; our woolen fabrics of England and Germany; our cotton fabrics of Great Britain and other European nations; our iron and steel of Great Britain and Germany; our fish of Canada; in a word, to transfer our workshops and factories across the sea to give employment to the laborers of other countries.

The enterprising woolen manufacturer would purchase his wool of Australia and manufacture it in China with Chinese labor. If admitted duty free, clothing manufactured by cheap labor under the operation of the "sweating system" in Great Britain or by Chinese labor in China could be purchased cheaper abroad than at home. Even our wheat would eventually be purchased from India and our great agricultural interests destroyed, as has been the case in Great Britain. However broad our philanthropy may be, however much we may sympathize with the laborers of other countries, charity should begin at home.

In dealing with humanity we owe our first duty to our own country and our own countrymen. It is the duty of the Government to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of their rights upon land and sea wherever they may rightfully go. This duty of the Government is but the correlative of the duty of the citizen of allegiance to his Government. Though it may be powerless at this time to do so, it is the duty of the Government to secure to every citizen of the Republic, white or black, on every foot of American soil, civil and political rights which the Constitution guarantees to him; to see that he enjoys rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that he receives the fruit of his own labor, that when he has a right to vote he is not intimidated or driven from the polls, and when he has voted that his vote shall be honestly counted. So it is the duty of the Government to protect the laboring men of the United States against the cheap labor of Asia and the pauper labor of Europe, to dignify labor, and to secure the independence and to promote the intelligence of the American laborer; to protect the American laborer, not only against the admission into this country of laborers who work for starvation wages, but from the products of cheap labor everywhere. The Democratic party has entirely abandoned the principle of protection to American industries and to American labor. Urged on by the solid South and cheered on by British manufacturers and free-traders, the Democratic party stands to-day, as Samson stood in the temple of the Philistines, with its arms around the pillars of American industry, blind, waiting only for strength to pull down the great structure which has been so many years in building, and which, if it does fall, will bring ruin and distress upon the country and will grind the Democratic party to powder.

TREASURY NOTES AND BULLION.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that after the morning business on Monday, or the first day thereafter, when I can have the opportunity, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to make some remarks upon Senate bill 2350, reported from the Committee on Finance, authorizing the issue of Treasury notes on deposits of silver bullion, and the bill (S. 1558) to provide for the free coinage of both gold and silver, and for the issuance of coin certificates to circulate as money, and for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and for other purposes, which lies upon the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF GRAND RIVER.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask permission to submit a resolution as a substitute for the resolution proposed by me yesterday, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOODY in the chair). The resolution now offered will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with all information in his possession concerning the survey which has been made by the citizens of Grand Rapids of the Grand River between Grand Rapids and Grand Haven on Lake Michigan; and he is directed to report to the Senate his views as to the practicability of improving Grand River, with an estimate of the cost of making a channel of sufficient depth to accommodate the commerce of the Lakes.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now ask leave to withdraw the resolution which I submitted yesterday upon this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has leave, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none; and leave is granted to withdraw the resolution yesterday submitted by him.

IMPROVEMENT OF ST. MARY'S RIVER AND HAY LAKE CHANNEL.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the Calendar now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar is now in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1631) making appropriations for improving the St. Mary's River and for improving the Hay Lake Channel. The bill was passed over the other day without prejudice under Rule VIII.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to appropriate, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for improving Hay Lake Channel, Michigan, for continuing and completing the improvements, $1,684,115; and for improving Saint Mary's River at the falls, Michigan, continuing and completing improvements on the new lock, dam, and approaches, $3,738,864.

For the purpose of securing uninterrupted work on these improvements and the speedy completion thereof, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, is authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sums as may be necessary to do the work; but an itemized statement of such expenses shall accompany the annual report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that after this bill is disposed of I shall call for the regular order. I think it is a violation of the unanimous understanding to call up bills out of their order.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHILLINGER PAVING PATENT.

Mr. PLATT. When the Calendar, under Rule VIII, was under consideration on a former day, Senate bill 1024 was passed over without prejudice upon the objection of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. It is a bill to send a case to the Court of Claims. I understand that the Senator from Arkansas has since examined the case, is ready to withdraw his objection, and is willing that the bill shall be passed. If so, I ask that the Senate consider it at this time.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill, and am willing that it shall be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1024) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to finally determine the claim of Charles E. Creecy for the use of the Schillinger patent in the Capitol grounds.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has been read and there is an amendment from the Committee on Patents, which has been read. If anything is read now it should be the amendment which is proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Patents will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Patents report to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Court of Claims be, and hereby is, authorized to hear and determine the claims of John J. Schillinger and his assignees and their licensees, for compensation for the use by the United States of the invention of John J. Schillinger for laying concrete pavement in blocks, as secured by letters patent to said Schillinger, dated July 19, 1870, numbered 105599, reissued May 2, 1871, numbered 4964, and modified by disclaimer filed March 1, 1875, on account of laying of pavement in and about the Capitol grounds, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, from October 11, 1875, to October 18, 1881; and if said court shall find the patent of said Schillinger to be valid and to have been infringed by the laying of said concrete pavement in the Capitol grounds it is hereby authorized and directed to render judgment in favor of said Schillinger or his assignees or their licensees or either of them, as the case may be, for a fair and reasonable compensation for the infringement and use of such invention by the United States, notwithstanding said claims, or some portions thereof, may be barred by the statute of limitations. From such judgment either the said Schillinger or his assignees or their licensees, or either of them, or the United States may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States within sixty days from the rendition thereof; and if judgment shall be finally rendered in favor of said Schillinger or his assignees or their licensees, or any of them, pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why the contractor was not responsible for this amount.

Mr. PLATT. When this pavement was laid the Government, through the Architect of the Capitol, was notified that it was thought to be an infringement of this patent. The United States went ahead, under that notice, to make the contract, and it put into the contract a clause that the contractor should indemnify the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that is the point.

Mr. PLATT. The United States is the party who violated the patent in that way. It has under the contract a claim upon the contractor if it should be found that it ought to pay damages.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, the point is this: The patentee neglected to bring his suit against the Government, or against the contractor, who was the actual violator or infringer of the patent right, until after his claim was barred. If we authorize this man to come in against the United States and we pay him, have we not lost our remedy against the contractor?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know how that may be. I do not think that is the case; but whether it is or not this party has not been in fault. He came to Congress and asked to have this matter referred to the Court of Claims. It was referred under the Bowman act, and the Court of Claims found that the patent was valid and sent the case back to Congress. It was not acted upon then, because Judge Hagner, of this District, had rendered a decision in another case which went to the point that there was no infringement in this case. Judge Hagner's decision has since been overruled by the Supreme Court of the United States. This party has been diligent in trying to get his rights as against the Government. All he asks is an opportunity to go to the Court of Claims.

I think that when any one claims that the Government has thus infringed a patent after notice given to it he ought at least to have an opportunity to go where he can try his case, he not having been in fault by any laches on his part. It was the United States that was the infringer of this patent, if anybody infringed it, because it had notice. It then made the contract, and it proposed to recoup on the contractor if it should be determined that it was liable for damages.

I do not think that if this case were fully explained here or the report read anybody would think that the patentees made themselves liable to be charged with laches or negligence.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is the point I suggested and the point that strikes me. We made a contract for paving around the Capitol grounds with asphalt. Certain parties claimed that the contractor with whom we made the contract had no right to use the asphalt which was employed. We, the Government, put a clause into the contract that the man with whom we contracted should indemnify the United States and should be responsible for any infringement of any patent. That is a plain contract. Now, the Government did not do the work; they had it done. The contractor is the man who infringed the patent, who violated the rights and interests of this patentee. The patentee has a perfect right to sue this man. If he has a patent that is worth anything he does not have to go to the Court of Claims to establish it. He had his remedy against the contractor. He did not pursue his remedy against the violator, the infringer of his patent, the man who had contracted with the Government and who did the work and who used the material which was an infringement of his patent. He did not proceed against him. He delayed until he has no remedy either against that man or against the United States.

Then he comes in and asks that he may be allowed to have a remedy against the United States. Now, if we grant him that remedy against the United States we necessarily have lost our remedy against the contractor. The contractor was bound to indemnify the United States. Now he is not bound to indemnify it when we come in voluntarily and restore a right which the man has forfeited by the lapse of time.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think so. I think the contractor is bound to indemnify the United States if any judgment shall be rendered against it, because the right of action which the United States would have against the contractor does not begin to run until it has been made to pay, as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator to examine that point and let the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar. Without going under Rule IX let it retain its place so as to be called up the next time the Calendar is considered.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has once been passed over, and I should like to have it disposed of some time or other. I am perfectly clear in my mind that the decided cases settle that the right of action does not begin to run until the United States has had to pay something for it. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. COCKRELL. But when the United States is not liable, and when all liability on the part of the United States has ceased and it voluntarily comes in and gives a remedy against it, it can not go upon the other party.

Mr. PLATT. I may have been unfortunate in my expression. What I intended to say was that the right of the United States to bring an action against the contractor does not accrue until it has had to pay something. If it shall be found in this case that the United States has to pay anything to the inventor, then its right of action against the contractor will accrue, and it will have six years after that time to seek its indemnity against the contractor. That is plain and familiar law with reference to the statute of limitations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to finally determine the claim of John J. Schillinger and his assignees for the use of the Schillinger patent in the Capitol grounds."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senate to go back to Order of Business 430, Senate bill 2715, which was passed over under Rule VIII informally and without prejudice, and to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks for the present consideration of the bill mentioned by him, the title of which will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill is already on the Calendar to be called up at any moment, I shall not object, because it has not yet had its day in court; but I give notice that if any bill is called up after the point previously reached on the Calendar I shall object, and I wish now to enter an objection.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. With the leave of the Senator from Texas I should like to enter an objection now to Order of Business 422 being considered under this call; that is, I do not wish it to be called up without my objection being entered, and let it go over under Rule IX. It is the bill (S. 305) to transfer the revenue-marine to the naval establishment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the Senator desire to do?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to enter my objection now to the bill to transfer the revenue-marine to the naval establishment being considered under this call, so that it shall not be taken up without my being present. It involves very grave considerations, and nearly doubles the expense of the establishment. I wish to enter the objection now.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the order of business?

Mr. SHERMAN. Order of Business 422.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield the floor?

Mr. COKE. I yield the floor to the Senator from Ohio to make his explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to enter my objection to Order of Business 422 being considered to-day under Rule VIII. It has been passed over without prejudice. I wish to enter the objection now so that when it is called up by any one it will be subject to objection. It has already been passed over informally.

Mr. GRAY. I only wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that I have charge of that bill and expect to call it up; as I understand him, he registers an objection now to its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. I shall insist upon its consideration notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can not be done to-day, I imagine.

Mr. SPOONER. A motion to proceed to its consideration I think would be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can give very good reasons why it should not be considered.

GALVESTON HARBOR.

Mr. COKE. Now, I ask that the Senate take up Order of Business 430, being Senate bill 2716.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2716) to provide for the completion of the improvement of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas.

For the purpose of securing the work of improving the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, the bill provides that the Secretary of War, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, may, in his discretion, draw his warrant or requisition, from time to time, upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sums as may be necessary to do such work, not to exceed in the aggregate $6,200,000, the amount estimated as necessary for the completion of the same, as shown in the reports of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1889. But the amount drawn from the Treasury is not to exceed $1,000,000 in any one year, and an itemized statement of the expenditures is to accompany the annual report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, who has moved the consideration of this bill, what is proposed to be done with reference to two other very important harbors on the coast of Texas, one known as Sabine Pass, the other known, I think, as Aransas Pass.

I will say that I make this inquiry because I realize the fact that the trans-Mississippi country is interested in the harbors on the Gulf of Mexico, and, so far as I am concerned, I have from constituents in my own State numerous inquiries concerning these other harbors.

If it is proposed to improve the harbor at Galveston and do nothing in the way of establishing deep-water harbors at Sabine Pass and Aransas Pass, then I certainly should feel like opposing this bill, perhaps to the extent of objecting to its consideration.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I have to say, in reply to the Senator from Nebraska, that, in obedience to a law of Congress requiring the Secretary of War to appoint a board of engineers to examine the northwest coast of the Gulf of Mexico and select the best point for a deep-water harbor which would accommodate ships of the largest draught, Lieut. Col. Henry M. Robert, Lieut. Col. G. L. Gillespie, and Lieut. Col. Jared A. Smith, of the Corps of Engineers, were appointed, and I hold in my hand the report of these gentlemen, in which they discuss the Texas coast and all the points on it that are susceptible of improvement, and they unanimously agree that Galveston is the only one that fills the requirements of the act of Congress under which they acted.

I will state further to the Senator from Nebraska that there is no intention of abandoning the improvement of Sabine Pass or Aransas Pass. Both will make good harbors with 20 feet of water, and this board of engineers recommend that the improvement of these two harbors should continue, but they recommend that Galveston be selected as the point for the great commercial harbor of that coast.

I will state further that from the mouth of the Mississippi River for a thousand miles west, on the Gulf coast, there is not a harbor where a vessel drawing 15 feet of water can enter for refuge. The engineers in this report say that they can, for the amount of money appropriated by this bill, put 30 feet of water over the Galveston bar, and after entering the harbor there are 1,300 acres of harbor room over which there will be from 30 to 50 feet of water, making it a first-class harbor.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from Texas what is the present depth of water on the bar at Galveston?

Mr. COKE. About 13½ or 14 feet.

Mr. MANDERSON. The proposition is to increase from 13 to 30 feet at Galveston Harbor, and the depth of water at the other two harbors is perhaps about 20 feet, as I understand, at this time.

Mr. COKE. Oh, no. I have a letter here from Colonel Ernst, the engineer who has been in charge of these points, and he gives the depth of water at each place. He says that at Sabine Pass it is 9 feet and at Galveston 12½ feet to 13½ feet, at Aransas 8½, and at Brazos Santiago 7 feet.

That is the depth given by Major Ernst, who for several years has been in charge of the works at these points—that is, at Galveston and Aransas Pass—and who is now here in the city of Washington. This letter was written in July, 1888.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Texas allow me one moment?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has raised a question which has been frequently brought to the attention of the committee since this bill has been reported. There was a fear that if this bill was reported and passed other harbors in Texas would receive practically the go-by, especially Sabine Pass. Now, I feel authorized to say that there was a hearing, while this bill was progressing before the committee, on the part of those who were friendly to the appropriations at Sabine Pass, and it was of such a nature that beyond any question it convinced every member of the committee that an appropriation was absolutely necessary and must be made there, whatever was done for Galveston.

There is within reach of Sabine Pass one of the most enormous fields of the best pine lumber to be found in the whole world, and the port of delivery for that lumber is Sabine Pass, but that pass does not need more than 15 feet of water. The bottom is very muddy, and with 15 feet of water a vessel loaded and drawing 16 feet can be very easily taken through with the tide. The 15 feet will be reached within two years with the usual expenditure, and I took the liberty, after consulting with the committee, of saying to those representing Sabine Pass that the appropriation would be made in this year's river and harbor bill for that pass as usual.

Now, as to Aransas Pass, there is a bill offered by a corporation for the privilege of improving Aransas Pass to the extent of obtaining 20 feet of water over the bar, no tolls to be charged under any circumstances, and the Government to be under no obligation to take it, but simply giving its permission that the work shall be done. That bill has been referred to the Secretary of War, and a report has been made this morning, or I received it this morning, favoring the enactment of that bill. If that should be enacted into law, as a matter of course that takes care of Aransas Pass; but no harbor where an appropriation is an absolute necessity to the business of the country will be permitted to go without an appropriation because the committee have recommended that a sufficient amount be appropriated to perfect the work at Galveston.

Mr. MANDERSON. Right there I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, for a little light on the proposition. What is to be the rule by which certain rivers or certain harbors are to be taken out of the general operation of the river and harbor bill? Is it proposed as to certain of them that they shall be considered in separate bills? If so, what class of harbors and what class of rivers are to receive the consideration of Congress by this special process? Undoubtedly the course has been that all rivers and harbors which are to be improved under the policy of the Government should come in under the general bill, and I should like to know why this and one or two other cases have been made an exception to that general rule.

Further, while I am on my feet, I wish to ask, if it is a desirable thing to improve Sabine Pass and make, at a much less expenditure, a harbor there which will be of the value described by the Senator from Maine, why should that not be linked with this and the appropriation be made sufficient to improve both this harbor and that, and also the one at Aransas Pass, under the proposition suggested by the Senator from Maine? It seems to me that in selecting out this one harbor and expending in the next few years $6,200,000 there, when a harbor of equal importance and value could be made at either of the other points by an expenditure perhaps of one-third of that amount, is not good legislative policy.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, frequent charges have been made of a wrongful expenditure of money in the river and harbor bills. Now, I am prepared to say that the only wasteful expenditure really made in the river and harbor bills is that expenditure which calls for too little money. We have been appropriating for Galveston Harbor for the last six or eight or ten years and have not gained upon that bar more than 6 inches of water, simply because you make an appropriation one year of $300,000, the next year you have no appropriation bill, or it may be vetoed, and the third year you will make an appropriation of $250,000, and that will not recover the loss of the year for which you appropriated nothing. The result is that you have poured into Galveston Harbor eight or ten hundred thousand dollars without effecting any purpose.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator if that is not true as to many other harbors, notably the mouth of the St. John's River, in Florida, where there has been poured into the ocean an enormous sum of money and yet through the operation he speaks of no beneficial result has been secured.

Mr. FRYE. I only used Galveston as an illustration. I say that charges are made against the bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors that they appropriate money for creeks and bayous and little rivers, where there is no possibility of any commerce existing, and these charges go broadcast over the country when there is no truth in them. I say that if you take the last river and harbor bill that passed Congress and go into the South, as to which these charges are particularly made, you can not find a river there where the appropriation has not paid $15 in the increase of commerce for every dollar expended, and I say that the extravagance and waste are not in appropriations for little rivers whose names are comparatively unknown or for places called creeks in South Carolina or North Carolina, but in the misappropriation for the great improvements, the misappropriation being a too small appropriation.

The President of the United States in his message called attention to this very thing, and he recommended that you make appropriations in your river and harbor bill sufficiently large so that the waste of a too small appropriation shall not exist, and that has been the impression and the opinion of the committee for years, that you ought to make an appropriation that shall be economical, no matter whether it be large or be small.

Now, the committee desire to test the House of Representatives on this very question, and they selected for that test two appropriations, one for the completion of Galveston Harbor and the obtaining of 30 feet of water there, and the other for the completion of the Sault Ste. Marie. That Galveston Harbor is a national necessity the committee understood nobody will deny. That Sabine Pass or Aransas Pass can be compared to it in its national importance nobody will assert, and therefore they selected Galveston Harbor as one test to see what the House of Representatives will do, whether or not they will adopt that principle. If they will, the Committee on Commerce on the part of the Senate is ready to proceed in the same direction with divers great rivers and great harbors of national importance.

Sault Ste. Marie, of course, nobody makes any question about at all. There is more commerce at Sault Ste. Marie by 800,000 tons than there is on the great Suez Canal this very day; there was more last year by 800,000 tons than there was on the Suez Canal. The Suez Canal is open to the commerce of the world the year round, and the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is closed for four months during the year. There is a great lock to be completed there, an enormous lock, absolutely necessary to that immense commerce, and shall the United States be dealing with that lock for the next ten years? Shall the United States make an appropriation of half a million this year, and then when next year comes around have no appropriation, and the next year perhaps one vetoed, or shall the Congress of the United States, recognizing the absolute necessity of that great highway of commerce, the absolute necessity of this lock, appropriate money enough to complete it? The money will not be called for any faster than it must be expended. But this course has this immense advantage: It enables contracts to be made for the whole work. The money is to be called for only so much each year, but the contracts can be made for the entire work. For Galveston Harbor with the enormous amount—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maine may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. COKE. I hope the Senator may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Galveston Harbor, with its enormous jetties, calls for a large expenditure of money and of labor. Those jetties can be constructed 25 per cent. less if Congress will appropriate the entire amount necessary, even if it limits the expenditure, as it does in this bill, to a million dollars a year. Why? Because a contract can be made to-day for the building of both jetties for a much less sum of money than a contract can be made to expend $500,000 this year. It calls for no more money on the part of the Treasury; the work gets no more each year than it is entitled to. The money is to be paid out in the next six years; and my judgment is that with the immense demand that has been made for Galveston Harbor from the whole Western country no man ought to object for a single moment to the enactment of this bill into a law by both Houses.

Now, as to any other propositions of this kind, there may be some other propositions made. I understand that the Senators from Oregon desire that the mouth of the Columbia River shall be improved somewhat in the same way. The mouth of the Columbia River ought to be improved in the same way; there is no doubt about that. You go up there to the mouth of the Columbia River to-day, and they are building a jetty 4 or 5 miles long out into the Pacific Ocean. The Government has all the plant necessary, an immensely expensive plant, and it is doing the work in the most economical way I ever saw work done in my life. They run along there and do work for six months, the money is out, and the entire work on that operation ceases at once, the men are discharged, the machinery has to lie idle, much to its injury.

Why should not the appropriation of $1,500,000, if that is the amount required, be made, to be expended so much a year, and then the contract can be made to-day for the completion of the work, extending over the three years, and no more money be called for. It is the way Germany does such work; it is the way England does it; it is the way France does it; it is the way every country does it that has the power. It examines with the utmost care to see whether or not a canal shall be built, a harbor shall be created, the river Clyde, for instance, shall be made a river which shall float a ship drawing 30 feet of water; and, having determined that, it obtains estimates from its engineers as to the cost. Having obtained estimates it makes the appropriation for the entire work, and then the money is expended in the most economical possible way.

The Committee on Commerce in these bills are undertaking to do only that, to see whether or not Congress would recognize and agree to a policy which every Senator in the United States Senate who ever examined this subject will admit at once is the most economical policy that can be by any possibility be adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the same reasons which he has given would not apply to Sabine Pass?

Mr. FRYE. No; they do not. A vessel went out of Sabine Pass loaded with lumber the other day, drawing 12 or 13 feet of water, 1 foot being drawn by a tug through the mud in the water. The only trade at Sabine Pass practically is the lumber trade. There is an immense belt of the best pine lumber all around within 75 miles of Sabine Pass, which necessarily is to be exported at Sabine Pass.

The lumber vessels of this country drawing more than 15 feet of water are scarce. We do not use the great ships that were formerly used in the ocean traffic for the lumber business, and you find very few vessels to-day drawing more than 15 feet of water engaged in the lumber trade; and those who were here for Sabine Pass simply asked that they might have 16 feet of water. Now, with the provisions made in the next two years, if they progress as they have at Sabine Pass in the last two years, they will get 16 feet of water, all that is really required there. But Galveston is the harbor of the world. It is the harbor for the whole Northwest; it is the harbor for the whole East; and our Eastern ships can not go into Galveston now; a ship drawing 16 feet of water can not go over the bar at Galveston now. Hardly a ship that is used in crossing the ocean to-day can cross the Galveston bar; and that is different from Sabine Pass, the one being a harbor for the world and the other being a harbor for Sabine and the surrounding country within a hundred miles and no more.

I think the engineers who selected Galveston were undoubtedly right in that selection. There is another project upon the Gulf for an island, for an outlying harbor, and a private corporation is undertaking now to build that harbor. Galveston is the only place that has really been thoroughly examined and settled upon as the harbor for the great Gulf country there, the country bordering on the Gulf, and the question here is only, will you do as you have done for the last eight years, make annually appropriations utterly insufficient and waste every dollar that you appropriate, or will you make an appropriation ample to complete the work and let that be drawn upon, as it must be under this bill, at the rate of a million dollars a year, remembering when you do it that your contract can be made for the whole $6,200,000?

I beg pardon of the Senate for having taken more than the time allowed.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to make an additional statement in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska as to the special necessity for the creation of a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas and for the creation of the particular deep-water harbor that he mentioned.

By consulting the map of the United States it will be seen that a larger area of country is within the reach of tide water from the vicinity of Galveston than from any other point upon the American continent or upon this hemisphere.

Then there are some other facts of interest which I may state briefly. A radius of a thousand miles describing a circle with New York as a center would pass through Minnesota; a radius of a thousand miles taking its center at Galveston would bisect that circle in the southeast corner of Minnesota. An air line from Olympia, the capital of the State of Washington, to New York City is 500 miles longer than an air line from Olympia to Galveston; a little more than that by any traveled route. An air line from San Francisco to New York is about 900 miles longer than an air line from San Francisco to Galveston. That immense territory which is tributary to tide water there is dependent to a large extent for the cheapening of transportation and the value of its products upon the making of a deep harbor at Galveston.

Not very long ago there was a convention of the States and Territories of the West held at Fort Worth, Tex., and they passed resolutions in favor of securing a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas, not alone for the benefit of Texas, but for the benefit of the Northwest. Subsequently another convention for the same purpose was held at Denver, Colo., represented by most of the States and Territories of the West. They united in recommending an appropriation for a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas. Subsequently, and during the last year, another convention was held at Topeka, Kans., in which some ten States and Territories were represented, and they again repeated the request for a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas.

Mr. MANDERSON. However, I beg to say to the Senator that none of those conventions recommended any particular deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas. Their effort was not for Galveston or for Sabine Pass or Aransas Pass.

Mr. REAGAN. I will refer to that.

Mr. MANDERSON. But as many as could be had—

Mr. REAGAN. I have only five minutes now, and if the Senator will allow me I should like to occupy that time, so as to make my statement as complete as I can within that limited period.

The great populations and agricultural interests of Texas, of Western Arkansas, of the Indian Territory, of Kansas, of Nebraska, of Colorado, and all the country north and west of them and east of the Pacific Ocean, with the Territories and Northern Mexico, would be benefited in their commerce and business by a deep-water harbor on that coast.

Now, the Senator says that those conventions did not recommend any particular place. He is right. The Legislature of Texas and some other Legislatures have joined in these recommendations. The Congress, pursuant to the recommendations of these conventions, passed an act authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers of high rank to go to that coast and select a place for this deep-water harbor. Pursuant to that act of Congress a board of engineers, none below the rank of major and all of whom I understand are officers of the highest character, examined the different places within the limits prescribed by the act of Congress, and unanimously agreed that Galveston presented advantages more than any other point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Texas have leave to proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice that I shall object to the further extension of any time after this. This will be the last time it will be extended by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Texas proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAGAN. The engineers, after examining the different points, unanimously recommended this one point.

The people of Texas never asked for any particular place, the Legislature of Texas never asked for any particular place. The object was to get a deep-water harbor where it could be obtained the cheapest and the best, and where it would best accommodate the largest class of ships, and the engineers met with the understanding that, by the act of Congress and by the act of the Texas Legislature, they were to select a place for a deep-water harbor which would accommodate the world's commerce and the vast commerce tributary to it at the least expense, and in view of all the facts they selected Galveston. All the great West is interested in this; its commerce is interested in it; the cheapening of its transportation is interested in it; the value of its farms is interested in it, because it will bring increased value to their products.

While this is so, we do not propose and have never proposed to abandon the important works at Sabine Pass and at Aransas Pass, but those are to go on as they have gone on under the river and harbor bill, and continue to be improved, or by such other means as Congress may provide.

I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, if he will think of the vast interests concerned and that we need a deep-water harbor, he will hesitate before he will obstruct the adoption of a measure which accommodates half the territory of the United States with cheaper transportation.

Mr. MANDERSON. I propose an amendment, to insert in line 4, after the words "Galveston Harbor," the words "Sabine Pass and Aransas Pass."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "Harbor," it is proposed to insert the words "Sabine Pass and Aransas Pass;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of securing the work of improving the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Sabine Pass, and Aransas Pass, Texas, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, is hereby authorized, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, the Senate is laboring under some difficulty in its consideration of the pending bill, by the fact that there is no report giving that detailed information which it seems to me should come to this body when a bill of the importance of this is to be considered, and we are compelled hurriedly to grope into the reports of the engineers to see what has been the history of legislation and of the expenditures made upon these harbors.

I agree with everything that has been said with reference to the importance of a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas. The State that I have the honor in part to represent is deeply interested in this project. Every interest that we have (that is, the interest of every producer) leads us to desire that there should be some active, vigorous competition with the East in the marketing of the products of the trans-Missouri country. But everything has seemed to tend in the direction of the improvement of Galveston Harbor, to the exclusion of the other points named upon that coast. Why it has been so I am at a loss to conceive, but I submit that if one harbor is desirable upon the coast of the Gulf of Mexico for the trans-Missouri country, two or three would be infinitely better. That would make a competition which is most desirable. I understand the fact to be that in the direction of Aransas Pass and Sabine Pass railroads are already projected, and if the improvements are made and those harbors established there will be to the Western producer an opportunity for competition on rates and a bettering of his condition because of that very fact.

If this sort of legislation is any indication as to what is designed, there seems an effort here to create a monopoly at Galveston to the exclusion of these other competitive and properly competitive points. I find on hurriedly examining the report of the engineer that at Sabine Pass there have been enormous appropriations by the Government and very great expenditures of money. In August, 1882, $150,000 were appropriated; in July, 1884, $200,000; in August, 1886, $198,000; in August, 1888, $250,000; and the result has been that from a depth of 6½ feet upon the bar in the first instance there has been reached at mean low tide the least depth of 10 feet and 5 inches, making probably an average stage of water of 13 feet upon the bar mentioned by the Senator from Texas.

On looking at the expenditures made at Galveston Harbor (and I can not take time in the five minutes allotted me, under this amendment, to read at length) I find that there has been a much less expenditure at Galveston Harbor than at Sabine Pass, and yet the proposition now is to abandon the work that has been done upon the Sabine Pass, or at least to leave the expenditure in that locality to the tender mercies of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, he has the wrong information. There has been a great deal more expended at Galveston.

Mr. MANDERSON. It may be that I am wrong in that, from my hurried examination.

Mr. FRYE. A great deal more has been expended at Galveston.

Mr. MANDERSON. The fact that I am mistaken in the matter, it seems to me, is a fair commentary upon the proposition that under the five-minute rule and in this hurried and unexpected manner, without a report from the Committee on Commerce, we should be compelled to consider a bill which proposes to take over $3,000,000 from the public Treasury.

My proposition is simply this, that if it is proper to make this enormous expenditure of money for the purpose of creating a deep-water harbor upon the coast of Texas, a fair thing to do is to expend a part of this enormous sum of money at Sabine Pass and at Aransas Pass. If, in the opinion of the Committee on Commerce, that action is unnecessary as to Aransas Pass because a private corporation proposes the expenditure, then certainly that reason does not operate against the other proposed deep-water harbor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the States of Texas, Colorado, Kansas, and Arkansas and the Territories of Utah and Wyoming, through their Legislatures, have memorialized Congress in favor of a deep-water harbor at Galveston. I hold in my hand a list covering three pages of petitions from the boards of trade, exchanges, etc., from the States of Iowa, Kansas, and Colorado, and in fact from all the States of the West, asking that the entrance to the harbor at Galveston be improved and that Galveston be made a first-class seaport.

From the mouth of the Mississippi River indefinitely west, I believe to Vera Cruz, there is not a single harbor of refuge into which a vessel drawing 15 feet of water can go. The Gulf front in the United States, from the mouth of the Mississippi River to the mouth of the Rio Grande, must be about 700 miles. In rear of that 700 miles of Gulf coast lies two-thirds of the territorial area of the United States, being that part west of the Mississippi River which finds its nearest route to the sea by way of the waters of the Gulf of Mexico at Galveston. In this area of country is produced the vast surplus of wheat, corn, oats, and live-stock for which there can be found now no remunerative market, while east of the Mississippi River the production is not sufficient for its population. In addition, west of the Mississippi River, in the area that I have spoken of, tributary to the Gulf of Mexico, nearly half of the cotton of the United States is raised.

Now, that country—and when I speak of it I speak of all the States and Territories, for they are all represented in their memorials here—demands access to the sea by way of the Gulf of Mexico. They desire this outlet for their vast surplus. Every Farmers' Alliance, that Granges in all the States, all the agricultural people of the West demand this outlet to the sea for their productions. An outlet is needed to take the produce out of our country, where they have more than can be consumed, where they have to burn corn for fuel, where beef and pork have gone down so low that they do not pay the cost of production.

An outlet is desired upon the Gulf of Mexico for these products, and the only question is where that outlet shall be. They do not need a harbor with an entrance of only 15 or 20 feet; they need a harbor that will be open to the largest ships that engage in the foreign trade, for it will be remembered that while this vast area of country that I have spoken of lies behind the Gulf coast in the United States, in front, across the Gulf, are the Island of Cuba, and Brazil, and all the South American Republics, with which our commerce, already great, is to be indefinitely increased in the near future.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COKE. I would like to speak a minute or two longer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Texas may proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. COKE. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska proposes to load this bill down with two other points of improvement on the Texas coast.

Mr. HEARST. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARST. What is the distance between these points on the Gulf coast where it is proposed to build these harbors?

Mr. COKE. I suppose the distance from Galveston to Aransas Pass is about 150 miles. The distance from Galveston to Sabine Pass I imagine is about 60 or 70 miles.

Mr. HEARST. It seems to me that one place might answer as a deep-water harbor.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from Nebraska desires to amend the bill by putting on Aransas Pass and Sabine Pass. I have assured him and the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce has assured him that a bill has been introduced and has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers, giving over to a private corporation the right to improve Aransas Pass without charge to the Government and without charge upon commerce.

This corporation proposes to make Aransas Pass a free port without charge to the Government or upon commerce; and the Senator has been assured that Sabine Pass will be amply and bountifully cared for in the river and harbor bill. We desire at Galveston a great national harbor. I do not underrate Sabine Pass or Aransas Pass. Both of these points will be, and ought to be, improved, and good harbors can be made at both, and each will have a grand back country for its support, but Galveston is the place for a great port in which the largest vessels in the world can ride safely at anchor.

I will read to the Senate what Colonel Ernst, of the Engineer Corps, says about Galveston. Speaking of the acres of deep water, he says:

We find at Sabine Pass, after entering the harbor there are 100 acres of deep water for anchorage; at Galveston there are 1,304 acres of deep water for anchorage; and at Aransas there are 60 acres of deep water.

Colonel Ernst goes on to show the cost of improvement per acre. He says the cost of improvement for Sabine would be $23,790 per acre; for Aransas, $24,517 per acre; and for Galveston it would be $1,687 per acre.

Galveston is a city of 50,000 inhabitants. It has all the appliances for handling commerce. Eight thousand miles of railroad in Texas alone point to and concentrate just above Galveston on Buffalo Bayou.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas from what document he reads.

Mr. COKE. I read from a letter of Colonel Ernst, now on duty as an engineer in the city of Washington, who for several years was in charge of the work at Galveston and at Aransas Pass.

Mr. MANDERSON. Has that been published for the use of the Senate?

Mr. COKE. It has been read before the Committee on Commerce, and it has been published.

Mr. MANDERSON. But not in any report on this bill?

Mr. COKE. It is among the printed documents that accompany the bill.

Now, Mr. President, there is no trouble about the improvement of Aransas Pass. There will be no trouble about the improvement of Sabine Pass on the river and harbor bill. We want one great commercial port, one into which all the vessels of the world can enter, and Galveston, by the report of the engineers, by the convergence there of the greatest commerce on the Gulf coast west of New Orleans, by the indications of nature, is the point, and the only point, upon the Texas coast where we can get such a port.

We do not need it for Texas alone. We have in Texas a sufficient area to make five States as large as the States of old Virginia and West Virginia combined. Then behind us is the Indian Territory, that great area so shortly to be settled, and then Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, and all that country which has memorialized Congress for a deep-water port upon the Gulf of Mexico; and all of them, I think, which have designated any point have named Galveston as the place.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, does he not know that from the State of Nebraska, and I think, also, from Kansas, there have been petitions presented and referred to the Committee on Commerce (some perhaps are lying on the table), in favor of a deep-water harbor both at Sabine Pass and Aransas Pass?

Mr. COKE. I do not know of such. There will be a harbor at Sabine Pass. The improvement is going on. The Committee on Commerce intend to make a liberal appropriation on the river and harbor bill for that improvement. If the improvement at Sabine Pass is what is wanted it will be had, without embarrassing this bill with the proposed amendment. The only effect of the Senator's amendment would be to endanger the passage of this bill, and I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I share some of the doubt that has been expressed here and elsewhere about the possibility of the construction of a good harbor on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, in Texas or elsewhere; and, whether I share any doubt with anybody else on the subject, I am profoundly affected with a belief that we shall never get a harbor there or elsewhere at the hands of the engineers of the United States Army at any reasonable cost. But we have certain instrumentalities in our employ which we are bound to make use of, as it seems, even although they are a great deal more expensive to us than if we entirely discarded them.

Logically and necessarily a deep-water harbor on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico would be a very great advantage to an immense area of country lying west of the Mississippi River, and the people have made up their minds that it is worth while to have a serious effort made to have such a harbor constructed. They realize that we shall blunder about this business, that we shall spend two dollars where one dollar ought to answer the purpose; that when we get it it will not probably be what we want, but it is by instrumentalities of this kind that we are to get everything which we are to get at all in the nature of river and harbor improvements until we extirpate root and branch the engineer part of the United States Army.

I have no doubt that a million dollars of Chicago capital will make a good harbor at the mouth of the Brazos; that is to say, as good a harbor as can be made on the Texas coast. That is simply because they employ competent civil engineers to do the work. It is because the men who spend the money are on hand to see that it is properly spent. The Engineer Corps know that they are to go on and on, and it does not make a cent's difference whether they spend the money wisely or not. Their salaries are assured, their proportion of the money is bound to come, and they perform their work with recklessness and an entire disregard of the responsibilities of the situation, such as would not be tolerated in any other country in the world. But we tolerate it and seem to enjoy it.

Mr. President, a harbor, in order to be available for present needs on the Texas coast, must be at a place where there are other things besides deep water. It must be at a place where there is already a large investment of private capital in the shape of railroads, elevators, and so on. I undertake to say that there is no place on the Texas coast that answers these conditions even remotely except Galveston.

There is another very important consideration. An enterprising people have built up a city there under very unfavorable conditions, and I would rather spend a million or two million dollars more at Galveston for a harbor with only the assurance of getting the same result than I would spend a much less amount at some other point where this investment of capital and enterprise had not been made. I do not believe the Government has any right in the ordinary sense of the term to destroy the investment of its citizens by building up instrumentalities which depreciate or put out of sight entirely the investments which they have made. In other words, the Government ought to link itself in whatever it does to this energy and to this enterprise and to the investment of its own people, giving encouragement and help thereto as far as it can. In order that there may be use for a harbor and its construction there must be, as I said, railroads to carry the products there; there must be elevators; there must be capital ready to invest in grain, and all the other instrumentalities of trade without which natural facilities go for nothing.

The people of the section of country which I in part represent here have a deep and abiding interest in this question, and they are interested in it whether they believe that any of their products will go to Galveston or not. I have sometimes doubted whether so great a portion of our trade would go that way as some of the more enthusiastic supporters of this proposition seem to think, but I do know at least that it will furnish a counter-irritant; and the very moment there is a prospect that the one, two, five, ten, fifteen, or fifty million bushels of grain of the State of Kansas which must be exported will really go that way, I know that the transportation companies which are interested in carrying this grain to Chicago, to St. Louis, and in other directions, will come in and say, "We will give you better rates if you will go our way in place of going this new way."

Therefore this proposition, in any event, if it is to result in a harbor, will be of great benefit to the people of the State of Kansas and to all people who lie between the borders of that State and the Gulf of Mexico; and they feel that while we are spending millions of dollars in comparatively trivial enterprises, good enough in a local way, it is not unreasonable to say that $6,000,000, a large—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kansas be allowed to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. PLUMB. They feel that it is not unreasonable that $6,000,000 shall be spent on this enterprise and appropriated in such a way as to make it certain that it shall be forthcoming at every step of the work and that its final completion shall be made perfectly manifest. The trouble about our river and harbor bill generally is that it appropriates for a particular work $1,000, or $5,000, or $10,000, or $50,000 a year, only a small portion of the amount which will finally be required for the completion of the work. I have in my mind a single harbor upon the coast of Lake Erie, estimated to cost $100,000, which by this process of piecemeal appropriation cost $200,000, and there is an estimate for the present year of $50,000 for its completion, whereas if we had appropriated $100,000 in the beginning we not only should have had a harbor for that money, but we should have had it within two years.

It ought to be possible to apply to the great harbors of this country, or to the great places where great harbors are possible, and where the larger investments of private capital are already made, the sensible business principle of providing enough money in order that the work once undertaken upon any plan may be proceeded with to its final and logical conclusion.

The late Mr. Eads, a noted engineer, said that he could make a harbor at Galveston which he would guaranty to be of a depth of 30 feet, for $7,500,000. The people of Galveston, under the influence of that promise and looking to the melancholy exhibit of the expenditure of $2,000,000 out of the Government Treasury which had entirely disappeared, of which there was not a single trace either in the depth of water or in a stone or a bit of timber or anything else to evidence its expenditure, asked Congress not to give them any money to be expended by the Government engineers, in the hope that Congress would do, as it had done in regard to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, appropriate a lump sum to be expended by an engineer whose reputation was at least a reasonable guaranty that we should get something for the money.

But Congress did not close with that proposition. The engineers finally adopted nearly Eads's plan. They would not adopt it entirely. Of course it would not have been consistent with their reputation to do that, because that would be confessing that they patterned after somebody outside, and that an Army officer never would admit; but they came nearly to that plan, and there is now a reasonable hope that if we appropriate this money we shall get something in the way of deep water at that harbor at all events; and whether we get it or whether we do not, we shall at any rate have made an honest effort to do it, and if we fail the failure will be such that its repetition will not be invited.

For that reason, Mr. President, I think we ought to pass this bill. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I think his amendment would be bad in this, that it would be putting us back upon the old plan of small appropriations and minimize or utterly negative the result. If it is proper to have, as it is, more than one harbor on the Texas coast, let us at the proper time appropriate money for those purposes; but, if there were a harbor to-day at Sabine Pass or if there were one at Aransas Pass, it would not lighten the labors or increase the value of the products of a single agriculturist of Kansas or Nebraska, because there is nobody there to buy what we have to sell; there are no ships coming in there to receive what we have to export; there are no railroads even going there for the purpose of carrying it there; and all those things would have to be built up at a later period.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that he is in error in respect to Sabine Pass. There is a railroad there and very considerable commerce.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, there is no railroad there that connects with the multiplied system of Northern Texas, the Indian Territory, Kansas, and Nebraska, and there are not facilities enough there to store the products of a single Kansas or Nebraska farm.

Mr. PADDOCK. That may be.

Mr. PLUMB. They might come, and they might not. What we want is as nearly as possible present relief, and let these speculative places that may come along later make their investments and thereby make the appeal to us that comes from Galveston to-day, to recognize what individuals have done, and at the same time in doing so make it perfectly certain that when we get a harbor we shall have all the other things that go along with it in order to make it valuable to the producers of the country.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what the estimate for Sabine Pass for the present year is, if he remembers.

Mr. FRYE. I do not remember. The appropriations have run from $150,000 to $250,000 a year. I will say to the Senator that the committee has already practically determined to make the usual appropriation for Sabine Pass. There was a hearing before the committee, and some of the most intelligent men I ever saw came from down in that neighborhood and presented their case admirably, and satisfied the committee that Sabine Pass must be reasonably improved for the business which is to seek the ocean there, not as a great deep-water harbor for the world.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that he must not infer from anything said by my colleague or any one else that there is any disposition on the part of my colleague or myself or anybody in the State of Nebraska to defeat his proposition. There is an idea prevailing in our State, and has been for a good while, that Sabine Pass is the better place and that a better deep-water harbor could be made there, but there is no disposition to get in the way of or to antagonize the proposition on behalf of Galveston. It was only on account of the apprehension that, Galveston being excepted in this irregular and unprecedented manner, the other places were to be ignored that there was any disposition whatever to interrogate him or others as to the purpose of the committee. Upon the assurance of the chairman of the committee in respect to his own view and that which he understood to be the view of his committee and the informal conclusion of the committee, so far as I am concerned I have no disposition to antagonize the bill or to ask for its amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know that my colleague has stated as fully as need be the motive which prompted me to offer the amendment. It has accomplished its purpose in inducing the argument that has been made upon the bill and the presentation of the facts which were not in the possession of the Senate by means of any report that was within our reach. It may be that papers went to the Committee on Commerce which influenced their action and induced this result; but no member of the Senate unless he was a member of that committee has had access to them. I felt as though here was an effort by the creation of this one deep-water harbor to create that which was monopolistic in its tendencies and to exclude any appropriation for these other very important points on the coast of Texas. But with the assurance made in the open Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and corroborated by other members of the committee, that it is their purpose on the river and harbor bill to make a liberal appropriation for the improvement of Sabine Pass, I am content, and I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. I have a report of the highest privilege to present, but if a vote can be had upon the pending bill I shall withhold it for a few minutes.

Mr. FRYE. We can get a vote now, I think.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose we can have a vote now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this bill, although I do not believe myself that Galveston is the cheapest or the best place at which to build a harbor on the Gulf. I believe there should be at least three harbors on the Gulf, and I believe nature has provided three appropriate places. I do not know that Galveston is absolutely one of them, but there is a large city growing up there, large interests have centered there, and they are connected now by a system of railroads with a large portion of the country. It seems to me that, whether it is one of the best places by nature or not, it is one of the places where we are compelled to build a harbor.

If it can be built for $6,200,000 the Government of the United States can afford to build it. It is for the benefit, not of Texas alone, but for the benefit of all the Northwest, which has had very little advantage of the harbor appropriations, practically I may say none. So I do not care if it seems to be somewhat of a large sum; the largeness of the country back of it and the great interests to be promoted justify the expenditure.

The harbor at Sabine Pass is, I think, of equal importance, and at Aransas Pass, on the other side, the harbor is of equal importance. Both of those harbors can be made equally good, in my opinion, with the harbor at Galveston with very much less money, and while I vote for the improvement at Galveston I vote for it with the distinct understanding that this is not the only experiment which is to be made, because if this experiment should fail, as a great many people have an idea it may, we should be left without any outlet in that direction.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] said that more money had been spent at Sabine Pass than at Galveston. That is a mistake. Large expenditures have been made at Galveston and have failed for the reason that the chairman gave, in my opinion. The expenditures at Sabine Pass have been more remarkably valuable to commerce. I think it would be very difficult to find any port anywhere in this country where the Government obtained as good results from the amount of money expended as at Sabine Pass, and therefore it can not be the policy of the committee or of Congress to abandon any one of those three ports. I shall insist when the river and harbor bill comes here that the two other ports shall be also taken care of, because I think the great Northwest is entitled to at least three ports on the Gulf.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will permit me I will inform him that the report of the engineers who selected Galveston as the principal point on the coast for improvement especially recommended that Sabine Pass and Aransas Pass be also improved.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that matter very well. I have given a good deal of attention to this subject, because the people in my section of the country are just as much interested in it as the Texas people. I have been getting letters and resolutions of boards of trade, and the Legislature of my State I believe indorsed this scheme. Therefore I am for the three ports. I am going to vote for the bill because I believe the money will bring deep water at Galveston. If it does not, I know it can be got somewhere on the coast, and the Government is bound to give it to the people in the Northwest.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply wish to supplement what I understand has been said in regard to the Sabine Pass improvement by the statement that there has been no public improvement upon rivers and harbors in the United States, with the exception of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, that has brought about such valuable results as the improvement at Sabine Pass. The evidence shows that for every $100,000 expended there we have had a permanent increase of 1 foot in the depth of water upon the bar.

Mr. PADDOCK. What has been the result, I should like to inquire, at Galveston?

Mr. VEST. The result has been so far exceedingly favorable, and there is no sort of question that with comparatively small expenditures hereafter, which I think every member of the Committee on Commerce favors, there can be a splendid harbor at Sabine Pass.

Now, I want to say a word in all frankness in regard to the harbor at Galveston, in which the people in my State are as much interested as those of any other State in the Union. I was not entirely satisfied with the reports of the engineers as to the work already done at Galveston. They have made some terrible mistakes there. They have thrown away a large amount of money.

Mr. INGALLS. How much?

Mr. VEST. Well, over $2,000,000.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. I think in that vicinity.

Mr. FRYE. They have not thrown it away.

Mr. VEST. I mean to say that there is nothing to show for it.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. VEST. I do not know what you would call it, whether thrown away or not. They adopted a plan there which they found out to be impracticable. After Captain Eads went down there, in order to make a contract like the one he made in regard to the mouth of the Mississippi, to secure so many feet of depth of water for so much money, he came to the conclusion that they had placed the jetty too far out, that there was too much width, and that it would not secure the scouring from the reaction of the tide, upon which the success of the whole experiment is based, if it is an experiment. The engineers accepted his criticism in good nature and have undertaken to remedy that defect.

Now, I am not an expert as to such matters, especially the improvement of harbors upon the seacoast or upon the Gulf of Mexico, and I found myself, as a member of the committee, in this simple condition: we were without any other authority except a board of engineers, and they reported with great unanimity in favor of this deep-water improvement at Galveston in preference to every other point upon the coast. The interests involved are so enormous, the exigencies are so great, that I did not feel at liberty to say that I would vote for no appropriation at Galveston because I did not like the manner in which the money has been hitherto expended.

I shall vote for this measure and do all I can to secure its passage, but I want to say now that I would not be surprised if it turns out that we shall be compelled to adopt some other place hereafter upon the coast and some other plan. This, however, is the best that is now presented, and so long as the present system of putting these river and harbor improvements under the control of the Bureau of Engineers continues there is no alternative left us but to abandon the idea of a deep-water improvement upon the Gulf coast or else to take their recommendation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same.

On the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know—I did not catch it from the reading—what was done with the amendments numbered 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65?

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 19, 21, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 67.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what is still in controversy.

Mr. HALE. The only matter in controversy between the two Houses is amendment numbered 41, on page 21 of the bill, relating to the location of artesian wells in the Western country. All the rest of the bill stands disposed of in the conference by agreement, the House conferees yielding in certain matters and the Senate conferees yielding in other matters, the committee coming to an accord upon the entire bill except the amendment referred to, 41 in number, upon page 21. That is a Senate amendment to which the House conferees declined to agree, and it must be the subject of further meeting or controversy.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the report is adopted I desire to make a statement in regard to the amendments numbered 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65, on pages 24 and 25, and also amendments numbered 66 and 67, on page 25.

It will be observed by reading these provisions of the bill as they came from the other House that for certain objects, for example, arrears of pay, bounty under the different acts, and commutation of ration, the House made an indefinite appropriation, "so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated." That was the language used in every one of the provisions to which these amendments were made. The Senate Committee on Appropriations amended the provisions by inserting an amount, in the first instance, the sum of $200,000, or so much as may be necessary; in another instance, the sum of $175,000, or so much as may be necessary, and, in another, the sum of $15,000, or so much as was necessary, and, in another, the sum of $22,000, or so much as was necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. So much more?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; only so much as was necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. So much more or so much under that amount?

Mr. COCKRELL. So much under that amount. That was the deliberate action of the Committee on Appropriations, and I think for good and sufficient reasons. Here, for years past, with two or three exceptions, no appropriation has been made in advance to pay the claims audited and allowed for balance of bounty or bounty arrears, arrears of or for commutation of rations. For many years they have been reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, and Congress at each session has made a specific appropriation to pay the amount audited and allowed. In this deficiency bill there was an amount inserted by the Senate which we thought was sufficient to pay the claims already audited since the last report and all those that could be audited up to the 30th of June. We were met in conference by the statement that the officials said that the amount we had inserted would not be sufficient to pay all the claims which would be audited and allowed between this time and June 30, the end of the present fiscal year. We offered to increase the amount. We offered to increase the amount to any sum they would say was sufficient to meet all possible allowances which might be made, and the members of the other House on the conference peremptorily refused to accede to the proposition.

Mr. President, why is it that the Republican House of Representatives refuses to fix an amount in an appropriation bill? I say it is the deliberate purpose on the part of that House to conceal and suppress from public knowledge and from the country the amounts of money actually appropriated, and to do it by saying "so much as is necessary is appropriated."

Mr. President, I am using no language now that I did not use to the committee of conference. I think it is a very poor, miserable, contemptible subterfuge to conceal and cover up the amount of money that the Republican House will have to appropriate, and it is beneath the dignity of any great political party.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri must deal with the rules and with the House of Representatives in his contemptuous allusions to that body. The committee of conference found itself confronted with a provision applying to these appropriations upon which the conferees representing the other House were not only firm, but obdurate. The whole question in controversy is simply this: Here is a distinctive class of claims, the evidence of which is found upon the files and archives of the Treasury Department. They relate exclusively to soldiers' claims, old arrearages due to the soldiers of the Republic for arrears of bounty and commutation. Heretofore, as the Senator from Missouri has said, Congress has generally (not always, with some exceptions) appropriated in detail specific amounts beyond which the auditors and auditing officers of the Treasury Department could not go.

Every year cases, in some instances many cases, have arisen where claims have been audited and approved and no appropriations have been made until months afterwards. A soldier living in a certain town, upon a certain street, receives his money because he gets in time, before the appropriation is expended. Another soldier in the same town, in the same street, in another house, does not get his claim in until after the money is expended, and he has to wait six months or a year.

Acting upon these considerations the House of Representatives decided, after full debate, that upon this class of cases Congress was justified in making an indefinite appropriation, and provided in terms that so much money as might be necessary to pay these old-soldier claims should be appropriated in the bill, so that every man, wherever he came from, wherever he served, wherever he lives now, should have his money as soon as his claim should be audited.

The practice of indefinite appropriations is a vicious practice; there is no doubt about that. The Senator is right in saying that generally Congress should hold the jurisdiction over these appropriations, and should appropriate specifically so that it may be known what the amounts are that are carried in each of the annual appropriation bills. But the House of Representatives, because of the nature of these claims, because they are based upon the evidence that the Government alone can furnish, because it is not outside testimony that is produced, because it is the fault of the Government, as they claim, that they do not complete and certify these claims and hunt up the soldiers and pay them—because of these reasons the House of Representatives determined to make an exception in this case, and to make an indefinite appropriation, so that no old soldier of the war, twenty-five years older to-day than when his service commenced, with all the added infirmities that have come to him, should wait longer or die waiting for the promised land.

We found in conference that the representatives of the House of Representatives upon the conference committee were, as I have said, obdurate upon this point, and at last, because of the reasons that they gave, the majority of the Senate conferees yielded and gave up the controversy. And all the more, Mr. President, because under a plan of doing business in these Departments, set on foot by the Senator from Missouri and carried out with his usual vigor and persistency, these claims are all to be brought to a head and disposed of and audited and paid within the next two or three years. Therefore, with one exception, the Senate conferees believed that no great harm would come from letting down the rule about indefinite appropriations, and that is simply the reason why it is that the majority of the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded in order that these old soldiers, these old claimants, these broken-down, aged men, passing off the scene of human action, might not be kept delayed even one week or one day. That is all there is of it, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

REPRESENTATIVES OF GEORGE M'DOUGALL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 316) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougall, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of the estate of George McDougall the sum appropriated in the general deficiency bill of August 4, 1896, to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of John Paul Jones, administrator, to wit, $31,250, in the same manner as though the judgment had been affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, but without interest or costs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPRON COLLECTION OF JAPANESE ART.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up Order of Business 452, Senate bill 321, a bill that was passed over under the rule a few days ago in my absence.

The bill (S. 321) providing for the purchase of "the Capron collection of Japanese works of art" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $14,675 for the purchase of "the Capron collection of Japanese works of art," now on temporary deposit in the National Museum, at Washington.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the amount appropriated?

Mr. CULLOM. Fourteen thousand dollars.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Ohio is familiar with this subject. I will state that it is the amount fixed by the authorities of the Smithsonian a year or more ago. The bill was reported after a very full examination by the Committee on the Library. It passed I think twice through the committee and was passed once by the Senate in a former Congress. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], of the committee, is present. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is not here, but I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain to those Senators who have not had the time and opportunity to visit the National Museum, what this collection of Japanese works consists of? I simply want information about it.

Mr. VOORHEES. General Capron was abroad a number of years in the service of the Government in Japan, and when he returned he brought a rare collection of those peculiar works of art for which Japanese civilization and skill are famous. The collection has been valued by those who are experts in that business and this is the value placed on the collection by Spencer F. Baird and others connected with the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum. The collection now belongs to Mrs. Capron, a very aged lady, General Capron being dead. The matter, as the Senator from Massachusetts as well as myself can assure the Senate, has had very careful consideration, and I trust that no obstacle will be presented to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. VOORHEES. Fourteen thousand and some hundred dollars.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask my friend from Indiana a question. I do not know anything in the world about this matter, except that I know that the prices paid for Japanese curios have gone down very much in the last two or three years. They used to be considered quite rare, but now hardly a week passes when there are not large auction sales in this city of Japanese articles. I have never seen this collection, and I do not know whether it consists of articles that can not be obtained elsewhere or whether they are antiques, which would give particular value to such articles, but I happen to know that all the large cities to-day are filled with Japanese curios. I simply want to inquire whether this price is considered as being the value to-day or whether there has been any recent valuation, so as to know whether $14,000 is an exorbitant sum or not.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I do not profess to know the value of such things, but I have had the opportunity to see the selections made by Mr. Capron and they are not of any ordinary character, like those which are in the shops of cities.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, no.

Mr. DAWES. They are of a very rare kind, and are nowhere to be found in any of the shops, and they are of inestimable value as compared with all those that are seen in shops. I would not undertake to express an opinion as to their value, but there are no such specimens of the wonderful art of the Japanese people as those that were collected by Mr. Capron. They are peculiarly valuable specimens of what is done in that country, and they are of great value of themselves, as compared with other specimens, though I am not able to express an opinion upon their money value. I know that heretofore they have been valued by those in whose judgment I should have great confidence as being of great value to this country to obtain the possession of and keep in the National Museum.

Mr. VOORHEES. In further answer to the Senator from Missouri I will state that during the last session of Congress there was a letter read here which is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It ought to be on file now. I tried to find it a little while ago. The Senator from Massachusetts knows of the existence of the official communication which we secured from the Smithsonian in respect to the value of these rich and rare specimens of works of art in Japan, and the amount appropriated in the bill is the value placed by them. We did not pretend to appraise them ourselves; we did not know how; and so we secured the written official statement of what such works would be worth at this time, and that was within the last year or eighteen months.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, these works are of such transcendent value that it raises a condition of wonderment in the human mind that has ever considered them why they were ever allowed to be brought from the country where they were made. They are not works that can be estimated by any valuation or appraisal, but depend largely upon the imagination. Having had some experience in committees that have viewed and investigated such matters, I have found that no two persons agree as to their value. They are somewhat like the Sibylline Leaves. They come to us first with an estimate of a few thousand dollars, as these did originally—

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. HALE. And they have been constantly increasing in value. It is an additional argument in favor of passing this bill and getting rid of it, that if we do not pass it now at $14,000 it will come in next year at $20,000. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says to me in an aside that he has no doubt that will be so. The Senator from Indiana will appreciate that consideration. It may be that he would favor it if more money should be called for.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is an argument in favor of the passage of the bill now.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt that as years go on more and more the real value of these specimens will be appreciated, and that will increase their value in the market. I agree with the Senator that if we had purchased them five years ago in the market we could have got them for much less than now. Every year that we come to be more and more familiar with what is done there these specimens will be prized above all others.

Mr. HALE. What I was coming at is that there is a pronounced demand for this kind of appropriation from the laboring men and the farmers of the country. The representatives of that sentiment which the Senator from Indiana so earnestly and eloquently urged upon the Senate the other day, the downtrodden and oppressed farmers of the country, who are disregarded by Congress, who are passed over in their claims in favor of fanciful things and in favor of monopolists, desire this appropriation! Nothing can carry to the breast of the Western farmer so complete and thrilling a feeling of satisfaction with the Congress of the United States as to know that it is hunting up old relics from Japan, collections that have been for years and years here in Washington, and without which the Government has gone on in a very respectable fashion, but which now, in obedience to their demand, are being purchased for their benefit! It is not a fanciful thing, Mr. President; it is a real thing, the desire that the great West has for the purchase of these products of Japanese art!

Fourteen thousand dollars is a small sum to the farmer of the West. He is willing to expend it for these subjects; he is entirely satisfied; and the Senator from Indiana is doing much in this cause that he is now pleading to pacify the farmers whom the other day he unduly stirred up. I congratulate him that he is engaged now in a crusade that will be beneficial to the farmers of the country and will tend to make them more content. And for that reason, and to relieve the burdens under which they exist, I am going to vote with him, because I thought the other day that he was stimulating a feeling of discontent on the part of the farmers, and now I see that he has slept over it and that he has found something that they are interested in, and that he knows will go through, and we are all going to join him and put him in favor in sending this appropriation through.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I will forgive the very mean speech that preceded a very excellent conclusion and will ask for a vote, only saying that General Capron was a very acceptable Commissioner of Agriculture in his day, and this little appropriation goes to his widow in her poverty. Now I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if it is true that these works of art have been offered for $2,000?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will not put it in any offensive way, but I will answer in this way: I was trying to tax my best recollection when the Senator made that statement, and my best recollection is—I am not to be held responsible if it is a little different from that—that I introduced a bill for the purchase of the Capron collection for $10,000. Then the committee asked officially the officers who had these works in charge at the Smithsonian Institution for an estimate of their value, and they made an estimate over the amount that was asked for them. Then I amended the bill myself in accordance with it.

I represent a constituency, Mr. President, who would not abolish the Smithsonian Institution or the National Museum, and I suppose the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] would criticise them for not doing so; but, as I stated, I forgive him for his speech for the sake of the vote he is going to give.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose everybody is in favor of ornamenting this Capital and making it to the American people who come here attractive to a reasonable and proper extent with works of art. A good many of us have voted for larger expenditures than this for single objects which hardly come within that designation when they are completed. I remember Mr. Sumner said that the most polite thing he ever knew in his life was when a distinguished Englishman walked with him straight by the statue of Andrew Jackson and did not manifest the slightest consciousness that there was such a thing in sight.

Now, I think in the selection of these works we can trust, better than we can ourselves, the judgment of the men who have the charge of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum. Professor Baird, I believe, reserved this large space in the National Museum to their custody and exhibition; they are among the most attractive and interesting objects which are examined by the persons who go there, and he desired their purchase. I think I am not mistaken in making that assertion. The Senator from Indiana knows whether I am correct or not in that statement.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. HOAR. When the present accomplished secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, who is not only one of the most distinguished and learned men in the country, but who has been a special student of the history of art, who is familiar with the history of the great works of art in the world, and who has been a special student in that most delicate art matter of engraving, desires a small appropriation of this kind for an object of art to be preserved in his National Museum, and sets a price on it, I, for one, am willing to act upon his authority, and I do not think there is better authority in the country.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], in order to guard the people against such extravagant appropriations as this, I shall be compelled to put in my feeble protest against any such expenditure of the public money. I will not make any speech about it, for the reason that I can not get—let me see, what is the word?—I can not get the forgiveness of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] for making a mean speech in opposition to this bill, by voting for it. My position is that I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to say that while $14,000 is a small sum it is an appropriation that ought not to be made. I fully agree with all the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] so well said a few days ago in regard to the condition of the farmers of the country, and I furthermore agree that this character of appropriation is not the kind that they approve, and I do not believe that it should be made by the Senate of the United States.

It is practically admitted that these articles are not worth this sum of money, and that the bill was originally introduced for a far less amount. The persons who own these works did not consider them worth $14,000, and yet the Senator from Indiana says he changed the amount on his own motion when the lady for whose benefit the appropriation is to be made did not expect that amount.

Mr. President, if it was our own money with which we were dealing we should have the right to take it and give it to this lady, to give her more than she asked, to give her more than it is admitted these articles are worth, and to give her more than they are valued at, but I do not believe that I as a Senator here have the right to vote the people's money in any such way, and therefore I am in earnest against this and all kindred appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am astonished at the inaccuracy of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], who is usually very accurate and fair. The amount was not changed on a claim of the claimant or on an estimate of more than the works were worth. I stated that I changed the face of the bill upon an official estimate made by experts in the Smithsonian Institution upon the official request of the committee, and that that was the basis of changing the amount. That was the statement.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Senator to state that the bill was originally introduced for $10,000, with which sum the owner of these articles was content. Is that correct?

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not say whether she was content or not. I did not ask the poor, old, impoverished lady on that subject, but I did find out what the articles were said to be worth by those who were competent to judge. I never jew and I never haggle and I never beat down, especially a widow woman in poverty, and I represent a constituency who do not expect me to do it.

Mr. BERRY. In regard to jewing and beating down the poor, and talking about a poor old woman, there are thousands of poor old women in the State of Indiana and in Arkansas who are as much entitled to the consideration of the Congress of the United States as this lady or any other lady.

When the Senator talks about never trying to beat down, that argument goes very well with a man's own property and his own money, but when we are dealing with other people's money, I, for one, do not believe that we have a right to vote any more than the article we purchase is worth, and the fact that the lady is old and poor makes no difference in that particular, if we are dealing with her for articles which the Government desires to possess.

That is my idea of the right and wrong of the proposition, and no remarks about the character of constituency the Senator represents or that I may represent will affect me when it comes to voting away money which we admit is not ours, and when the Senator admits that the bill has been changed from the amount provided for when it was originally introduced.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading. Does the Senator from Arkansas desire the yeas and nays on that question?

Mr. BERRY. No; I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the passage of the bill the Senator from Arkansas asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] on all political questions; but I do not consider this as a question of that kind and I vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I do not know how he would vote on this question and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] has not voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with him, subject to making a quorum, and so I withhold my vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. QUAY. I understand from Senators on the other side that my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] does not apply to this bill in case my vote is necessary to make a quorum. Understanding that a quorum has not yet voted, I feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] with whom I am paired, if present, would vote "yea," and therefore I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am assured that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] with whom I am paired, if here, would vote "yea," and I vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask if a quorum has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not yet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will respond to my name then. I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST. I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. In order to make a quorum I vote.
I vote "nay."
The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

LABAN HEATH & CO.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask that the next bill on the Calendar, Order of Business 455, being the bill (S. 948) for the relief of Laban Heath & Co., of Boston, Mass., may be passed over without prejudice, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who reported it, is not present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GRAND FORKS, N. DAK.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask that Order of Business 444, Senate bill 1571, which was heretofore passed over without prejudice, may be now taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1571) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts and post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Grand Forks and State of North Dakota, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plans, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plans, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of North Dakota shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion to enable me to make a report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back the bill (S. 954) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa, with a recommendation that the Senate do not concur in the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 954) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments made by House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back the bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, with the same recommendation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MORRILL, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have requested the Senator from Ohio to yield to me a moment before going into executive session for the purpose of enabling me to call up a little bill to which there is no objection, a pension bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a good many pension bills on the Calendar, and I do not think we can violate a unanimous agreement by seeking to call up a single pension bill out of the hundred or more on the docket. I must insist on the regular order. I have several constituents who are interested in pension bills on the Calendar, and they are just as needy as the constituent of the Senator. I regret very much to object, but I feel compelled to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I doubt very much whether any one of them is as needy as this widow, who is absolutely destitute, but I shall not insist on my motion now.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALLEGHENY, PA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. In the case of the bill for the erection of a public building at the city of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. Does that bill as amended make an appropriation?

Mr. QUAY. No; the House of Representatives have stricken out the appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives to the bill for a public building at Allegheny City, Pa.

Mr. INGALLS. Before that is acted upon I should like to inquire whether this bill contains the same provisions which appear in the other bills similarly amended, to the effect that the necessary expenses for the sketch-plans and for the inspection of the site and for the payment of the expenses of the agent sent out by the Treasury Department are to be paid out of the sum herein appropriated. If it does, it is obviously improper for the Senate to concur in the amendments, because by them the bill is left in an insensible and unintelligible condition. There is a similar bill for a public building at the town where I reside, and if the terms are not different in the bill which the Senator from Pennsylvania calls up from those in the bill to which I refer, then it is not possible for the Senate to concur in the amendments without doing a stultifying thing. I ask that the bill may be read before we concur in the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. QUAY. The bill may go over and I will call it up at another time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table subject to call.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HUDSON, N. Y.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1306) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

FIRE-PROOF BUILDING FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to take up Order of Business 461, being the bill (S. 2740) to provide for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the National Museum.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not do that. That is out of order and in violation of our understanding that we should proceed regularly with the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I should be very glad to have the bill acted on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of the bill and should like to see it pass.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 31, 1890, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 29, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BARBARA MADDEN.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 2046, passed last night, be corrected verbally by striking out the last six words, which are mere surplusage, before the engrossment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to strike out of the bill (H. R. 2046) to grant a pension to Barbary Madden the words at the end of the bill "to be paid a pension from," as the words are superfluous. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALLEGHENY, PA.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill and report to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers were read on yesterday. Is there a demand for their reading now? If not, the reading will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. There are certain amendments—

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. There are certain amendments, Mr. Speaker, to the bill to which I desire to direct the attention of the House.

First, I move the usual amendment which has been made in such cases, to strike out the appropriating clause embraced in lines 13, 14, and 15.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "which said sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAYNE. There are other amendments which I will ask the Clerk also to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, after the word "expenses," in line 50, down to and including line 60, the following:

"So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expense of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

"So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site."

Also amend, in line 62, by striking out the words "no money appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof "no part of the sum authorized;" also strike out, in the same line and in line 63, the words "available except as hereinbefore provided" and insert "expended;" so that it will read:

"No part of the sum authorized by this act shall be expended until a valid title," etc.

Also strike out lines 70 to 77, inclusive, as follows:

"After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches."

The several amendments were considered and adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider to be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill H. R. 747, of the same title, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILMINGTON, DEL.

Mr. PENINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 164) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, Del., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost of site and for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, Del., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $250,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost of site and for the erection of said building; and the sum of $100,000, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated for that purpose, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read first.

The report (by Mr. LEHLBACH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 164) entitled "An act to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Wilmington, Del.," have had the same under consideration and report:

That the city of Wilmington, Del., is one of the most flourishing of the manufacturing cities of the country, having a population of between 60,000 and 70,000 inhabitants, and the present post-office building is insufficient for the accommodation of the patrons of the office. The Federal courts are held there, as well as the office of the collector of the port for the district of Delaware and internal-revenue office.

The bill increases the limit of cost from $150,000, appropriated August 4, 1886, to $250,000, being an increase of $100,000. The sum asked for in this bill is not too much when the importance of this city is fairly considered, and the committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that some statement will be made as to the necessity for this increase by my friend from Delaware, because there is nothing contained in the report to indicate what it is.

Mr. PENINGTON. Mr. Speaker, in the Forty-ninth Congress there was an appropriation of $150,000 to construct a public building at the city of Wilmington for the purpose of a post-office, custom-house, the accommodation of the Federal courts, and internal-revenue offices. After the appropriation was made the Supervising Architect drew the plans and sent them up to the city and immediately it was seen that the plans so submitted, covering the appropriation of $150,000, or rather so much thereof as was left after the purchase of the site, which cost $30,000, would not be sufficient for the erection of a building suitable for the needs of the city. They therefore asked an additional appropriation for this purpose.

The Supervising Architect in passing through the city took occasion to stop and view the ground, looking to the interest of the city and the Government, and on investigation came to the conclusion that the appropriation was not sufficient; and so he recommended in the Fiftieth Congress that, in his opinion, it would require $250,000 to construct a suitable building for that city.

This city is increasing at the rate of from five to ten thousand in population per annum, so that in 1880, with a population of 40,000 people, the city has increased until now the population is about 67,000. The postal receipts are increasing at a rate of about $6,000 per year.

Her manufacturing interests alone amounted last year to between thirty-five and forty millions of dollars, leaving out her commercial interests. She is one of the cities of the country where they manufacture the cars that are found on our railroads through all parts of the land and steam-boats which ply upon the waters; Pullman cars are manufactured there, and, in fact, almost every branch of manufacturing is carried on that is found in the country. In my humble judgment the appropriation here recommended is rather small than large, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the gross revenues of the post-office and custom-house?

Mr. PENINGTON. The gross revenues of the post-office for the last year were a little over $60,000; the internal-revenue receipts were about $300,000, although I have not the exact figures, but in that neighborhood; I think about $300,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And from the customs?

Mr. PENINGTON. The receipts from the customs were about $15,000, according to my recollection.

The Federal courts are in session ten months in the year, and have not ample accommodations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have they not a building now?

Mr. PENINGTON. There is an inferior building now, which is adaptable to other purposes; and when the new one is erected it will compensate largely for the extra expense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PENINGTON. I move to strike out the appropriating clause.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the object in striking out that clause?

Mr. PENINGTON. It has been stricken out of all the other bills.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the money has to be spent.

Mr. PENINGTON. That is true; but it is to go into an appropriation bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. We want them referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to strike out the appropriating clause was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title will be amended by striking out the words "appropriation for" and inserting the words "limit of cost of."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PENINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HUDSON, N. Y.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask for consideration of the bill (S. 1306) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Hudson and State of New York, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plans, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury a written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plans, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New York shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 12 and 13 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five." Also strike out the following: "Which sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1306) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y., respectfully report:

That the bill is substantially similar to the bill (H. R. 596) reported by this committee on the 25th ultimo. An explanatory of the bill, the committee annex hereto, and make a part of this report, the report accompanying said House bill, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 596) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y., having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

"That the city of Hudson contains a population of about 14,000, but fully 15,000 people receive their mail matter through this office. The city shows a small though steady increase, and its business is likely to be materially augmented by the recent erection of five knitting mills and other projected industries which will employ skilled labor and artisans. The original plant of the Allen Paper Car Wheel Company, one of the most successful enterprises in the country, is located here; also the Clapp & Jones fire-engine works, two smelting iron works, bridge works, tobacco manufactory, three national-banking institutions, savings-banks, freighting establishments, etc., all of which expect and require prompt and efficient postal service, but to afford which additional facilities and conveniences are indispensable.

"Suitable accommodations are also required for the internal-revenue office. The business transactions at the post-office for the year ending June 30, 1889, were as follows: The gross receipts amounted to $14,472.

"The committee, regarding the accommodations now afforded inadequate for the business requirements and believing a public building necessary to meet the present and prospective needs of the public service at that place, recommend for passage House bill No. 596 as amended:

"In line 13 strike out 'one hundred' and insert 'seventy-five,' and in line 17 strike out 'one hundred' and insert 'seventy-five.'"

In accordance with the recommendation made above, your committee recommend the passage of the said bill, striking out the words "one hundred" wherever they occur in the bill and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five;" and also by striking out, in section 1, all after the word "dollars," the words so stricken out being a clause appropriating the amount of money to erect the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. McMILLIN said: I withdraw my objection to the bill the consideration of which is asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM].

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KETCHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill H. R. 596, on the same subject, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES ON STEAMERS.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and do so by direction of the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3279) to suspend the enforcement of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers."

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of an act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring line-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them to be carried on steamers, and the rules and regulations relating thereto adopted by the Board of Supervising Inspectors and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury March 2, 1889, be, and they are hereby, suspended from operation and enforcement for the period of one year.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a Senate bill. I hope an explanation will be made for the necessity for passing it.

Mr. BAKER. The report which accompanies this bill from the Committee on Commerce contains a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which covers the whole ground; but, perhaps, I can state it more briefly. A year ago Congress passed an act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes by inserting in the law a requirement for steamers to carry line-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them. The act was to take effect on the first of February this year, but actually took effect on the 11th February by the approval of the board of inspectors. Immediately after this, the enterprising patentees of the projectiles and the means of propelling them put the prices up from two to four hundred per cent.—a perfect swindle, little less than an outrage on the commerce of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends the passage of this bill. It was passed the day before yesterday in the Senate, and the steam-boat interests of the country urgently require its passage now. In order to avoid the imposition of this swindle which is proposed to be perpetrated on them, putting three and four prices on the projectiles, it is asked that this bill shall be passed.

Mr. KILGORE. We can not hear over here what the purpose of the bill is.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It suspends the operation of the act for a year.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] had particular charge of the bill before the Committee on Commerce, and I will yield the floor to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I would like to suggest an amendment to this bill in the nature of a substitute. I move that sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in this bill, be repealed.

Mr. BAKER. That would be a wise thing to do undoubtedly, but I hope it will not be done, as we are acting under the advice of the Treasury Department; and all that is needed and required by the interests affected is to pass this bill. I hope my friend will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. MCCREARY. The gentleman on my right [Mr. CHIPMAN] has had the bill in charge, and I would like to hear his statement in regard to it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the act of 1889 vessels are required to have line-carrying projectiles. Under that act the Secretary of the Treasury has made certain regulations, and it is found that the carrying out of these regulations is going to cost millions of dollars to the owners of vessels. They contend, on the one hand, that the regulations are unnecessary and, on the other, that the projectile selected is too expensive; that, even if the regulations are right, the projectiles selected under it cost too much and are no better than other projectiles which would cost less.

All that they desire is that time be given to have the whole subject investigated. The effect of this bill will be simply to suspend the action of that regulation during the present season.

Now, the object of bringing this bill up at the present time is this: that all the vessels in the lake trade are inspected in the spring of the year. Not one of them can leave port and enter into the business of the season as the law now stands without being fitted with this apparatus. The vessel-owners desire now, in anticipation of their spring inspection, to have this law suspended, so that they need not go to the expense of supplying their vessels with these projectiles.

There is a bill pending in this House, and one in the Senate, repealing the law of last year; but all that is now desired is a suspension of the law long enough for a thorough investigation of the subject. It is felt that the legislation upon this subject was hasty and improvident; that it was not based on information that was thoroughly reliable. It is also felt that at the bottom of this there was a comfortable thing for the inventor of this projectile, which they will be obliged to use. If the present law is suspended, the entire matter can be brought to the attention of the House when the bill is brought before it.

Mr. COVERT. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COVERT. Is the limit of suspension established by this bill?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Yes, sir; it is simply for this season.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7175) for the erection of a public building at Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government uses at Tuscaloosa, Ala. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $50,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Alabama shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The committee recommended an amendment striking out the word "fifty" wherever it occurred in the bill and substituting "forty;" so as to make the appropriation $40,000 instead of $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7175) providing for the erection of a public building at Tuscaloosa, Ala., has duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

Tuscaloosa is situated on the Warrior River, at the head of navigation, in Tuscaloosa County, and was at one time the capital of the State; but for the convenience of the southern portion of the State the capital was removed to a more central locality, namely, Montgomery.

Tuscaloosa is the county seat of one of the richest counties in the State, both in minerals and agriculture.

The State University and State Lunatic Asylum are both located there. These institutions are the pride of the whole people.

In an educational way it is the Athens of the South.

Besides the above-mentioned university there are two flourishing female colleges, a successful system of public schools, and a private military school, besides a number of other private schools. The people are all cultured and prosperous.

There are three national banks, the Tuscaloosa Land Company with a paid capital of $1,000,000, and an electric plant but just completed, by which the public institutions and the city are lighted.

Cotton factories grace the banks of the Warrior River.

Furnace companies are organized and manufacturing establishments are being erected.

Street-car lines run parallel with the river and other car lines intersect these at right angles.

The great Queen and Crescent system of railroad runs through Tuscaloosa, and two other trunk lines are being rapidly built and cross each other at Tuscaloosa.

The postal receipts have been very materially reduced, because it was necessary to establish two branch offices, one at the university, the other at the asylum, for the reason that business could not be successfully or properly done in the small and poorly managed office now existing.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (S. 2284) for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park, and recommend that it do pass with certain amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park, to be expended under the direction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the following sums of money:

For the shelter of animals, $15,000.

For shelter-barns, cages, fences, and inclosures, and other provisions for the custody of animals, $9,000.

For repairs to the Holt mansion, to make the same suitable for occupancy, and for office furniture, $2,000.

For the creation of artificial ponds and other provisions for aquatic animals, $2,000.

For water supply, sewerage, and drainage, $7,000.

For roads, walks, and bridges, $15,000.

For miscellaneous supplies, materials, and sundry incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $5,000.

For current expenses, including the maintenance of collections, food supplies, salaries of all necessary employes, and the acquisition and transportation of specimens, $37,000.

SEC. 2. That the National Zoological Park is hereby placed under the direction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, who are authorized to transfer to it any living specimens, whether of animals or plants, now or hereafter in their charge, to accept gifts for the park at their discretion, in the name of the United States, to make exchanges of specimens, and to administer the said Zoological Park for the advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people.

SEC. 3. That the heads of Executive Departments of the Government are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be rendered all necessary and practicable aid to the said Regents in the acquisition of collections for the Zoological Park.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this bill now before the House for consideration, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to have it considered at this time. I think that as there is but one substantial amendment the bill can be disposed of in ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. The point of order is open at any time before consideration of the bill is begun.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the one half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Same page, line 7, strike out the words "the following sums of money" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to be drawn on their requisition and disbursed by the disbursing officer for said institution."

Same page, line 28, after the words "United States," insert the following: "and the District of Columbia."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the reading of these amendments may possibly be regarded as entering upon the consideration of the bill, and I think it is a bill that ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. I think it can be disposed of very promptly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this matter rather belongs to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and these little detached appropriation bills originating in the Senate are entirely contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I am not aware of any rule of the House which prohibits the Committee on Appropriations from reporting a bill or bills to provide for the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the sundry civil appropriation bill is one bill. This is a detached portion of it, in advance of the regular bill. This item is brought in here by itself, and if this practice is to be continued the appropriations will be scattered in every direction, and we shall have no sundry civil bill at all or shall not know what the bill is.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia, I wish to say that the committee have the same authority, under the rule, to report a bill providing for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, in whole or in part, that we have to report an urgent deficiency bill, and several of those bills have been already reported. The rule does not speak of a sundry civil bill and does not know of such a bill, but matters covering the sundry civil expenses of the Government are referred to the Committee on Appropriations and are privileged. I think this can be disposed of to the gentleman's satisfaction, upon the merits, in a very few minutes, because this appropriation ought to be made, if at all, early in the season, so that it can be utilized at the beginning of spring, so as to care for the animals already in possession.

Mr. BLOUNT. If it does not pass at all I do not think that there will be any serious trouble. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will insist on the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is one objection to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has not addressed himself; that is, that this is an appropriation bill originating in the Senate. I remember the time when the gentleman from Illinois fought strenuously and properly against the origination of appropriation bills in the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that where there is an origination of a great appropriation bill in the Senate that point may well be made. Not that there is any express inhibition in the Constitution to the origination of appropriation bills in the Senate, but as a matter of practice such bills have nearly always originated in the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is a fact, if I remember correctly, that a document now becoming extinct, a document known as the Constitution of the United States, has been construed to mean that appropriation bills should originate in the House.

Mr. CANNON. Oh! The Constitution is silent on that matter. I hope, however, that this bill will not get wound up in the Constitution, because it is a matter that ought to receive prompt attention.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, it is very certain to get wound up in Committee of the Whole, if nowhere else.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. If the gentleman makes that point of order I think it is good.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, I make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has already made it, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

DUPLICATE OF A LOST CHECK.

Mr. LESTER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, a bill directing the issue of a duplicate of a lost check drawn by Owen Carter in favor of Charles C. Ely.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had better have the regular order. Honors are easy now between the two sides. However, I do not object. There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that O. M. Carter, Lieutenant Engineer Corps, United States Army, did, on the 3d day of July, 1889, issue a check, numbered 139164, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of Charles C. Ely, for the sum of $3,929.95, in payment of contract work done at Brunswick, Ga., which check is alleged to have been lost in transmission through the United States mails by Benjamin D. Greene, of Philadelphia, Pa., to whom it had been assigned; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 16, 1885, amending section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing United States disbursing officers and agents to issue duplicates of lost checks apply only to checks drawn for $2,500 or less: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said Lieut. O. M. Carter be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue a duplicate of said original check, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman whether this matter has been referred to the Treasury Department or not?

Mr. LESTER, of Georgia. Yes, sir. The bill was drawn there.

Mr. HOLMAN. And was there a report received from the Treasury Department?

Mr. LESTER, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that that report from the Treasury Department be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. CABLTON) is as follows:

The Committee on Claims have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6845) directing the issue of a lost check, drawn by O. M. Carter, Lieutenant United States Engineer Corps, in favor of Charles C. Ely, which they report back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Your committee herewith attach the correspondence between the Treasury Department and the parties at interest, also a certified statement from Lieut. O. M. Carter, stating that he did issue check No. 139164 in favor of Charles C. Ely, which they ask shall be made a part of their report.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1890.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 22d instant, stating that on July 3, 1889, Lieut. O. M. Carter, Engineer Corps, United States Army, issued his check, No. 139164, on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of Charles C. Ely, for $3,929.95, in payment of contract work done at Brunswick, Ga.; that said check was indorsed by the payee payable to your order; that you sent it to the American Exchange National Bank of New York City for collection and deposit to your credit, and that said check was lost in the mails. You asked to be furnished with a form of act of Congress necessary to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate of said lost check, it being for a larger sum than is authorized by law.

In reply I have to inform you that only the drawer of an original check can issue a duplicate thereof, and the act of Congress should instruct Lieutenant Carter to issue a duplicate of said lost check.

I inclose herewith a draught of a bill which it is thought will answer your purpose; also a blank bond of indemnity which may be adapted to your purpose after authority has been given by Congress for the issue of a duplicate check.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. S. BATCHELLER, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. B. D. GREENE,
1905 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS AND FORTIFICATIONS
IN GEORGIA AND NORTHEASTERN FLORIDA,
Savannah, Ga., January 22, 1890.

I certify that I issued check No. 139164 on the United States assistant treasurer at New York, N. Y., for $3,929.95 to the order of Charles C. Ely, in payment for jetty work done in Brunswick Harbor, Georgia, and, so far as I am informed by the assistant treasurer at New York, this check has not yet been presented for payment. This check was dated Savannah, Ga., July 3, 1889.

O. M. CARTER,

First Lieut., Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LESTER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER SAN BENITO.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ask the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2501) to provide for an American register for a steamer to be named San Benito, owned by a corporation in California.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Kimberley, owned at the port of San Francisco, State of California, by the Pacific Improvement Company, a corporation of said State of California, and now rebuilding in the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States, under the name of San Benito.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to authorize and direct the inspection of said steam-vessel, steam-boiler, steam-pipes, and the appurtenances of said boiler, and cause to be granted the proper and usual certificate issued to steam-vessels of the merchant marine without reference to the fact that said steam-boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances were not constructed pursuant to the laws of the United States, and were not constructed of iron stamped pursuant to said laws; and the tests to be applied on the inspection of said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances will be the same in all respects as to strength and safety as are required in the inspection of boilers constructed in the United States for marine purposes, save that the fact that said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances, not being constructed pursuant to the requirements of the laws of the United States and are of unstamped iron, shall not be an obstacle to the granting of the usual certificate if said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances are found to be of sufficient strength and safety.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a bill providing an American register for a foreign-built ship.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; it is to grant an American register to a foreign-built ship upon which there has been expended by citizens of the United States $80,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is there any objection to making the bill general, so as to allow an American register to all foreign-built ships owned by Americans? [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not authorized by my committee to enter into that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. I must object to the consideration of this bill unless the report be read.

Mr. BINGHAM. The report is short, but it is at the same time a full one.

The report (by Mr. BINGHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2501) to provide for an American register for a steamer to be named San Benito, owned by a corporation in the State of California, submit the following report:

The committee direct a favorable report upon Senate bill 2501, and submit that the language of the bill is identical with House bill No. 6411, and herewith make the following statement of facts, and recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

The steamer Kimberley was built at Point Glasgow, Scotland, in 1884, for English owners.

On December 1, 1887, on a voyage from New Orleans to Liverpool (via Norfolk for coal), being then insured for $200,000, the ship was wrecked on Curruck Beach on the coast of North Carolina, where she remained for nearly two months exposed to the storms of the North Atlantic, pounding and twisting badly. At the end of January, 1888, she was got off and taken to Norfolk. Salvage on vessel and cargo was fixed at $100,000. At Norfolk the ship was kept afloat by continual pumping by steam-pumps of the Baker Salvage Company, at an additional expense of about $10,000.

In May, 1888, she was towed to New York, where she was put in dock at the Erie Basin and carefully surveyed, and where temporary repairs were made, all at a cost of upwards of $15,000.

The vessel was abandoned by her owners, and the underwriters settled for her as a total loss.

She lay in the Erie Basin until the latter part of 1889 when she was purchased by citizens of the United States for $80,000, which, however, included upwards of $45,000 for salvage expenses which had been incurred in saving and preserving the vessel, cost of temporary repairing, etc., leaving less than $35,000 for value of the ship.

Her British register has been surrendered at her port of English registry and canceled.

After her purchase by citizens of the United States she was towed to the yards of the Chesapeake Dry Dock and Construction Company at Newport News, Va., where she is now being rebuilt for her American purchasers, and the estimated cost of her repairs will amount to upwards of $60,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] to explain the necessity for some provisions in this bill which seem to be exceptional in their character.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill is literally, in every word, the form that is always adopted for giving an American register to foreign-built vessels.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Including the provisions as to the boiler?

Mr. BINGHAM. The point as to the boilers is simply that they have not been built from American iron, but, so far as inspection is concerned, they must pass inspection under our law.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. That is provided in the bill?
Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; that is absolutely required.
The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAMPA, FLA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House a bill from the Senate, which is in substance the same as a House bill already reported by the Committee on Commerce of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2447) to extend to Tampa, Fla., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1890, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Tampa, Fla.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Commerce to ask the consideration of this bill at the present time. A House bill exactly similar in its provisions has been favorably reported by that committee.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 6421, similar in substance to the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at 12 minutes after 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to make a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR RAILROAD THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, when business was last transacted under this order the Committee on Indian Affairs had under consideration a bill which now comes up as unfinished business, the bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory; and for other purposes. An amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] was adopted; and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], stating that he had voted upon the amendment under a misapprehension, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to reconsider. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of section 2, after the word "land," strike out the word "two" and insert "one."

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. As will be observed, Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to strike out "250 feet" and insert "150 feet." The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], whom I do not now see in his seat, moved to reconsider the vote adopting the amendment.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, by the terms of this bill as amended—

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] having moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may be permitted to make his statement and I would like to follow him in a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana can withdraw his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CHEADLE. I withdraw that motion temporarily, in order that a statement of this matter may be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, by the terms of the bill as amended this railway is granted right of way, 100 feet in width, through this Territory. The bill as originally reported provided that for depot purposes, etc., there should be granted to the company in every 10 miles of their line 250 feet additional for a distance of 3,000 feet. The amendment which was adopted on my motion reduced this additional grant at stations from 250 feet, exclusive of the right of way, to 150 feet.

If the amendment already adopted should be retained this company will have at every station for a distance of 3,000 feet a strip of land 250 feet in width, which I am sure will be sufficient for the transaction of business. It is certainly as much as great lines of railway have throughout the State of Indiana, and I am satisfied it is not less than the average width enjoyed by great trunk-lines of railroad through sections of country much more densely populated than this Indian Territory, and where there is transacted a business many times greater than what will be transacted in this Territory for many years to come. It does seem to me that, in giving for right of way and depot purposes, every 10 miles, a strip of land 250 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length, we make sufficient grant of the public domain for these purposes. I hope that the motion to reconsider will be rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have passed several bills granting to different railroad companies right of way through the Indian Territory, and in every instance we have granted for every 10 miles of the line a strip of ground 3,000 feet in length and 300 feet in width, for cattle yards, stations, depots, and other railroad purposes. This has been our grant, in addition to the right of way, to all companies except this company. By the bill as reported this company is restricted to a width of 250 feet, being less than has been granted in this particular to any other company. The requirement is that the land thus granted shall not be used for anything else than railroad purposes, though the company may permit its employees to reside upon the land while in their employ. The land under the requirements of the bill is to be used for cattle-yards, stations, and other railroad purposes, and for such purposes alone. There is no reason, so far as I know, why this company should be treated differently from other companies. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] will verify the statement I have made on this subject.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this amendment restricting the grant to this company for depot purposes, etc., as proposed in the bill, was offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE]. I hope the House on reconsideration will vote down the amendment. I know that the gentleman has offered it in good faith; but I trust that the House will not discriminate against this company; for, as my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], has said, it has been the almost universal rule, sanctioned by the reports of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the action of the House, to grant to these railroad companies for depot purposes, etc., in addition to the ordinary right of way, a strip of land 300 feet in breadth by 3,000 in length for every 10 miles of road. As my colleague has said, this bill is restricted to 250 feet instead of 300 feet heretofore given to other roads, and I hope the House will not reduce it, and from this fact that it is a privilege and they can not use it for any other purpose. If it turns out to be too much, they can not divert it, and it is better with a view to the commerce of the country to give more than less.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I think the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] is the right one. The only reason given for this provision in the bill is that we have heretofore given greater privileges to other companies. The fact is these companies are becoming too numerous and are taking too much of the land of this Territory. What does it amount to? In every 10 miles three-fifths of a mile in length and 250 feet in width are given to these railroad companies virtually, because the price at which they are to purchase the land is equivalent to an additional 250 feet to the right of way.

Mr. PERKINS. No.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, even if it is not 250 feet in addition to the right of way it is objectionable. They can not need any more than that provided for in the motion as amended. The motion is already amended and the House has already passed upon it. The question now is, shall that action of the House heretofore taken be reconsidered as to this company? I for one object to reconsidering; and now, Mr. Speaker, I make the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PEEL. I should like to be heard for a moment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Division.

A MEMBER. What is this for?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is to give a railroad lands; that is what it is for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, yeas 31.

Mr. CHEADLE. I make the point there is no quorum.

Mr. PEEL. You are not going to filibuster?

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not think it should prevail. If the majority wishes to take the responsibility, let them do so.

The SPEAKER (after counting the House). There are 141 members present—not a quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eight members are present, which is more than a quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 72.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. CHEADLE's amendment, which was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "two" and insert "one;" so it will read: "A strip of land 150 feet in length."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, by this bill we have already virtually granted to this railroad company a right of way of 100 feet in width throughout the Indian Territory. The proposition now pending is to permit them to take and use a strip of land not exceeding 250 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to the right of way, for station and depot purposes, for every 10 miles of the road. The bill, as it was originally presented to this House, proposed to grant virtually to this railway company, every 10 miles, a strip of land 400 feet wide and 3,000 feet long for the purpose of railway stations. It is asserted by the advocates of the proposition that a necessity exists for this additional land to enable the railway company to do what? Why, I answer, to let out the privilege to their employes.

Now, it is not possible that there will be a sufficient number of employes in the railway company's service to need one-half of this grant of land, three-fifths of a mile in length every 10 miles, 400 feet in width, which is the proposition of the bill. Gentlemen favorable to this measure say, "Why, we have done so with respect to every other bill that has been introduced and passed the House granting the right of way through this Territory." But, Mr. Speaker, it is that very fact that awakens my opposition. Almost every week in this House a bill comes in granting a right of way to some railroad corporation through this Indian Territory, and giving this amount of land, which is not now a part of the public domain, but which may, by purchase from these Indians, become a part of the public domain, and as such become subject to the provisions of the homestead laws and homestead entry to be disposed of by the United States for the benefit of the people of the United States. But if this bill stands as now drawn there will be so much land withdrawn from the chance of homestead entry.

I feel sure that the amount of land covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] reducing this grant, so that the proposition will be to grant them, in addition to the right of way, 150 feet in width every 10 miles for a distance of 3,000 feet for station purposes, instead of 400 feet, will be amply sufficient. Let us cease granting so much land to these railroad companies. Let us make a precedent now more favorable to the people of this country than the precedents which gentlemen plead in favor of the passage of the bill as it stands. Let us reduce the amount in this bill that has heretofore been granted to other companies, and apply the same rule hereafter to the other companies that will come, and there are many of them now waiting with bills in the committee. There are other bills which will come in from time to time for similar purposes, and I suggest that it is time that we were making a precedent reducing the amount of land to be turned over to these corporations for railroad purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, a word in response to the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman is somewhat mistaken in one particular at least in his discussion. By consent of the committee the right of way to this railroad company has been reduced to 100 feet.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I used that figure in my illustration, though I did not say that it had been reduced.

Mr. PERKINS. It has been reduced to 100 feet in width, and this provision gives to the company the right to acquire a strip of adjacent land each 10 miles, in addition to the right of way, for depot purposes, cattle-yards, ware-houses, and other necessary equipments of a station, 250 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is in addition to the right of way?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir. Now, what is the reason for this additional grant? It is necessary because in that Territory not a foot of land can be purchased by the railroad company. It is true that at every station along the line this amount of land may not be needed; but the company have no right and no opportunity to acquire ground for such purpose except as they get it under the provision of this bill. The Indians themselves can not authorize the lease or sale of a foot of the lands; and hence it is necessary that we make this provision in the bill for depots, side tracks, and such necessary purposes.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas, for I have not had an opportunity to run over the bill, if it is not provided in the bill that wherever they take the additional land allowed they are required to pay the Indians for it by the very terms of the bill itself?

Mr. PERKINS. The general provisions of the bill are such as to require full compensation to the Indians for the land.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What do you mean by full compensation? How much per acre?

Mr. PERKINS. Appraisers are to be appointed, as provided in the bill, and their duties are to appraise the damages as well as the right of way; and in addition the company are to pay the Indians each year for the use of the ground. Then, besides, there is this provision in the bill:

And provided further, That no parts of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purpose only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone line; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to said nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do you suppose that any railway company will let any part of the lands revert?

Mr. PERKINS. It necessarily reverts by the very provision of the bill, unless it is used for the purposes specified in the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas be kind enough to state to the committee what are the termini of this road; where does it begin and end?

Mr. PERKINS. The road begins on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas in Cherokee County, near the center of the county, and by way of Talequah to Fort Smith, in Arkansas.

Mr. HOOKER. Immediately across the Indian Territory?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; I will say that the road starts at Pittsburgh, in Kansas, and runs to Fort Smith, Ark.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman state whether any portion of the road goes through that portion of the country proposed to be established as the Territory of Oklahoma?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; no part of it.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the subject-matter of this bill generally, especially in regard to that portion of it which is proposed by section 2 to grant certain rights of way to this railroad company.

The SPEAKER. The House is now considering the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which reduces the amount of land granted for station purposes.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I will address myself to that amendment.

As I understand it, there are only two lines of railway which are to be constructed through the Indian Territory, or Indian Nation. These Indians have agreed with the Government of the United States, under the treaty of 1866, that there shall be one railroad built north and south and one east and west through the Indian Territory, and any power on the part of the Congress of the United States to grant the right of way to any railroad company is predicated solely upon the rights conceded by the treaty stipulations to which I have referred between the United States Government and the Indian tribes.

I refer to article 11 of the treaty of 1866, which makes this provision; and while it is true it is with one of these tribes it respects all:

The Cherokee Nation hereby grant a right of way not exceeding 200 feet wide, except at stations, switches, water stations, or crossing of rivers, where more may be indispensable to the full enjoyment of the franchise herein granted; and then only 200 additional feet shall be taken, and only for such length as may be absolutely necessary, through all their lands, to any company or corporation which shall be duly authorized by Congress to construct a railroad from any point north to any point south and from any point east to any point west of and which may pass through the Cherokee Nation. Said company or corporation, and their employes and laborers, while constructing and repairing the same and in operating said road or roads, including all necessary agents on the line, at stations, switches, water-tanks, and all others necessary to the successful operation of a railroad, shall be protected in the discharge of their duties, and at all times subject to the Indian intercourse laws now or which may hereafter be enacted and be in force in the Cherokee Nation.

The provisions of this treaty make a grant to two railways, grants that the Government of the United States may concede by virtue of enactments passed by the Congress of the United States. Understand that these east and west and north and south railroads have already been constructed, and this railway is an additional railway proceeding not north and south or east and west, but is an entirely different and independent railway, not alluded to in any treaty with the Cherokees or any other of the five semi-civilized tribes. It is an effort, Mr. Speaker, in this bill to take lands which do not belong to the United States, under the idea that the Government possesses the right of eminent domain over them.

They are not public lands of the United States, but are lands which by solemn compact you have settled on these Indians. It was thought necessary to construct these two lines of road, one running north and south, the other east and west, and in order to do so to make a treaty with the Indian tribes to get that right. If that power is exhausted, then there is no power to get any other road through the lands belonging to the five semi-civilized tribes except by their consent.

I say there is no power to grant a right to any corporation proposing to construct a line of railway which shall run through lands belonging to these civilized Indians except to acquire the right by treaty. You did acquire that right to construct these roads under the eleventh section of the treaty of 1866, to construct a road north and south and a road east and west, because it was important for military and other purposes that the Government of the United States should have the power to traverse the Indian Territory with their troops, munitions, provisions, and stores of every description. Therefore they contracted with the Indian tribes for the construction of a road north and south and for the construction of a road east and west; but they have not contracted with the Indian tribes in regard to this road.

If you may pass this bill, then you can make a perfect network of railroads all through the Indian lands which do not belong to you, without the consent of the Indian tribes. When this bill was up before I offered an amendment providing that the consent of the Indians be first obtained, and when that portion of the bill is reached I shall call attention to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PEEL and Mr. ROGERS rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the observations just made by my courtly friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] have been made perhaps to the House in the last three or four years twenty times. The House has uniformly conceded the right of the Government of the United States to exercise the right of eminent domain over lands belonging to the five civilized tribes, and it would be a strange construction if they did not hold that they had the right to exercise it over every foot of American soil wherever for governmental purposes it was thought necessary to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] properly stated the necessity for this action. In the Indian Territory the tribes do not undertake to exercise the right of eminent domain at all. There never has been a law either of that sort or one which had power to do it. They have a sort of quasi-government, but not a sovereignty in its full sense, as that of the Federal Government, but a government just such as there is in the Territories of this Union and in the District of Columbia. So I take it that they have no power to exercise the right of eminent domain. If, therefore, these railroad companies at any point between the termini of this road find it necessary in the construction of the road to use more land than conceded to be used by the terms of this bill, they must come to Congress for a new enactment. It does not follow that, because Congress authorizes the road to use this land every 10 miles, they will use it, and it is not presumed that they will, because railroad companies, like private individuals, buy what they want and do not take what they do not want if they know that they have to pay for it. Now, by the terms of this bill ample provision is made for the adjustment and settlement of any controversy between the tribes or between any individual of the tribes and this road: First, by the appointment of arbitrators, one to be appointed by the President, one to be appointed by the chief of the tribe, and the third, I believe, by the Federal court. If they fail by amicable process and if they can not come to terms with the tribe of Indians and get their consent for the sale of the land, then appeal is made to these arbitrators. After the arbitrators have made their award, if either party is not satisfied, it can go to the Federal court; there a jury is impaneled, testimony adduced, and this property condemned for the specific purpose embraced in this bill. Another part of this bill provides that the company shall deposit twice the value of the land before they begin the construction of the road. Finally, when the decree is obtained, this money is appropriated to the payment and is turned over to the proper authorities. That is all that can be asked by any Government of any of its citizens, and why should we not exercise the power of eminent domain through land belonging to these five civilized tribes the same as we exercise that power as to the land belonging to any private individual in any State or Territory in the Union?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Because we have not agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a mistake. We have heard that matter discussed before. There is no treaty provision with the five civilized tribes that inhibits the Congress from exercising the right of eminent domain, and I hold that you could construct a thousand railroads through that Territory if it was deemed fit to do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ROGERS. In a moment. Gentlemen argue that, because by the terms of the treaty provision was granted to build two roads through there, because we have done so by negotiation in those instances, it can not now be done without negotiation; that the naming of one road excludes all the others—expressio unius est exclusio alterius. That has no application at all. Because a former Congress has seen fit to make that provision it does not therefore follow that Congress has any power by that to put any limit on its sovereignty, certainly not in dealing with a people who have only a quasi-government and whose rights are given under laws of Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not the bill by me, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] no doubt understands the provisions of it better than I do, but what I desire to ask him is whether the railroad company, as a condition of the condemnation of the property—for that is what I call it—is compelled to show in some way the necessity of it for the operations of the railroad line?

Mr. ROGERS. Not by the express terms of the bill, I think, but that is the law of all condemnation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The law is that they must prove upon the threshold that they need the property for the operations of their line?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly; that is a condition precedent to all condemnation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But it is not contained in this bill in any way.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the opinion of the gentleman from Arkansas is that that would be required now, as a condition of the exercise of this power of condemnation?

Mr. ROGERS. I have no sort of question of that. Upon the contrary, Mr. Speaker, no railroad company can go into a State, under any organization, and condemn a thousand acres of land, or any quantity of land, unless they can show the necessity for it. Suppose a railroad company should undertake to go inside the limits of a town, or near to a town, and ask, for the purposes of a depot and necessary sidings, switches, and so forth, the condemnation of a thousand acres of land, does anybody suppose that any court would grant such a decree? It is absurd. Upon the very threshold they must show the necessity for it.

Mr. COBB. Where will they show it?

Mr. ROGERS. In the Federal court at Fort Smith or at Muscogee. The terms of the bill provide for that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Where do they provide for it?

Mr. ROGERS. On page 4, line 36, there is this provision:

Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by the original petition to the United States district court at Muscogee, Indian Territory, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition according to the laws of the State of Kansas provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railroad company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with construction of the railroad.

Mr. COBB. Does not that simply refer to the amount of damages which the railroad company is to pay, and not to the extent of the condemnation?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly not. It embraces all.

Mr. COBB. Is it not true that the act of Congress passed here is itself a condemnation of the lands named in the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. Not at all, Mr. Speaker; because, by the very terms of this bill, before they can take one foot of these lands at any point in the Indian Territory they have got to acquire it, first, by referees; second, by negotiation; and, third, by condemnation.

Mr. COBB. You did not read that part of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I had not time to read the whole of the bill; the gentleman should read it for himself; but everything that I have stated is contained in it. So, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new about this matter at all. If the railroad company see fit, at some little way station along the road, to undertake to condemn a piece of land 3,000 feet in length and 130 yards in width, if they have no use for it they will not be allowed by the court to make the condemnation. Before they can make any condemnation at all they must first show the necessity, and so all along the line.

Now, one word more. This road passes by the Cherokee capital, where there are institutions of learning, where there is a court-house, where they have the capitol building. It is one of the most important points in the entire Territory, and I know of my personal knowledge that those people have wanted railway communication there for years, and my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is a decade behind the people of the Indian Territory on this question of the construction of railroads.

Again, Mr. Speaker, another observation. There have been various charters granted for railroads through that Territory, and this bill, as I understand, because I never examined it until this morning, conforms to what has now become the stereotyped bill of this House for such purposes, which was produced after careful investigation, consideration, and debate of every proposition contained in it.

Now, why make fish of one and flesh of another? This form of bill,

I believe, was settled in the Forty-eighth Congress, and has been applied to every railroad charter of this kind granted since; so that, if practice, debate, deliberate judgment, calm consideration of any question settles it, the questions involved in these railroad charters must be regarded as settled. I myself know of no sound principle that would not dictate the treating of this Territory in this respect just as you would treat any other portion of the country. It would have been better, infinitely better, perhaps, if in the beginning, ten years ago, we had passed a general law giving to all parties the right to go in there upon the terms embraced in this bill. Certainly we ought not to continue to debate this question over and over again, Congress after Congress, session after session, for a quarter of a century. We ought now to regard it as settled.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope that will be voted down, in order that we may have an opportunity for discussion, because I want to reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 23.

Mr. HOOKER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER, having ascertained by count that there were only 140 members in the Hall, announced that there was not a quorum present.

Mr. PERKINS. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and ninety members, being more than a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the demand of the gentleman from Kansas for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. CHEADLE was rejected.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out, in line 5 of section 2, the words "and fifty."

The SPEAKER. There is already pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

"Provided, That the consent of the Indian tribe or tribes through whose reservation this railroad shall pass shall first be had and obtained."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to this amendment. Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word on the amendment. It has been said by my friend from Arkansas, in discussing a question with regard to the very point presented by this amendment, that the Indian tribes themselves are in favor of this grant of land to this railroad. If that be the fact, Mr. Speaker, why should there be any objection to this provision for obtaining the consent of the Indians to the passage of this road through their Territory? I may be a decade behind other gentlemen on this question, but it seems to me a very simple proposition that if the Indians are in favor of having this line of railway constructed through their Territory, if they believe that when permission is granted the road will be constructed and they will be benefited, it is but fair that we should give them the opportunity to say so.

I have just read a section of the treaty of 1866 with one of these tribes—and I believe a similar stipulation will be found in all these treaties—providing that a certain railroad may be constructed; and this provision shows that so far from the legislation of the country having demonstrated, as contended by my friend from Arkansas, that the right of eminent domain has always been asserted by the United States over this territory as over any part of the public domain, it was not considered that there was sufficient power and authority on the part of the Government of the United States, under the right of eminent domain, to force railroads through the Indian Territory without the consent of the Indians. Else why these provisions in the treaty? And, if it was necessary to make a treaty with the Indians in order to obtain the right to construct a railroad north and south and a railroad east and west through the Indian Territory, how is it that now you appeal to another and a different principle, ignoring the necessity of obtaining the consent of the five semi-civilized tribes? If it be true, as contended, that the Indians are favorable to this measure, why should we not pursue the course that the Government has always pursued with regard to the Indian tribes when it was desired to construct a railroad through their Territory?

In making the treaty of 1866 with the Cherokees and the other civilized tribes the Government conceded by solemn treaty stipulations that the right to this soil existed in the Indians themselves, and that in order to run a railroad north and south through the Territory and another east and west it was necessary that the consent of the Indians should be obtained, and obtained in the most solemn form, the form in which one governmental power deals with another, the form of a treaty, with commissioners to agree upon its terms. If this was necessary with regard to one railroad, why is it not necessary with reference to all?

But if the theory of my friend from Arkansas is correct, that under the right of eminent domain the Government of the United States may at its own option construct any number of railways through the Indian Territory, then there is no necessity for having any treaty stipulation with them on this subject. But the Government must have conceded the idea there was necessity for treaty stipulation, or they would not have made treaties in reference to the lines of railroad referred to.

When you come to look at the subsequent provisions of this act, the idea the Government of the United States must treat with them as people having possession of these lands before they can run lines of railroad through the Territory, you will find embraced in the fifth section, and though we have not yet reached it, you will find there the idea prevails that the right of these Indians to this land must be conceded, because in that section 5 of the bill it is provided:

That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act, for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payment to be made in installments of $1,250 as each working section of 25 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose land said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of the maps of definite location, as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupants of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same conditions, terms, and requirements as therein provided.

Section 5 looks to the fact that the assent of these tribes must be obtained, and therefore I say if it were necessary to make treaties to run a line through this Territory from north to south and another from east to west, when we wish to construct another road you must get the power in the one case as you got it in the other, by the consent of these tribes.

In section 5 you concede you must pay a certain price. You say these railroads are necessary for the development of the Territory, and, if that is conceded, why not then put this provision in the bill? I have always understood these five civilized tribes are an intelligent people and capable of taking care of their own affairs. And if they are and we have to get their consent to this railroad on the terms proposed, then it is the easier way than by exercising the right of eminent domain, which has not been exercised towards roads heretofore constructed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I raise the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman raises that point it will have to be overruled.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7619) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Before that is done I hope the gentleman will allow the previous question to be seconded.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I must insist on my motion; and I wish, before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that all general debate in committee be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me inquire whether there is anything in the way of new legislation contained in the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is nothing in the bill in the way of new legislation. I move that the general debate be limited to ten minutes. The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. CUTCHEON's motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the bill (H. R. 7619) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, and by order of the House all general debate has been limited to ten minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not aware, Mr. Chairman, that any member of the committee desires to engage in general debate, and before asking that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment I will merely say that this annual appropriation bill for the support of the Army carries $24,458,220.52. The bill for 1889-'90 carried $23,824,615.73, and the increase arises almost entirely under the heading of "Pay of the Army," and the increase under the operation of law arises from the greater longevity of the officers in the service and increase in the retired-list.

There is allowed under the head of "Pay of the Army" an item of $12,200 more than was carried in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. ROGERS. May I be permitted to interrupt the gentleman for a moment, if it will not disturb him?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. You stated, I believe, with some little hesitation, or at least I inferred from your answer you had some doubt, that there was no new legislation in this bill. I want to know in that connection what is meant by the statement on page 2 of the report, which refers to the clerks for the inspectors-general?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will take pleasure in explaining to the gentleman. Under the head of pay of the Army, eleven clerks are provided for inspectors-general at a compensation of $1,200 each per annum. These clerks are to be provided for these officers in the field. It is done, I will state to the gentleman, in accordance with the recommendations made by the Secretary of War. It does not create any new offices, but simply provides an additional appropriation, so that each of the inspectors-general at the headquarters of the three great divisions of the Army and the headquarters of the departments may have a clerk to accompany him in the field. The duties of these positions are at present performed, I will state to the gentleman, by detailed men—men detailed from other portions of the Army—and the Inspector-General thought, and the Secretary of War also, that this force should be entirely independent of the Army for this reason: The Inspector-General is required to inspect every other division of the Army, the disbursing officers, the Quartermaster's Department, the Medical and Engineer Departments, Ordnance, and in fact every other part of the Army, and it is believed to be a poor policy to borrow clerks from the department he is required to inspect to aid him in the performance of that duty. He therefore asks that an additional appropriation be made to attach the clerks permanently to the inspectors' department and to be used exclusively for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand the effect of that is to restore a dozen enlisted men to the Army and to put in their places a dozen clerks. Now, is there any such law or any provision of law that warrants it?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is to restore eleven men who are now detailed with the inspectors-general to the Army and put in their places a dozen men who are shown to be competent to perform the clerical duty required.

Mr. ROGERS. But the question is whether there is a provision of law to warrant this.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When that paragraph is reached, of course the gentleman will have the right to make the point. I can only say that the committee believed it to be in the interest of economy to allow the request in part, and while it does make an additional appropriation I do not think it changes at all the existing law.

The Secretary of War, I will state, submitted an estimate for eleven clerks for the inspectors-general at a salary of $1,400 each, and for eleven messengers; but the committee in considering the matter acceded only in part to this request, and granted eleven permanent clerks for the inspectors-general at $1,200 each, and we believe, as I have said, that it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the proviso found on page 22 of the bill in the following words:

Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies not exceeding in value the sum of $200.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is the existing law.

Mr. SAYERS. It occurs to me that this provision is a change of the existing law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, sir; this is a provision of the existing law, word for word.

Mr. SAYERS. I think not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. You will find it in the last appropriation bill and in the last but one.

Mr. SAYERS. I know it changes existing law as it appears in the statutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman will find it in the last appropriation bill, and I will call his attention—

Mr. SAYERS. I do not question the gentleman's statement. I am satisfied with what he says.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is word for word the existing law.

I will complete, Mr. Chairman, the statement I was about to make by saying that in the Subsistence Department no change whatever was made. Under the head of Quartermaster's Department an additional amount is appropriated under the head of barracks and quarters, which will be explained when we reach that provision. I will state, however, that there is an apparent increase of $55,000 over the last bill for this purpose; but in reality no increase at all is made, because that sum was the exact amount appropriated in the last general deficiency bill for the same purpose.

The committee recommend an appropriation of $100,000 for buildings for garrison purposes at the different military posts, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War. The committee has also recommended an appropriation for the enlargement of the cavalry post at Fort Myer, in Virginia, and we recommend for this purpose the appropriation of $32,600. This cavalry post of Fort Myer is the only one east of the Mississippi River. At present it has a capacity of but two companies, but it is designed to increase that to four companies, and the amount appropriated will allow the erection simply of the barracks and stables, leaving the other necessary buildings to be provided for in future appropriation bills.

An allowance is also made of $16,500—a new item—for additional land needed for a rifle-range at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, Ga. In the Medical Department there is no change. In the Engineer Department there is a reduction of $1,500, and no other change. In the Ordnance Department the committee recommend an appropriation of $14,920 for the procurement of four mounted guns, with the necessary equipments therefor. This is a new item, but not a new class of expenditures.

The committee have also recommended the sum of $180,135 for field batteries—light field batteries—with their carriages and equipments. There will probably be a point of order in regard to that when it is reached in the bill, which may then be discussed. As I understand, the gentleman in charge of the fortifications bill claims that it should go properly to that committee. I desire to be entirely frank with the committee in regard to it, and will say that in the Book of Estimates this is carried under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense." But being for the equipment of light batteries in the field, for troops, the committee felt it their duty to lay it before the House for its action. In conclusion I will state, Mr. Chairman, that omitting the item to which I have just referred, embodying $180,135 of expenditure, the bill would present a reduction of $38,000 from the bill of last year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment and debate, under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, the time fixed for general discussion has expired; and the Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR PAY OF THE GENERAL STAFF.

Adjutant-General's Department: For pay of the officers in the Adjutant-General's Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $52,500.

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $16,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment at this point. At the end of the Adjutant-General's Department I think is the place where I ought to offer it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will hear the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 24, page 2, add the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War to complete the series of maps now in progress of the campaign for and battles about Chattanooga, including the field survey and office expenses, $3,000."

Mr. CUTCHEON. As this relates entirely to the pay of the Army, I would request the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his amendment for the present, and to offer it at a later stage of the bill, where it will come in more properly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. At the suggestion of the gentleman, I will withdraw the amendment; but I would like the gentleman from Michigan (the chairman of the committee) to state where it ought to be offered.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will indicate that to the gentleman before we reach the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of not exceeding thirty-eight paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each; not exceeding thirty paymasters' messengers, and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks; in all, $82,087.20: Provided, That the maximum sum to be allowed paymasters' clerks and contract surgeons when traveling on duty shall be 4 cents per mile, and, in addition thereto, when transportation can not be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of same actually paid by them, exclusive of parlor-car fare and transfers.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, by direction of the committee, in the proviso of this section, which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 21, strike out the word "paymasters'" before the word "clerks," and after the word "clerks," in the same line, insert "in the Pay and Inspector-General's Department;" making it read as follows:

"Provided, That the maximum sum to be allowed clerks in the Pay and Inspector-General's Department and contract surgeons," etc.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to ask the gentleman if that excludes paymasters' clerks?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not at all. It is for clerks of the Pay and Inspector-General's Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of witnesses attending upon courts-martial and courts of inquiry, $3,407.

Mr. CUTCHEON. By direction of the committee I offer the following amendment, to come in at line 3, page 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, before the word "witnesses," insert the words "reporters and;" to make it read as follows:

"For compensation of reporters and witnesses attending upon courts-martial and courts of inquiry, $3,407."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings, and so forth, in Washington, District of Columbia, $1,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that he strike out the words "and so forth," in line 7. They ought not to be in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection, and will move to strike out the words "and so forth," in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is a customary appropriation?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is. One word in explanation, Mr. Chairman. This item in the last bill was $500, but since that there has been a change made in the grade of the officer by the provisions of law.

The officer who performs the duty of taking charge of the public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia is to have the pay and allowance of a colonel; and in accordance with that it became necessary, on account of Major Ernst not having the same grade as his predecessor, to make an additional appropriation of $500. It would have come in the deficiency bill if not made here.

The Clerk again proceeded to read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Before passing that, I suggest that this was copied from the last appropriation bill, and as we have stricken out the words "and so forth" in line 7, I think the words "and grounds" should be inserted in the place of "and so forth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the pay of a clerk attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad, $1,500; and the officers detailed to obtain the same shall be entitled to mileage and transportation and also commutation of quarters while on this duty, as provided when on other duty.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan if the intention of this provision is to allow to each one of these officers sent abroad a clerk?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. I noticed in the papers the other day where several officers had been sent abroad to different countries, and my idea was to know whether this provision was intended to furnish each one of these officers with a clerk.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, sir; we have what are termed military attachés at five of the principal courts of Europe, whose business it is to observe the military operations and improvements in those countries, and operations of the armies generally, and report them to the Department at home. It is necessary to have a clerk (and I think there is some position of the kind in the War Department) whose business it is to collate, collect, and prepare for publication the reports so made.

Mr. SAYERS. While the gentleman is upon his feet, I want to ask him a general question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. How many additional clerks does the present bill provide for, including these clerks who are to take the place of enlisted soldiers?

Mr. CUTCHEON. None whatever. No new clerks except the eleven provided in the Inspector-General's Office to take the place of other clerks now there.

Mr. SAYERS. Were these other clerks enlisted soldiers?

Mr. CUTCHEON. They belong to what are known as general-service clerks.

Mr. SAYERS. What is done with these clerks?

Mr. CUTCHEON. They are returned to their proper department whence they have been borrowed, so to speak, by the Inspector-General.

Mr. SAYERS. Then these eleven clerks are additional to those that exist now.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose that is a fact. They are additional, and therefore we make an additional appropriation of $13,200.

Mr. LANHAM. It is made, however, on an estimate from the War Department.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, and the Inspector-General of the Army appeared before the committee and convinced us that these additional clerks were necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. I simply desired to know whether they were additional to the existing force or not; that was all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers when traveling on duty without troops, when authorized by law, $150,000: Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, exclusive of parlor-car fare and transfers: And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over any such railroads: And provided further, That the transportation furnished by the Quartermaster's Department to officers traveling without troops shall be limited to transportation in kind, not including sleeping or parlor car accommodations, over free roads, over bond-aided Pacific railroads, and by conveyance belonging to the said department.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this provision it allows officers traveling upon duty 4 cents a mile in addition to the amount they pay for transportation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. PETERS. The provision is this:

That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over any such railroads.

Now, of course, over a bond-aided railroad the transportation of such officers would be free, as I understand it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. Then there is a provision in the first part of the paragraph, as follows:

Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, 4 cents a mile is his subsistence allowance.

Mr. PETERS. In lieu of rations?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It used to be 8 cents a mile.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In lieu of everything. This is in the words of the existing law; not a change of a word has been made.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus, and repair and maintenance of the same, for heating barracks and quarters; of ranges and stoves for cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and offices, and for sales to officers; of forage in kind for horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, including its care and protection; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank-books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing division and department orders and reports, $2,675,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such case as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition: Provided further, That after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 11, line 15, after the word "dollars" insert: "Provided, That for the current fiscal year, and hereafter, there shall be included under the appropriation for regular supplies the necessary equipments of a bake-house to carry on post bakeries; also the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipments of the post schools; tableware and mess furniture for kitchen and mess halls; garden utensils and agricultural implements for post gardens; each and all for the use of enlisted men of the Army."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment until we can obtain some explanation of it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This does not change the appropriation at all, but is desired in order to make the bill comply with the new Army regulations of 1889. It has been transmitted by the Secretary of War in Executive Document 292, with the regulations referred to.

Mr. SAYERS. How much does that add to the expense?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not at all. It simply authorizes this expenditure for this purpose out of the general fund. That is all. It does not enlarge the appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: For postage; cost of telegrams on official business, received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, and store-houses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts; for expense of express to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains, where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the internment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts and on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employes to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, compensation of forage and wagon masters authorized by the act of July 5, 1838; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons; purchase of medicine for horses and mules, picket-ropes, blacksmiths' tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmiths' tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movement and operations of the Army, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $675,000. Provided, That $25,000 of the appropriation for incidental expenses, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be set aside for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at constant labor of not less than ten days in the Quartermaster's Department, but no such payment shall be made at any greater rate per day than is fixed by law for the class of persons employed at the work done therein.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information upon this subject. I notice in this a reference to cases where soldiers are in "constant labor." That is rather a peculiar expression, but I do not rise to criticize that. What I want to know is whether the committee have made any investigation to ascertain whether or not any part of the apparent or the real discontent among the soldiers of the Army has grown out of extra service to which they have been assigned not in the line of their regular duty.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We have made no special inquiry on that particular subject, but I think this matter of extra-duty pay, instead of being avoided, is rather sought by men in the Army. Where they are mechanics, for instance, and can labor upon some building that is going on, it is called "constant labor" as distinguished from mere police duty.

Mr. ROGERS. They are not, as I understand from this amendment, paid for that extra service at all, unless they work for ten days.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not less than ten days.

Mr. ROGERS. Is that construed, in its actual operation, as meaning ten consecutive days?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand that it is.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman think that it is a proper thing to allow an officer to detail a man to do extra work independent of his regular duties for nine days and pay him nothing?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman will remember that at the present time our Army is not overburdened with labor, and ordinarily such light duties as may be necessary about a post the enlisted men are detailed to perform, and the work is regarded as a portion of their duty.

Mr. ROGERS. Is not that open to very great abuse? Why might not an officer work a man nine days upon such labor and then let him off for a day, then work him again nine days and then let him rest for a day, and then work him nine days again, and so on?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I can only say that this is the long-established usage of the Army, and we have not undertaken to introduce any new legislation upon this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. And there are no complaints arising from that cause?

Mr. CUTCHEON. None have been made to us and none have come to our knowledge.

Mr. ROGERS. Well, I would ask the gentleman if the discontent in the Army has not excited sufficient public attention to justify the Committee on Military Affairs in making some inquiry with reference to that question, which it seems to me every day grows in importance.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We have been giving very careful and serious attention to the matter of desertions from the Army, and have reported a bill which is intended to reach and check that evil, but of course we could not put it upon this appropriation bill. In due time we shall ask the House to consider that bill, which we believe will greatly diminish the causes of discontent in the Army and greatly decrease desertions.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am much gratified to know that the Military Committee have had their attention enlisted in that direction, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For buildings for garrison purposes: For construction of or purchase of buildings at military posts for libraries, gymnasiums, amusement-rooms, canteens, etc., $100,000.

Mr. MORSE. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word of the paragraph just read.

Mr. Chairman, it would appear by the accompanying report, recommending an appropriation of $100,000 for canteens at the Army posts, that among the things that are to be sold at these "canteens" are beer and light wines and that this Government beer saloon may be connected with a library and reading-room, if not in the same room. I protest against this proposition to open drinking saloons at the Army posts and denounce it as an outrage against the temperance and christian people of this country. I denounce it as against the best and highest interests of the soldiers themselves. The report argues that the sale of light drinks to the soldiers would prove a temperance measure. The man who wrote that report and the Army officer who made this recommendation have not learned the A B C of temperance reform, and it seems to me as though, like Rip Van Winkle, they had waked up after a lapse of centuries.

The argument is contrary to science and experience. Beer and the lighter drinks are the devil's kindling wood for stronger drinks, and are the sure and certain road to intemperance and drunkenness and all that implies.

Fifty years ago, when Congressmen came to Washington in stage-coaches, the proposition to prevent intemperance by the use of fermented liquors, wine, cider, might have been respectfully received by the American people, but in this age of scientific investigation such a suggestion is simply ridiculous.

On the 20th day of May, 1886, the President of the United States signed a bill, making it a law, enacted by the Forty-ninth Congress, to provide for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics and their effects upon the human system by the pupils of the public schools in the Territories, the District of Columbia, and in the Military and Naval Academies, and in Indian and colored schools of the Territories of the United States.

Now, the officer who made this recommendation as a temperance measure should study these books, several of which I have on my desk, and I suggest that he begin with the primer used in the primary department. On page 27, question:

What is the nature of alcoholic poison? Alcohol is a bad poison. It is in its nature to make one who takes a little—such drinks as cider and beer—to want more, and if he takes more he will still want more.

It is in the nature of alcohol to make a person not care if he does wrong. Often it makes those who wish to drink it do wicked and evil deeds.

One more quotation from temperance primer:

Q. What is the effect of beer drinking?

A. It is the nature of beer to make those who drink it want more and more beer. It is also the nature of beer to make its drinkers dull, stupid, and wicked.

Now, supposing the officer who made this recommendation as a temperance measure to have absorbed the teaching of the primer class, let me read him from the grammar-school and high-school text-book on the effects:

The alcoholic appetite.—We have seen that a little alcohol taken at frequent intervals affects the drinker as slow poison; and that in large quantities taken at one time it will speedily destroy life. But one of its most dangerous characteristics is the fascinating power that a little alcohol has, in such liquors as beer, wine, and cider, to create a craving desire for more alcohol.

The drinker does not at first seem to realize his danger; but the more he takes of this poison the more he cares for it and the less he cares about doing right. As he keeps on, the time comes when anything may be sacrificed for this selfish gratification of the appetite which he seems to have no power to resist. The alcoholic appetite once fastened upon a person persistently clings to its victim. After being long resisted it may be roused to redoubled fury by a slight taste or even smell of an alcoholic liquor. The nature of alcohol is not changed by its being put into food. A little there, as anywhere else, has the power to rouse an appetite for more. The only safe course for a person who has an alcoholic appetite is to at once and forever refuse to take any form of alcohol.

Now a brief quotation from the high-school text-book used in this District by order of Congress:

The alcoholic appetite.—It must be remembered that in whatever quantity or wherever alcohol is found, its nature is the same. It is not only poison, but a narcotic poison. It belongs to the same class with opium, chloroform, ether, hydrate of chloral, etc., one great peculiarity of which is that they never leave the body through which they have once passed in quite the same condition in which they found it. The person who has once taken them is apt to feel a desire to take them again. And this desire is not like the ordinary appetite for food. It is not that their smell or taste is agreeable, for the reverse is often the case. It is the after-effect that is sought. The oftener this desire is gratified, the more imperious it becomes, until finally the man is no longer master of himself; he neglects his daily affairs and takes no interest in anybody or anything but plans for a fresh supply of the poison.

The alcohol found in beer and other light liquors, though present only in small quantities, possesses this cumulative attraction for itself, which tends sooner or later to lead to excess. The craving for alcohol, when indulged, becomes a disease both of body and mind. The only remedy for the disease is to remove the cause, by adhering strictly to total abstinence. Such abstinence is also the absolute safeguard against forming this unnatural craving. In view of this easily formed and more easily aroused appetite, the custom of flavoring food of any kind with any form of alcohol is a dangerous one that should be avoided.

Having shown by these quotations the utter fallacy of the argument of this report that the sale of the milder drinks will promote temperance at the army posts, I denounce the provision of this law for the establishing of canteens, in which are many useful and beneficial things which ought to be provided for the benefit of the soldiers, such as a reading-room, gymnasium, library, with innocent games—I say I denounce the provision which connects a beer saloon with the room in which are contained these other luxuries and necessities for the defenders of our flag. What is the excuse offered for the United States going into the saloon business in this report? Why, that of any common rum-seller: "If I don't sell the rum some one else will."

Many, if not most, of these soldiers are young men, not hardened or confirmed drunkards, and I denounce this proposed Government saloon for putting a temptation in the way of these young men. But the argument is that many of them are already addicted to drink; and here I desire to answer by a quotation from the temperance text-book of the grammar-school grade, on page 37, series No. 2, as follows:

The alcoholic appetite once fastened upon a person persistently clings to its victim. After being resisted it may be aroused to redoubled fury by a slight taste or even smell of an alcoholic liquor. The only safe course for a person who has an alcoholic appetite is at once and forever to refuse to take any form of alcohol.

Think of the effect of these Government beer saloons upon a reformed man in the army who is struggling with an appetite for alcoholic drink.

Another complication and difficulty will arise and bring State and Government authority into conflict where there are military posts and canteens in prohibition States. I warn my party associates on this side that the passage of this appropriation for army "canteens" containing drinking saloons without my amendment will be used with telling effect by the third-party people against us, with telling effect on the stump, and will lose us thousands of votes of the christian people and temperance people of the Northern States.

The idea that the so-called lighter liquors—beer, wine, and cider—will prevent intemperance is a relic of the past age and is utterly exploded by the investigations of our times. The man is belated in his research who recommends such a remedy. The children of this nation who study these text-books in the public schools would laugh at such a legislator. I hold in my hand the heading of a petition from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, protesting against this Government beer saloon, which bears over 9,000 signatures. I hold in my hand a letter from the chaplain of one of these posts, where one of these drinking canteens has been established, in which he denounces the thing as destructive to the morals and the highest and best interests of the soldiers.

I quote the following from an article from the pen of Mrs. S. V. La Fetra, of Washington, as giving expression to the sentiment of the christian women of the country:

The christian mothers of this nation have long since learned that the use of wine and beer are not conducive to temperance, and their protest will ring out loud and strong against the proposed and now earnestly recommended measure of this Congress to establish such canteens throughout the regular Army "for the promotion of temperance!" This reads too much like the wine and beer journals of our land, and should make every christian fearful for the result.

Shall we carry the matter further, and open wine and beer canteens in every home to keep our boys from strong drink outside, and aid in enforcing parental discipline? While prohibition is the christian's battle cry all along the line, shall we utter no protests against this proposition to establish liquor saloons in army posts, appropriating the people's money to purchase or erect buildings for the accommodation of such a business?

Is there not a confession of deplorable weakness somewhere in the appeal for wine and beer canteens as a necessity for the better enforcement of discipline and to make desertions less frequent? God forbid that any of our sons shall enter our Army when this is the established regulation! True, legitimate articles of food, clothing, etc., are and will be sold in these canteens, but in this day of enlightened public sentiment on the liquor question we are far from endorsing a wine and beer saloon in a dry-goods store, or even a grocery, "for the promotion of temperance."

Our prohibitory laws have always been a failure unless the wine and beer were also prohibited, and now our Army professes itself unable to protect itself against the drunkenness and desertion of the soldiers, unless liquor of at least a mild form can be sold inside the lines to assist in the enforcement of good order.

President Harrison prohibited the wine and beer canteen at Fort Washington when we appealed to him in behalf of the militia of the District of Columbia, and now it is proposed to set up liquor canteens at every army post. If this is done, how long until we shall have an army of drunkards?

Pitiful appeals are coming to us from all parts of the country from soldiers, chaplains, and others, urging an immediate and strong protest against this legislation. The English army had to prohibit liquor in its canteens because of the drunkenness among the soldiers. It is proposed here to make our soldiers accessory by a share in the proceeds. The national and local Women's Christian Temperance Unions offer a solemn protest against the sale of wine and beer in any or all soldiers' homes and army posts, and will appeal and pray for relief so long as sons, husbands, and brothers are ruined by wine and strong drink. It is said that probably some action will be taken in the House of Representatives the coming week.

I have this morning filed a petition from 310 inmates of the National Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Va., praying for the suppression of the sale of drink at homes and arsenals, recruiting stations, navy-yards, forts, and barracks.

I have here letters from private soldiers, where these drinking saloons have been established, who say in a whisper, not to be repeated, that the effect is bad and only bad. They will not allow their names to be used for self-evident reasons.

I hold in my hand General Order No. 24, dated at Washington, February 22, 1881, which reads as follows:

By direction of the President, the sale of intoxicating liquors at military stations and posts is prohibited.
By command of General Sherman.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

I understand that this order has never been revoked or rescinded. I ask for the adoption of my amendment to the appropriation bill, and in the name of my constituents I ask that General Order No. 24 may be enforced at all the army posts in the country.

I submit that the people of this country are not to any extent aware of this proposed legislation, to establish drinking-saloons under the auspices of the Government, and I tell you that when the people become aware of the enormity of this proposition they will be heard from, and this Capitol will thunder with protests from the law-abiding temperance and christian people of the nation.

(During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when five minutes had expired, Mr. KERR, of Iowa, obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. MORSE.)

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry indeed—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that any question is pending.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to strike out the word "canteen."

Mr. MORSE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has been recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like, before the gentleman from New York begins, to ask him a question.

Mr. SPINOLA. My dear friend, sit down for a minute—just a minute.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman from New York give way long enough to allow me to offer this amendment?

Mr. SPINOLA. Not at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, my sympathies throughout my entire life have gone out, like the river to the sea, toward reformed drunkards [laughter], and I do not know of anything which will check that sympathy. No speech delivered on the floor of this House by any gentleman, whether he has been guilty in early life of indiscretions or not, will have the least influence upon me on a question of this character.

Now, sir, we have listened with great attention—I have, and I believe the whole House has done the same—to a gospel man's views on a business subject. [Laughter.] I hold in my hand a little card, which I received this afternoon in my seat, announcing that "Hon. ELLIOT A. MORSE, M. C., of Massachusetts, will give an address," which today he has prematurely dropped upon the floor of this House [laughter], an address that was not to be given until to-morrow night. Now, this is a sort of miscarriage, it strikes me [laughter], and I am very sorry for it, for the simple reason—

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. My point of order is that the remarks of the gentleman are not pertinent to the subject before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point.

Mr. SPINOLA. Why, sir, I am speaking on the "canteen" itself. [Laughter.] There is no mistake about that. The "canteen!" Every soldier knows what that is; and every soldier was glad during the war to have it filled; and I have helped to fill many a one myself for many a marching boy who was weary and thirsty.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And helped to empty some of them, General.

Mr. SPINOLA. No, sir; thank God, I never helped to empty one. I stand here as a genuine absolute enemy of rum, never having drunk a gallon in my life, put it all together.

A MEMBER. At one time. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. At no time; and I am very sorry that my friend from Massachusetts does not occupy the same position. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, the raid which the gentleman has made here on this subject of the "canteen" is met by the Army Regulations in this language:

The sale or use of ardent spirits in canteens is strictly prohibited.

There can be no drunkenness around a canteen. These canteens exist to-day at more than forty army posts; and they have been of the utmost benefit, the greatest service, to the enlisted men of the Army (as well as the officers), who can go there and get what they require.

I read further:

The sale of beer and wine may be restricted or interdicted, at the discretion of the commanding officer, and is to be authorized only as a means of preventing excesses outside, and to promote temperance—

To which my whole life has been devoted. [Laughter.] This is entirely disconnected with polish of every kind—either stove polish or any other kind of polish. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, a little cheap capital made on the floor of this House in the delivery of a temperance speech is entirely out of place, in my judgment.

It should be reserved for some other place than the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts has already spoken once on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman sends to the desk another amendment.

Mr. MORSE. I withdraw my former amendment and offer this.

Mr. MCADOO. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has occupied ten minutes, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] may be allowed the same length of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts sends to the Chair an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the request for unanimous consent has not yet been put to the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. What was it?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. The request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] that by unanimous consent the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] be extended for five minutes.

Mr. SPINOLA. Never mind; let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. That request can be put after the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts has been read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. MORSE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I ask that members be compelled to take their seats so we may hear what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. Members will take their seats and preserve order.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] desires further time the Chair will hold the amendment in abeyance. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] asks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] shall have five minutes more time the Chair will put the request to the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I find that Washington, commander-in-chief of our earliest armies—Washingtonians came afterwards; they were reformed drunkards [laughter]; they came from Baltimore; three of them sitting around a stove in a gin-mill, a place I never visited [laughter and applause], and I trust my friends on the other side, who are so enthusiastic on the temperance question, can say as much. [Laughter and applause.] But, to continue. This is what was enacted when Washington had charge of the soldiers of our country:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That every non-commissioned officer, private, and musician aforesaid shall receive daily the following rations of provisions, or the value thereof: One pound of beef, or three-quarters of a pound of pork, one pound of bread or flour, half a gill of rum, brandy, or whisky, or the value thereof at the contract price where the same shall become due, and at the rate of one quart of salt, two quarts of vinegar, two pounds of soap, and one pound of candles to every hundred rations.

What becomes of my friend, Mr. MORSE, basking under the shadow of Bunker Hill, when the Father of our Country provided that these men should be taken care of with a proper ration? I want to say here, as every member will verify who served in the Army, that it is an absolute medicinal necessity in the Army in active service. And, sir, out upon the plains, where the water is alkaline, there is nothing so good to purify it as a little pure whisky. [Laughter and applause.]

If you were to stir it up with some kind of stove-blackening [great laughter and applause], how would that meet with the taste of the soldiers? It might change their complexion, I admit, but it would be a dangerous drug to mix with the ration of the soldiers. They then would indeed have a chromo in their stomachs, as my friend from Massachusetts has said [great laughter], but the inside of their stomachs would become polished. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, sir, my friend is altogether wrong in relation to this question. He ought to know himself, having served in the Army. He ought to know himself the necessity of the soldier being served with a ration of whisky after a long day's march in the rain, if you please, or after having bivouacked on damp ground, sleeping in a swamp perhaps over night. He ought to know that nothing could be of greater service than a proper ration of something to stimulate him and preserve and protect his life. [Applause.]

I will go as far in remedying any evil existing in this country by the extravagant use of alcoholic liquors or drunkenness as any man on the floor of this House. But I will draw the line myself where I will stop, and not permit it to be done by men who do not understand it. [Applause.]

I will not stand here, Mr. Chairman, to make speeches for home consumption or to cater to the caprice and whimsical notions of the ladies in the land. [Laughter.] The gentleman has made his remarks. Let him make them in the name of the temperance ladies of the country. Perhaps he did so. They can do much good, more than the men can. They have exercised it in all directions, but it is not to be done in an arbitrary way, for such action in reference to temperance has never accomplished anything and never will. It is only to be done by suitable and wholesome restrictive action, and I am in favor of such action only. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The amendment of Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts, was read, as follows: After the word "dollars" insert "provided no alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, shall be sold or supplied to the enlisted soldier."

Mr. MORSE was recognized.

Mr. LANSING. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANSING. I make the point of order that under Rule XXI this is new legislation injected into an appropriation bill, and that therefore the amendment proposed by the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. To what rule does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CUTCHEON. This will be found in clause 2 of Rule XXI, which provides:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Mr. Chairman, in order that the committee may clearly understand the point of order, I desire briefly to call the attention of the Chair to the manner in which this paragraph now under consideration comes into the bill, what it is for, and the reasons for its incorporation in the bill, so that the Chair may be enabled to rule intelligently upon the question. If the members of the committee will refer to the report accompanying this bill, on page 9, they will find there that an estimate is made by the Secretary of War under the head of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, under the head of "buildings for garrison purposes:"

For construction of or purchase of buildings at military posts for libraries, gymnasiums, amusement-rooms, canteens, etc., $150,000.

The committee allowed $100,000 for the purpose of these buildings.

This committee will observe, and the chairman will take notice of the fact in considering the point of order, that this is for the construction of or purchase of buildings at military posts, and for nothing else. The only thing that I understand the amendment is directed towards is the canteens. Now the word "canteen" is a name that is new to our Army nomenclature. While it is old in the armies of Europe, it has existed in the Army in this country only for the past ten years. They are in existence to-day at forty-one of the Army posts.

Mr. LANHAM. Fifty-seven.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, fifty-seven. I should have said forty-one at the time that this report was submitted.

What is a canteen? It is a co-operative store that is maintained by the officers and enlisted men at the military posts, which takes the place of the old sutler's store, or what was more recently called the post-trader's store.

They supply the officers and men with such articles as may be needed to supplement their rations, and with the little necessities that they may require at the different posts.

If gentlemen now will turn to page 24 of the report they will find set forth at length a general order issued from the Headquarters of the Army, bearing date of February 1, 1889, General Orders, No. 10, in the following language:

[General Orders, No. 10.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 1, 1889.

By direction of the Secretary of War, the following rules and regulations for the establishment and government of post canteens are published to the Army:

1. Canteens may be established at military posts where there are no post traders, for supplying the troops, at moderate prices, with such articles as may be deemed necessary for their use, entertainment, and comfort; also for affording them the requisite facilities for gymnastic exercises, billiards, and other proper games. The commanding officer may set apart for the purposes of the canteen any suitable rooms that can be spared, such rooms, whenever practicable, to be in the same building with the library or reading-rooms.

2. The sale or use of ardent spirits in canteens is strictly prohibited; but the commanding officer is authorized to permit wines and light beer to be sold therein by the drink, on week days, and in a room used for no other purpose, whenever he is satisfied that the giving to the men the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits has the effect of preventing them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them. The practice of what is known as "treating" should be discouraged under all circumstances.

3. Gambling or playing any game for money or other thing of value is forbidden.

4. Civilians, other than those employed and resident on the military reservation, are not to be permitted to enter the rooms of the canteen without the authority of the commanding officer. Commanders of canteen posts situated in States or surrounded by communities not tolerating the sale of intoxicants will not permit the residents or members thereof to visit the canteen for the purpose of obtaining beer or wine, etc.

This, then, is not a new thing. It is established by the law at the military posts now throughout the Army. It is not, therefore, to ask in the bill any authority to establish the canteens, for they are already established. Neither does the question of policy here arise. The only question presented by the appropriation bill to the committee is whether it is advisable to give to the Secretary of War an appropriation with which he can erect buildings, among other things, for a library, gymnasium, for amusement rooms, and canteens, which is, as I have said, another name for the co-operative stores. The amendment proposed applies legislation to the bill. Now, whatever my sentiment may be in regard to the policy of that legislation if it came in a different form, it is now here in the shape of new legislation on an appropriation bill, and subject to the point of order which has been raised against it.

Mr. SKINNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. SKINNER. Is there any other legislation on the subject than that contained in that general order, to which you have referred, establishing canteens?

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is the law of the Army.

Mr. SKINNER. But is there a general law passed by Congress?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; this is only a regulation.

Under the old sutler system, Mr. Chairman, the sutler was permitted to sell not only wines and beer, but also strong drinks; and that was one reason for breaking up that system, ultimately. Then the post-trader system was inaugurated; and under that system the post-trader has always sold these lighter beverages, openly and admittedly, but also, covertly, he sold strong drinks as well. Now, I will send to the desk a letter bearing on the question from the Adjutant-General of the Army, received by the chairman of the committee a day or two since.

Mr. SAYERS. While that is being sent to the desk I will suggest to the gentleman the propriety of striking out the words "and so forth" wherever they appear in the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to that.

I now ask the Clerk to read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 23, 1890.

DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of the 22d instant requesting to be informed (1) whether under the post-trader system liquors were sold by the trader; (2) whether under the canteen system a regular "bar-room" is set apart in the same building with the amusement room and library; (3) what, if any, limitation is set upon the sale of liquors to the men at a post. You also say you will be glad to receive any other information and suggestions upon the subject which it may be in my power to give to you.

1. Originally ardent liquors as well as wine and beer were freely dispensed to officers and men under the post-trader system. The demoralizing effect of this practice, described at length in the report from this office to the Secretary of War, dated December 31, 1888 (see page 12, Report 529, House of Representatives, present session, copy herewith), resulted in the issuance on February 22, 1891, of an Executive order, prohibiting the sale at military posts of intoxicating liquors stronger than wine or beer. But for reasons explained on page 15 of the same report the War Department found it impossible to enforce this prohibition with any degree of thoroughness, and this fact constitutes one of the most potent arguments for the superseding of the trader's store, the operations of which the higher military authorities can never fully control, by the canteen system, which is directly managed by officers of the Army, liable to trial by court-martial and dismissal from the service for any violation of regulations and orders.

2. The regulations for the government of the canteen system (page 24, Report 529) absolutely forbid the sale of ardent spirits in or by the canteen, and direct that when the commanding officer shall, as a means of preventing men from resorting for strong drink to places without the post limits and of promoting temperance, deem it advisable to allow wine and beer to be sold, such sales must be made "in a room used for no other purpose." These regulations likewise provide that the canteen, comprising (besides the store or place where merchandise needed by the troops is exposed for sale) the billiard and amusement room, and, if there be any such, the wine and beer room, is to be established whenever practicable in the same building with the reading-room and library; but this provision was inserted for the sole reason that many of our military posts are known to be overcrowded and that a separate building for canteen purposes would rarely be available. Should Congress appropriate the desired amount for "garrison buildings," quarters apart from the building containing the library can and doubtless will be assigned to the canteens.

3. As has been stated under the second head, the sale at military posts of such liquors as whisky, brandy, or rum is positively interdicted. It is left to the discretion of the post commanders to decide what quantity of beer or wine, if any, shall be sold to the men on week days. Commanders of posts, being on the spot, are best capable of determining the expediency of permitting or prohibiting the sale of these lighter drinks; personally they derive no benefit, direct or indirect, from such sales, the profits accruing from which are paid into the company (i. e., mess) funds; and as their professional standing depends largely upon the state of their respective companies they have a direct interest in the welfare and sobriety of their men, and hence can be safely trusted to regulate this matter.

That the latitude thus given to the local commanders is distinctly promotive of temperance and of good morals can not be doubted. Statistics prepared in the War Department on the subject warrant the inference that five-sixths of all military offenses are directly or indirectly traceable to drunkenness; and the report of the Acting Judge-Advocate-General for the year ending October 31, 1889, shows that of two hundred and ninety-nine men convicted of desertion, nearly one-half admitted that over-indulgence in drink led them to commit the crime. Impelled by a craving for strong drink, soldiers leave their barracks with the intention, in nine cases out of ten, of resuming their duties after gratifying it; but once under the influence of the intoxicant they often either overstay the limit of their permit (those of them that do not go without leave) or, returning within such limit, commit more or less serious breaches of discipline that they would not be guilty of while in their sober senses. In either case good order and military discipline necessitate the commitment of the offenders to the guard-house for trial and punishment.

It is admitted on all hands that the discretionary authority vested in commanders of posts to permit the sale of light drinks in reasonable quantities has been wisely exercised and attended with highly beneficial results. A citation of all reports showing this gratifying fact would unduly extend the limits of this communication; and I content myself with quoting from a few of them, selected at haphazard, premising that the high character of the writers shuts out all suspicion of a lack of candor on their part.

The following are extracts from reports of commanders of posts below mentioned:

Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama:

"In my opinion the canteen tends to improve the discipline of the command in that it keeps the men within the garrison and reduces the number of cases of drunkenness and trials by courts-martial."

Fort Keogh, Montana:

"The influence of the canteen upon the welfare of the command is very marked. Notwithstanding it has been in operation so short a time, not half the number of men were confined or tried by court-martial after the payment in this month as were after the previous monthly payments."

Fort Custer, Montana—commanding officer, in forwarding report of canteen officer, says:

"The report shows a very favorable condition of the canteen, and it is probably one of the best canteens in the Army. It has greatly improved the discipline of this command, as shown by the post records, and at posts where I have observed the operations of canteens, in contradistinction to the post-trader establishment, it has decreased drunkenness more than 50 per cent. There is very rarely now a case of drunkenness that can be traced to the canteen. This canteen has given great satisfaction to the officers and enlisted men of the post, and through its instrumentality all persons, whether enlisted men or officers, have been enabled to live with a greater degree of comfort and less expense than formerly."

Fort Sidney, Nebraska:

"The canteen has now become an established institution in the United States Army, and its merits are so many and so great that I think it altogether improbable it will ever be disturbed. It may be improved upon, but will never be dispensed with. After ten years' continuous, careful observation of the effect of a canteen upon the well-being and general morale of commands, I am prepared to say that when properly conducted it is a beneficial institution at a military post. It allays discontent, is a source of economy to the enlisted men; keeps those in the garrisons who would otherwise find their social enjoyments beyond its limits; enables men to preserve their self-respect by keeping them from public drinking places and other questionable resorts, reduces the use of strong intoxicants to a minimum, affords orderly, clean, and well lighted rooms in which the men can enjoy themselves with games and innocent amusements without being brought in contact with the reckless and disorderly elements of civil society, and promotes sociability and good manners among the men of the different organizations. It has been observed in this command that larger amounts of money are deposited with paymasters when the canteen is in successful operation than at any other time. It is a fact which has been noticed by merchants that soldiers in garrisons where there are well conducted canteens expend more money in articles of dress and comfort than do soldiers at garrisons not similarly situated."

David's Island, New York Harbor, Capt. F. H. E. Ebstein, Twenty-first Infantry:

"I conversed with a number of enlisted men of long service as to the advantages of the canteen, and their unanimous expression was in favor of the canteen as against the former method of post-traders. At this depot the canteen has been a material aid to discipline. At no time have there been so few confinements in the guard-house as since the establishment of the canteen. The guard report shows from twenty-five to thirty-five confinements within the first two days after a pay day. After the last pay day—the first since the canteen was opened—there were but three confinements, and these not chargeable to the canteen."

General Gibbon, commanding Department of the Columbia, in forwarding report of the commanding officer, Vancouver Barracks, Washington, remarks:

"The post of Vancouver Barracks lies close alongside the town of Vancouver, the street next the post being lined with saloons to which the soldiers of the garrison resorted for liquors. The establishment of the canteen inside the garrison gave the enlisted men a home-like and convenient resort, where they could read, play cards and billiards, get lunches, and drink their beer comfortably and moderately, and at a profit to themselves. A marked improvement in the discipline of the garrison resulted. Most post-traderships are now little better than beer saloons, the immense profits of which go into the trader's pocket. In the case of the canteen the soldiers themselves get these profits. An application to the post of Vancouver Barracks of the prohibition (to sell wine and beer) will result in the loss of these profits to the soldiers, and increase of dissipation, and a decrease in discipline."

In submitting the paper to the Adjutant-General, General Miles remarks:

"There has not been a post-trader at Vancouver Barracks for ten years, and although it is one of the largest posts in the country it is one of the best disciplined and most orderly. The post canteen and gymnasium are excellent substitutes for the ordinary post-traders' establishments. Beer and light wines are not regarded as alcoholic liquors and should not, in my opinion, be so classed."

Colonel Wheaton, the commanding officer, Fort Omaha, says: "The post canteen since its institution in August, 1887, has been a boon to the soldiers, not only in supplying them with amusement and recreation and in greatly improving their morals, but in keeping them out of the low bar-rooms adjacent to the post which they formerly frequented and which are now closed in for lack of patronage," adding that the canteen has "reduced desertion, and in all respects been so beneficial to the troops that, in the interest of good order, good morals, and good discipline, I dread seeing a return to the old system." And the department commander, General Brooke, who, being on the spot, has opportunities for personal observation, adds that he has noted the closing of the dram-shops on the outskirts of the reservation, as described by Colonel Wheaton, and "also the other benefits described of a post canteen, not only at this but at other posts in this department." Concerning the sale of beer and light wine at a post canteen, General Brooke says: "It has this advantage over the sale of the same by a post trader, namely, that the men will patronize their own canteen, but where opportunity offers will go to a neighboring village or town in preference to the post trader, being thus thrown in the way of temptation."

In conclusion I beg to reiterate my conviction that to couple the appropriation of the money needed for the purchase or erection of "garrison buildings" with the proviso that beer or wine shall not be sold therein, so far from representing dissipation, would tend to encourage it, as it would result in the reopening near the outskirts of military reservations of low grogeries and haunts of vice now to a great extent closed in consequence of the introduction of the canteen system.

The paper accompanying your letter is returned as requested.

Very respectfully,

J. C. KELTON, Adjutant-General.

Hon. B. M. CUTCHEON,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That shows, Mr. Chairman, that these beverages are permitted to be sold at present under the post-trader system; that they are permitted by general orders; and the amendment of the gentleman would be a change of existing law in the shape of legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I would be glad to ask the gentleman from Michigan, if this is not new legislation, what is meant by the report of the committee on page 21, where the Adjutant-General says:

Although the canteen has at no time been expressly authorized, and has only been indirectly countenanced by the War Department, etc.

Mr. LANHAM. That was previous to the general order establishing the canteen system.

Mr. PICKLER. This is the report submitted by the committee, or a part of their report.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. That is a year and one-half old.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was anterior to the establishment of the canteen system.

Mr. PICKLER. But why do you put into this bill a provision of that character relating to this system any more than a hundred other things which are equally applicable as to what is allowed under the canteen system? Why not establish regulations as to the selling of eggs, butter, and cheese?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The report accompanying the bill, as the gentleman will observe, gives the whole history of the canteen system.

Mr. PICKLER. But this is a lengthy report in favor of the United States Government opening saloons for the sale of wines and liquors in the barracks.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think it is. It was designed in the interest of temperance, to promote temperance; and by a wonderful unanimity of testimony from the officers at those different posts it has promoted temperance, has decreased intoxication, and has had the effect of decreasing the number of desertions.

Mr. PICKLER. Would the gentleman take army officers as par excellence authority on temperance?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I would. They are a far better body than any other class in the country. [Laughter and applause.] There is no class of men who stand higher as men of temperance and high morality than the officers of the Army and Navy.

Mr. PICKLER. I am not attacking the officers of the Army and Navy; but I know that no men drink as generally as officers of the Army.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on the point of order. I must say that I was a great deal surprised—if I understand my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, correctly—to be informed that the United States Government has at any time legislated in favor of granting authority for the sale of intoxicating liquors to enlisted men in the United States Army. I never heard of any such legislation; and I can not conceive that any such legislation has been had.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman from Maine had paid attention to the reading of General Order No. 10, or the portion of it which was read by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, he would have discovered that—

The sale or use of ardent spirits in canteens is strictly prohibited; but the commanding officer is authorized to permit wines and light beer to be sold therein by the drink.

There was a prohibition in this order of the sale of strong intoxicants.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is not the law; but—

Mr. LANHAM. But has not the War Department the right to make regulations governing military posts?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is not the question involved in this discussion. The fact that the War Department may have issued a general order, upon the idea of some Secretary of War as to the authority of that Department, certainly does not furnish a sufficient basis to claim that the instruction given in such an order would have the force of existing law so as to prohibit an amendment on a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. PETERS. But if that order was made in pursuance of existing law, then it is part of existing law.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not had the law called to my attention which has authorized the Secretary of War or any other official of this Government to undertake to promote the cause of temperance by promoting the sale of wine and beer.

Mr. PETERS. But, if the gentleman will allow me, there is a general law which places power in the Secretary of War to make all needed rules for the regulation of the Army, and this is such a regulation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very good.

Mr. PETERS. And this order is made in pursuance of a former law.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Therefore you hold that this gives it the force of law to the extent that when it is proposed for the first time in the history of our legislation to make the establishment of these rum shops by act of Congress, the fact that the Secretary of War at some time has assumed authority to grant such permission under a general and vague power of making regulations for controlling army posts, and when it is proposed to launch out into a new arena of national legislation authorizing the establishment of these drinking places under the sanction and authority of the United States Government, that an amendment to strike it out is not admissible on the ground that this sort of temperance establishments have already been authorized by existing law.

Mr. LANHAM. This very legislation contemplated was substituted in the place of sutlers' stores and post-traderships, to correct abuses like "Belknepery." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will not launch out into that, because it might take more time than the exigencies of the discussion on a point of order would admit to reply. This proposition in itself, as stated in the report of the committee, recognizes the fact that these liquor-shops are liable to be abused. A further provision in the report says in regard to—the moral aspects of the Government permitting its officers to carry on an institution supplying intoxicants, however light, to enlisted men, it is sufficient to point out that we must take the soldier as we find him, and that he is not by any means a perfect being, and that among other defective traits he is apt to have a fondness for strong drink.

And if we find the soldiers have an appetite for liquor we must perforce pass a law authorizing the establishment of places where it is most convenient for the soldier to gratify that appetite.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman read the two succeeding lines?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will:

If now, by offering him the opportunity of procuring in moderate quantities comparatively harmless beverages, such as light wines and beer, we prevent him from indulging in, or diminish his temptation to indulge in, whisky, brandy, rum, and gin, the frequent use of which makes drunkards of men, who will deny that a good result has been accomplished?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE (to Mr. ADAMS). Give me some further time.

Mr. ADAMS. There is no time to give. I desire to speak on the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired? I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What was the purpose of the rap of the gavel?

The CHAIRMAN. To call attention to the fact that the Chair was prepared to make a ruling. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair will kindly and courteously observe the usage of the House in permitting me to try to inform it a little further on this subject under consideration for a few minutes I will be greatly obliged.

[Cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state in reply to the gentleman from Maine that he supposed the object of the argument was to convince the Chair, and the Chair was already convinced. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope to be able to convince the Chair if he will allow me. When I was interrupted I was in the middle of a sentence which I would like to complete.

Mr. PETERS. The Chair is with you now, and he may not be if you proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Kansas! [Laughter.] I read further:

The purpose of the canteen to promote temperance should, however, be distinctly and constantly borne in mind; it should be within the power of the commanding officer to impose restrictions upon and even to completely interdict the sale of the drinkables mentioned—

That is, wine, beer, and these other promotives of temperance—and they should, if practicable, be dispensed, if at all, at a place apart and not immediately accessible from the billiard, reading, or recreation rooms.

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that the attempt to put this into an appropriation bill is new legislation of a most remarkable and astonishing kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will pass upon the point of order. The Chair is of opinion that the words "existing law," in paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, apply to statute law, and that, unless there is a law now upon the statute-book allowing the sale of these liquors to soldiers, the amendment would not be a change of existing law. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order, and the committee will pass upon the amendment on its merits.

Mr. LANSING rose and was recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the Chair a question, to see whether I understand the ruling. Does the Chair hold that the making of law where none exists is not a change of law within the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that that would necessarily be the case. The question is whether this amendment changes existing law. Is there any existing law on this subject? The Chair has ruled, and the gentleman [Mr. CANNON] can appeal if he desires. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LANSING] is recognized.

Mr. LANSING. Mr. Chairman, the point of order having been decided, I desire now to speak to the merits of this proposed amendment. I can be a personal witness before this House of the beneficial results of the canteen system in a garrison. I call the attention of the House to a clause in the official letter written on this subject by Col. Richard I. Dodge, of Madison Barracks, which are located within my district and within my immediate neighborhood. He says:

In my opinion no step has been taken for the improvement of the moral, social, and intellectual condition of the enlisted men more efficacious than the establishment of the canteen. With pride I am able to say that in discipline and general good conduct I have a command superior to any I have ever seen in the Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] insists that we are legislating intemperance into the Army and putting temptation in the way of the enlisted men. Sir, as I have said, I live within a few miles of a barrack where there is a regimental organization and has been for a great many years, and until the inauguration of the canteen system our county jail was full half the time with soldiers from that garrison. The little village in which the garrison is situated, Sackett's Harbor, was filled with rum-shops from one end to the other, and the garrison there got to be a perfect nuisance—a social nuisance—and so continued until the inauguration of the canteen system; but now absolute quietude rests upon the town, and a great many of the men who kept the rum-shops there have gone out of the business for want of customers.

The canteen has made that garrison to-day the most orderly one that has been there for twenty years. I speak confidently upon this subject, for I have seen regiment after regiment. Now, sir, I protest against outside people, people who drive in one line, one-idea people, coming into legislative bodies and trying to force legislation along some peculiar line of their own. "It is a condition, and not a theory, that confronts us" in this respect, and the condition is, I say it of my personal knowledge, in every respect better than it ever has been in the garrison with which I am particularly acquainted.

The report of the committee contains a number of letters and reports from the commandants of regimental posts. Those reports and letters are collated here, and every one of those commanding officers states that the canteen system has been advantageous to the cause of temperance and of good discipline in his command. Now, sir, it is only fair to assume that intelligent gentlemen, officers who have grown old in the service naturally have a pride in the decent and orderly conduct of their commands, and when Col. Richard I. Dodge and other like officers, men whose names are revered throughout the country as heroes of the war, men whose military and social positions can not be questioned anywhere, send reports to the Secretary of War saying that this system has been beneficial to their commands in every particular, this House ought to have some respect for their opinion and their reports ought to control, instead of the whimsical ideas of some outside society seeking for impossible good. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am very earnestly a friend to the cause of temperance, and yet I believe that when all the facts and circumstances are considered the adoption of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] will not lead to the promotion of that cause in the military service. It has long been a subject of careful inquiry in military circles how to prevent as far as possible desertions from the Army, to reduce to a minimum the intemperance of the soldiers, to relieve the irksomeness of army life, to promote contentment therein, and conserve wholesome discipline, as well as to escape the evils which have usually attended the cutlers' or traders' stores and their influence and effects upon the morale of the Army.

One result of this inquiry led to the establishment of what is known as the canteen system; and accordingly in February of last year a general order, by direction of the Secretary of War, Mr. Endicott, was issued authorizing the same. I quote the following extracts from that order:

1. Canteens may be established at military posts where there are no post traders for supplying the troops, at moderate prices, with such articles as may be deemed necessary for their use, entertainment, and comfort; also for affording them the requisite facilities for gymnastic exercises, billiards, and other proper games. The commanding officer may set apart for the purposes of the canteen any suitable rooms that can be spared, such rooms, whenever practicable, to be in the same building with the library or reading-rooms.

2. The sale or use of ardent spirits in canteens is strictly prohibited; but the commanding officer is authorized to permit wines and light beer to be sold therein by the drink, on week-days, and in a room used for no other purpose, whenever he is satisfied that the giving to the men the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits has the effect of preventing them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits, and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them. The practice of what is known as "treating" should be discouraged under all circumstances.

3. Gambling or playing any game for money or other thing of value is forbidden.

There is a further rule and regulation for the government of post canteens in the following language:

4. Civilians, other than those employed and resident on the military reservation, are not to be permitted to enter the rooms of the canteen without the authority of the commanding officer. Commanders of canteen posts situated in States or surrounded by communities not tolerating the sale of intoxicants will not permit the residents or members thereof to visit the canteen for the purpose of obtaining beer or wine.

From this it will be observed that in States or communities where the sale of intoxicants is not permitted the residents or members thereof are not even to be allowed to visit the canteen for the purpose of obtaining beer or wine.

On the 1st of February of this year fifty-seven of the one hundred and ten garrison posts in the Army had canteens in active operation, and the testimony of Army officers, who have had abundant opportunity for a practical observation as to the effects of this system, is overwhelmingly in its favor, showing conclusively that it has reduced intemperance and otherwise resulted well wherever it has been enforced. The present Secretary of War, Mr. Proctor, says:

The reports that we have in regard to the canteen system are very strong in its favor; it conduces to order, temperance, and contentment among the men.

In the brief time allowed me I can not more than quote from what certain officers of the Army say on this subject. In the first place Major-Generals Crook and Howard are both on record in favor of the canteen system. In a letter of the Adjutant-General to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CUTCHEON] we find the following questions and answers:

But has the canteen system proved of any real benefit to the soldiers? Has it improved the discipline, increased the morale, rendered the soldiers more contented with their lot? Has it as yet reduced the percentage of desertions?

The answer comes from Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama:

In my opinion the canteen tends to improve the discipline of the command, in that it keeps the men within the garrison and reduces the number of cases of drunkenness and trials by courts-martial.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I trust I may be allowed to proceed a few moments longer.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from Texas desires to proceed I will yield him my time.

Mr. LANHAM. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

From Fort Keogh we have the following testimony:

The influence of the canteen upon the welfare of the command is very marked. Notwithstanding it has been in operation so short a time, not half the number of men were confined or tried by court-martial after the payment in this month as were after the previous monthly payment.

From Fort Sidney, Nebr., the report is as follows:

After ten years' continuous careful observation of the effect of a canteen upon the well-being and general morale of commands, I am prepared to say that when properly conducted it is a beneficent institution at a military post. It allays discontent, is a great source of economy to the enlisted men, keeps those in the garrisons who would otherwise find their social enjoyments beyond its limits, enables men to preserve their self-respect by keeping them from public drinking places and other questionable resorts, and reduces the use of strong intoxicants to a minimum.

From Fort Custer, Montana, we have the following:

There is very rarely now a case of drunkenness that can be traced to the canteen.

The commanding officer at Fort Mackinac, Michigan, reports after but six weeks' trial:

The canteen has proved the greatest conservator of discipline I have ever seen.

The commanding officer at Fort Wadsworth says:

As an improver of discipline there is no doubt that it is an important factor.

The following testimony comes from Fort Abraham Lincoln:

The canteen system tends not only to the comfort and pleasure of the men, but prevents dissipation. The morale of this command has improved; the men appear more contented with their surroundings, and but few apply to leave the post on passes.

The commanding officer at Madison Barracks, Col. Richard I. Dodge, says:

In my opinion no step has been taken for the improvement of the moral, social, and intellectual condition of the enlisted men more efficacious than the establishment of the canteen. With pride I am able to say that in discipline and general good conduct I have a command superior to any I have ever seen in the Army. As my general rules and mode of command have not changed, as this post differs from others only in being surrounded with even more numerous grogshops and other temptations, I can attribute the very marked improvement only to the very wonderful influence of the canteen.

This and other testimony which could be cited seems to leave no room for doubt as to the beneficial results of the canteen system. It has passed the experimental stage and may now be considered a fixed institution at army posts. The sale or use of strong intoxicants is absolutely prohibited in the canteen, and discretionary authority is given the commanding officer as to the sale of wines and light beer under the circumstances and for the purposes mentioned in the general order.

It is manifest that a great reform has already been accomplished, and those who best understand the nature and disposition of soldiers and are most conversant with all the conditions of garrison life, and whose duty it is to administer this military regulation, unite in its commendation. It seems to me we ought to leave the matter in the shape already given it by the War Department, where the responsibility belongs, and attempt no further legislation upon the subject in this bill, and I shall accordingly vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment be limited to ten minutes, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question) said: The ayes have it.

Mr. PICKLER (who had been addressing the Chair during the putting of the question). I call for a division.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the House will give the gentleman who offered the amendment a reasonable opportunity to be heard in favor of it.

The question being again taken on the motion of Mr. CUTCHEON to close debate on the pending amendment in ten minutes, there were—ayes 62, noes 60.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that thirty minutes' debate be allowed.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can hardly entertain the proposition now.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I prefer that the time should be occupied in debate rather than in voting by tellers or any such proceeding; and if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] desires to be heard I shall be glad that the time be extended to thirty minutes, to be divided equally.

Mr. PICKLER. I accept that proposition, and withdraw my demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment be limited to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized to control the time on his side of the question.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this question because I feel a deep interest in it. It seems to me that this is an effort by the United States Congress to legislate the saloon into the Army.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has read evidence here from different commanding officers in regard to this canteen system. And what do these officers, gentlemen, certify to? They simply certify they can control drunkenness among the enlisted men better by having them at canteens within the barracks than they can when they get drunk down in town. This is only comparison—

Mr. CUTCHEON. Who says that?

Mr. PICKLER. These officers all say that. That is the argument adduced by these officers, simply that they can control this matter better if they have it in the barracks.

I inquire of gentlemen on this floor what you are going to do with military posts situated in a State like mine, where the people of that State have voted to prohibit the sale of all intoxicating liquors, including wine and beer? Now you propose by this action at every barracks in my State to set up wine and beer shops for the sale of intoxicating liquors to the enlisted men of the Army. You propose further to protect them in this sale by bayonets. You propose to have your saloons protected by bayonets in States which prohibit the sale of these articles by law.

I need not say to gentlemen here what every man knows, that if they are permitted to sell in a bar in these canteens they will sell every drink a man calls for.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Suppose the amendment prevails and the sale of wine and beer in canteens is prohibited; does not the gentleman know the post-trader will take up the business at the post and carry it on?

Mr. PICKLER. I reply to that that the United States Congress have never given their consent to making a profit out of the enlisted men. Let it remain there. Let them get their wine and beer as they have obtained them in the past. I am in favor of these canteens so far as everything is concerned except the sale of intoxicating liquors. I am in earnest about that, and I do protest against this House of Representatives indorsing the sale of wine and beer by passing this law.

I protest against that, Mr. Chairman; and, gentlemen, there is in this land, as you all know, a sentiment that is working against the sale of all intoxicating liquors. And mark my prediction, the time will come, and it is not far in the future, when a proposition like this will not be laughed at in the House of Representatives of the United States. That time is coming, and it is near at hand. The conscience of the nation is aroused on this question, and the people who advocate temperance sentiments are asking for what they believe is right. Their conscience is in it, and where conscience is in anything it will not be put down until it is settled, and settled in a right way.

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to sanctioning by law the setting up of a saloon in every barracks of the United States. I was for three years and a half in the Army. I was for two years in the ranks as an enlisted man. I saw service all the way through. I never needed whisky, but when it was offered to me in those days I took it. [Laughter.] You have all been there and you know how it is yourselves. [Renewed laughter.]

But I am opposed to sanctioning this by law.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will not assert to-day that it is necessary to good order and the welfare of the soldiers they should have intoxicating liquor sold to them. He will not in all candor argue such a proposition to the House. He does not believe that, and with his gray hairs and honorable years he will not say it is necessary for good order in the Army to sell these intoxicating liquors to the enlisted soldiers.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That it is not a military necessity.

Mr. PICKLER. No; it is not a military necessity.

I just want to read one paragraph from the report of this committee and I will then yield the floor. I want to call your attention to the report of the Adjutant-General, J. C. Kelton, and it strikes me as most extraordinarily singular that this committee in making this report, embracing about fifty pages, confines thirty-seven or thirty-eight of them to an argument for the sale of wine and beer in these canteens. But I will read what the Adjutant-General says in regard to this to show that the officers themselves are ashamed of it. He says expressly:

It must be remembered that the sale of beer and wine at canteens is not encouraged by the regulations.

And I ask your particular attention to that, gentlemen. No army regulations encourage it; in fact, they have always been the other way. And I say that from my own experience in the Army the only trouble

I have ever seen on this account was because of the sale of liquors to the men and their consequent intoxication.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read just a little below what he has read?

Mr. PICKLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman read from Adjutant-General Kelton's statement a little further?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, he makes an argument the other way, I know.

Mr. LANHAM. Just one sentence below what you have read, or may I read it?

Mr. PICKLER. I have no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Adjutant-General Kelton says further on:

It is only tolerated for the reason that many men do, unfortunately, crave stimulants, and that experience has shown that indulgence therein can not be prevented, but may be regulated and restricted. The sale of beer and wine ought not to be made a prominent feature in the conduct of the canteen.

Mr. PICKLER. The effort here is to make it paramount.

Mr. LANHAM. He says it is simply tolerated.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, we do not want it tolerated.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] offered an amendment. Now, the point I make is that the gentleman ought to be recognized to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will be recognized on his amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize a gentleman on the other side first.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota. Instead of this being an effort, as suggested by him, to legislate saloons into the Army, the object of the committee is to legislate the whole business out of the Army, or at least to do what can be done by legislation to keep the soldiers out of the saloons. Now, the gentleman from Dakota argues—and there has been a great deal of talk in the last few minutes by gentlemen who evidently did not know what they were talking about—in regard to this matter and about this General Order No. 10, which is the only basis on which we propose to allow beer or light wines to be sold in canteens at certain times. This order commences by stating that the sale of ardent spirits is to be prohibited. It then says that at these canteens they are authorized to permit wines and light beers to be sold when, and only when, it will have the effect to prevent the soldiers from resorting to places outside of the camp for these beverages. Therefore, if they have no light wines or beer in Dakota, then the officers in that State will exercise the discretion which they have to prevent even the selling of light wines and beers in the canteens of Dakota.

Now, I want to say that no army on earth has ever succeeded in enlisting the very highest class of people in any country, especially in times of peace. You can not get a man to serve in time of peace, either in Europe or America, for the small pittance that is given to the soldier, who, if he had not entered the army, could have reached the higher walks of life. That class of men will not enlist at such times, and hence all countries are compelled, in controlling an army, to devise the very best means possible to bring the material of which it is composed up to the very highest standard.

A word also, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the fling made by the gentleman against the officers of the Army and Navy. I assert that there is no class of men in Dakota or out of Dakota, in the United States or out of the United States, who stand as high as men of temperance, as men of high morals, as men of the highest tone of character and honor, as the officers of the Army and Navy, against whom the gentleman hurls that imputation.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman except Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I hurled no fling at the army officers, except that I thought, as drinking men themselves, they were not competent to lay down a law on this question, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. In response to that I say, as a rule, I know they are not drinking men.

Mr. PICKLER. You do not know them.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I do know them; many of them personally.

Mr. PICKLER. So do I.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. And I have served with them, and know what I say to be a fact.

Mr. PICKLER. I know what I say is a fact.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. You may have met some such men in Dakota, where, by your peculiar laws, you encourage that system. [Laughter and applause.] But in the great country at large, where laws are made upon proper democratic principles, we have no such charge to make against the officers of the Army and Navy.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, you do not have to live under our laws.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. No, I do not; and I thank Heaven I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Well, we are satisfied.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Nor do I live in your climate; I live in the sunny South, in God's country, where the Dakota people are trying to come, and we are ready to welcome them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say in regard to this matter except to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is nothing but a permission under certain circumstances for the officers commanding posts to allow the canteens to sell light wine and beer, to be sold when in their opinion they will tend to the preservation of the morals and temperance of the Army and prevent the soldiers from resorting to other places to obtain liquors.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Do you think it advisable at this late day to sanction this practice by giving it the force of law in this appropriation bill?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I think it advisable to-day to do whatever is best for the Army. I think it advisable to do what this law does—that is, positively to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits; and, in cases where the Army is located near towns where liquors are accessible to the men, to allow these light wines and beer to be sold in the canteens, when, under such circumstances, it will have the effect of keeping the soldiers in the barracks and prevent them from going outside to the grogeries, getting drunk and robbed and broken down in health and morals. [Applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. Make them drink by law.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the statement of my friend from Alabama as to the high state of morals among the officers of the Army. I think he ought to except the clergy and members of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. When members of Congress are attacked I will defend them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the House only for a moment or two longer; and I will say that since the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] and his personal attack on me, I have referred to his autobiography in the Congressional Directory, and I understand his speech better when I read that he was five times elected an alderman of New York City, with all that that implies.

Mr. SPINOLA. I never was an alderman of New York City. I was an alderman of Brooklyn, the city of churches.

Mr. MORSE. Well, that is the same thing, only across the river.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am fond of wit, and shall have to repeat to my friend from New York the story I once told in Massachusetts, of a gentleman who drank at a hotel seven cups of coffee, when the waiter remarked to him that he must be very fond of coffee. He replied that he was fond of coffee, and he hated to drink so much slosh to get a little.

Now, I enjoy wit, but I do not like to have it too thin and scattered. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from New York has seen fit to refer to my personal business. Now, I submit that in every legislative body on earth, by all rules of parliamentary law, as well as decency, it is entirely out of order to refer to the personal business of a member, and such a reference was entirely unworthy of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPINOLA. I take it back.

Mr. MORSE. In the course of his argument he told us that he never drank two quarts of whisky in his life.

Mr. SPINOLA. Wrong again. I said I never drank a gallon.

Mr. MORSE. Whisky is evidently not the weakness of my venerable friend from New York. He rather fancies and his weakness is for a very tall and high shirt collar. [Laughter.]

But seriously, Mr. Chairman, there is no joke about this business. The moral principle involved in my amendment is one of great and serious import. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] rises here and demands to know from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what is the meaning of the discontent, want of discipline, and frequent desertions from the Army. I submit that the answer from the gentleman [Mr. CUTCHEON] was unsatisfactory, and I will answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas by saying that I believe the evils of which he complains are largely due to the forty-one canteens already established in which drink is sold.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, a member of this House, told me this very day that he had a letter from a soldier who committed a crime under the influence of drink bought at one of these canteens, was court-martialed, and is now serving a three-year sentence in prison.

I have on my desk here a letter from an Army chaplain. I wish my time would admit of my reading it. In this letter he can not find words strong enough to denounce these Government saloons.

Mr. Chairman, I have no objections to other provisions of this bill. Indeed, I believe in it. I believe that it is right and proper that the canteens should contain a reading-room, a library, a gymnasium. This provision is all right and I shall be glad to vote for it, but for the saloon attachment I will never vote. And again, I warn my party associates on this side of the House that the Republican party can not afford to reject my amendment and legalize these Government saloons. Refuse to pass this amendment, and I tell you that when the people are heard from a protest will come up here that will shake this Capitol from its foundations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to ask the Chair how much time there is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon one side there is four minutes in favor of the amendment, and eight minutes in opposition to the proposition. The gentleman from Michigan will be recognized.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like the friends of the amendment to exhaust their time now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] for four minutes.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think that the remark of the gentleman from New York needs correction. I do not think there is anything in Army life that so seriously interferes with the service of men and officers as the sale of intoxicating liquors. The gentleman from Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] says that he was in the Army three years and that his experience was that the sale of liquor was an injury. I know it was an injury. I know that the men in my company who never drank a drop of intoxicating liquors were the men who stood the service best. That was my experience; and they were in the swamps of the South; they were in the most unhealthy places in the South; and the men who were entirely free from the use of liquors were the men who got through the service in the best health and with the best constitutions.

Now, I make another statement, that we are having men come here from day to day asking us to pension the widows of officers in the Army at from $50 to $100 per month, and in nearly every one of those cases it is reported that these officers have left a poor widow, without a dollar in the world. Why is it? It is because, notwithstanding the fact that they have for thirty or forty years had a salary of two, three, or five thousand dollars a year, they have spent every dollar of that money in extravagant habits, including the use of large quantities of wine. Why, a man can not have a dinner with a general officer of the United States Army without having dollars of money expended for wines and beers and costly liquors, where there is a tenth of that that would be of advantage to the individual. And if you want to save the money of the United States, if you want to save unnecessary expenditures in the Army, you must suppress this habit of using intoxicating liquors in the Army, because it is a thing which costs a vast amount to the American people.

I come from a State that has prohibited the sale of wine and beer, as well as intoxicating liquors of every kind, and their experience has been that crime has been reduced. While the population of the State has increased one-fourth, the criminal expenses have been reduced fully one-third while that law has been in force, and the same result will apply to the Army.

Why do we find so many disabled men in the Army, men who are lying around disabled? It is because they have acquired the habit of using intoxicating drinks. They begin with the use of the milder beverages, but we all know that as those are indulged in the persons who use them come to demand stronger liquors. I do not find any man who is not in the habit of using liquor himself who is in favor of permitting its sale to other men. At the bottom of the matter you will find, in almost every instance, that a man who advocates the sale of liquor to others is in the habit of using it himself.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has attempted to ridicule this question. I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a question before the American people to-day which occupies so much of their thought or that is weighing so heavily upon their consciences as this great question of the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquor; and are we, while this question is weighing so heavily upon the conscience of the people, to set the example of licensing the sale of ardent spirits by the Congress of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I yield three of the eight minutes remaining on our side to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, we are under the five-minute rule, and the chairman of the committee does not control all the time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was the understanding that I should control the time against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There were eight minutes left upon that side.

Mr. MILLS. But the chairman of the committee need not control it all. That is not necessary. The Chair can recognize some one else on that side.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment upon which the debate was limited was the motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; it was upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. McMILLIN. The proposition to strike out the last word was pending, but it may have been acted upon before the limitation was put upon the debate.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the chairman of the Military Committee has not the right to control the time. There was no authority given to him for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary for the gentleman to raise that point of order. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], and the gentleman from Michigan yielded three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Well, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] yielded two minutes to me, but the Chair refused to recognize the arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we can not legislate evil out of the country, neither can we control human appetite by legislative enactment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] talks about this bill as establishing beer saloons. There is nothing of that kind in the bill. It provides for canteens. What is a canteen? It is a store-house that is run by the soldiers themselves, a co-operative store-house. Now, what do these gentlemen propose to do? They propose to amend the bill so as to prevent the soldiers from selling wine and beer in the canteens, these co-operative store-houses, if they desire to do so. In other words, these temperance people—no better temperance men than I am myself—propose to send the soldiers out from the garrison, from the canteen, from the co-operative store-house into the hell-holes and rum-shops of the villages near which these Army posts are situated. They propose to take the control from the officers who have these men under their command and send the men out into the villages in order that they may fill themselves with this "fire of hell" as it is called. That is the practical view which sensible men take of the effect of such an amendment as is offered here by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, I am for practical common sense in dealing with this question. If these gentlemen desire to promote temperance among the soldiers, why will they not take the universal and uncontradicted testimony of the officers who have had this matter under consideration and who tell us that this canteen system is a great means of promoting temperance? But these gentlemen will probably reply by reading the letter of some crank, some man who has but little sense, some man who has but one idea in his head, and if he don't get it out his head will burst wide open. [Laughter.] We propose to place this matter under the control of the officers of the Army and to allow the soldiers to have what the people have in Massachusetts, local option. If the public sentiment at a post is not in favor of having these liquors sold, "local option" can be invoked and can control the matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time that remains I desire to say a few words. This is a choice between the canteen and the post-trader. The post-trader is an existing institution, authorized by law to exist at every military post, with the right to sell these light wines and beer that are sold in the canteens, and he is beyond the jurisdiction of a military court to try him for a military offense if he evades the law. The object of the Secretary of War in recommending this legislation to enable him to establish these canteens is purely in the interest of morals and of temperance.

I talked with the Secretary upon the subject this morning. He said to me that he had been a prohibitionist for thirty-five years, that he had been in favor of prohibition in Vermont, that he had voted for prohibition in both branches of the Legislature of that State, that he had been an open and avowed advocate of it everywhere, that he was a temperance man himself, and yet that the concurrent testimony of the military officers at every post where the canteen system had been tried certified to him that it had decreased drunkenness and other offenses in the Army more than 50 per cent.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. There are three minutes remaining of the time allowed for debate on this amendment. The gentleman from Michigan, who had five minutes, yielded two to the gentleman from Ohio, and has now spoken three. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] for three minutes.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, we have always been taught that "consistency is a jewel," and to some extent I agree with that suggestion. The last resolution of the last Republican platform reads as follows:

Resolved, That the first concern of all good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the home. The Republican party sympathizes with all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality.

Now, that sounds beautiful. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. It sounds better than anything we have had from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPINOLA. It comes like a bugle blast in the night. But I want the people of the United States to understand the fact that the Republican party, being in possession and control of this House of Congress and everything pertaining to it, has established a "canteen" for the sale of rum in the basement underneath, where we are supposed to legislate soberly, for the good of our common country. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] That is the kind of "consistency" we are invited to admire—the consistency which is proclaimed "a jewel" by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

I accept the proposition made by the excited gentlemen on the other side of the House, and if they wish to vote this intemperate proposition into the bill, let them do so. We will go to the people upon the fact as to whether they will sustain the Republican party in the running of an unlicensed rum-shop in the basement of the Capitol of this country.

Now, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], whom I love [laughter], made some allusion to my collar. Why, it is here as stiff as a rail and as clean as cleanness itself; and if it were three or four times as large as it is, and he were wearing it, it would not hide his ears. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

The question having been put,

The CHAIRMAN said: The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 20, noes 41.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PICKLER and Mr. CUTCHEON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 45.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following:

For shelter, shooting-galleries, ranges, repairs, and expenses incident thereto $10,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rifle-range at Fort Sheridan, $10,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The hour has arrived when it seems proper that the Committee of the Whole should rise. This amendment can go over to be pending when the committee shall sit again, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] prefers that course. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7619) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3279) to suspend the enforcement of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced agreement to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and that the Senate further insisted on its amendment numbered 41 to the said bill.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk. It looks to the saving of human life and involves no appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the president of the Mississippi River Commission be, and is hereby, authorized, out of any money heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River, to purchase or hire such boats as may be immediately necessary to rescue inhabitants in the overflowed districts of the Mississippi River Valley, and to use said boats for the purpose named.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 136).

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would be glad to hear from the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] a statement of the urgency or necessity which calls for the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to give the gentleman the information he desires. I hold in my hand two telegrams from the United States engineer stationed in the district along the Mississippi Valley opposite the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Northern Louisiana. I read these telegrams:

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 27, 1890.

To CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, Washington, D. C.:

Twenty skiffs needed to rescue overflowed people; telegraphic authority requested at not exceeding $30 each.

YOUNG, Engineer.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 27, 1890.

To CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, Washington, D. C.:
Telegraphic authority requested to charter small steamer and barge at $75 per day, to rescue people on Steele's Bayou.

Captain YOUNG.

A letter addressed by the honorable Secretary of War to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 29, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose for your information two telegrams received from Captain Willard Young, Corps of Engineers, dated Memphis, Tenn., March 27, relative to hiring water transportation for the relief of sufferers by the overflow in Mississippi.

Authority has been granted to this officer to use the Government boats and barges to rescue the inhabitants in the overflowed districts, but the purchase or hire of boats for this purpose from the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River is not authorized by law.

Very respectfully,

REDFIELD PROCTOR, Secretary of War.

HON. T. C. CATCHINGS,
House of Representatives.

Two copies of telegrams, herewith.

The resolution which I have presented merely gives to the president of the Mississippi River Commission authority to use a part of the money now to the credit of the improvement fund of the lower Mississippi River in the purchase of skiffs and barges and the hire of boats to rescue the people in the overflowed districts. And I will say that nine-tenths of those people are negroes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. State how much there is of this fund which is allowed to be used.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is to the credit of Captain Young, engineer in charge of that district, by allotment made recently by the Mississippi River Commission, as I am informed by telegrams received to-day by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], the sum of $20,000; and he wishes authority to be given that a part of that amount may be used in the hire of boats and skiffs to rescue these people.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The confusion was so great when the joint resolution was read I did not hear it perfectly, and I ask to have it read again.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be again read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the following amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided the expenditure under this resolution shall not exceed $3,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I submit to my friend from Illinois that is too small an amount. Human life is at stake here.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened to the gentleman's telegrams. Fifteen skiffs, at $30 each, and the hire of a boat at $30; is not $3,000 enough?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not for the hire of boats.

Mr. CANNON. It does not say anything about the hire of boats. It says skiffs—

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. I mean the purchase of boats.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether he does not think the local, municipal, and State authorities will come to the rescue of these people?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is based on these telegrams received from the United States engineer in charge down there to the Secretary of War. The Mississippi River Commission have boats down there which are needed and are now permitted to be used, but additional boats are needed, and the Secretary of War states the purchase and hire of boats for saving life can not be made under the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River. This resolution simply authorizes the Mississippi River Commission to use a portion of this fund for this purpose so far as it may be necessary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is not $3,000 enough?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It appears to me to be too small a sum. This joint resolution does not carry an appropriation. Out of moneys already appropriated it provides a portion shall be used for this purpose.

Mr. COLEMAN. Let me inquire whether the State of Louisiana has petitioned for this appropriation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is not in our State.

Mr. COLEMAN. I object to the State of Louisiana being presented here in the attitude of a pauper. If there is necessity for anything being done there is no necessity for the people of Louisiana to come to the General Government and appeal for the necessary funds to save life.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If my colleague will permit me a moment, this does not come from the State of Louisiana. I do not offer it on the part of the people of that State.

Mr. COLEMAN. Does the gentleman say it comes from Mississippi?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is based on telegrams from Captain Young, the engineer officer in charge.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think I can make this matter entirely plain in a very few moments.

In the first place I will state that the communication referred to by the gentleman from Louisiana came to me, as has been stated by him, and, being very much occupied in the room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I prepared the resolution in conjunction with my friend from Louisiana, and it was agreed between us that each would look out for an opportunity to get it in; if I should be absent that he would avail himself of the first chance, and if he was absent that I would do likewise, the Speaker of the House kindly consenting to allow us to present the resolution for the consideration of the House.

This resolution is designed, I will state for the information of the House, to rescue a number of negroes who are living off on bayous and creeks where they are cut off from assistance and are rendered absolutely helpless because of the floods.

It has been asked if the State of Mississippi could not itself afford this relief. I suppose it could afford it if the State Legislature was in session and an opportunity was presented to frame an appropriation to meet the emergency. But we have no contingent fund which is available or which the governor could use for any such purpose. This information comes to me from authentic sources; it comes from the engineer of the Government, who is competent to determine the extent of the danger that threatens. It did not originate with me. I knew nothing about it until I received this communication recently which has been laid before the House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to limit the appropriation if it is important or necessary as far as that is concerned, and yet I do not desire that it should be an indefinite appropriation. If the gentleman thinks that $3,000 is not enough, then I will make it $5,000 or $8,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Better make it $10,000.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that ordinarily it is a proper thing to fix a limit to the expenditure of the public money, but this is a case of emergency and the need of relief is pressing. You may be perfectly satisfied that the president of the Mississippi Commission will not waste the money which may be assigned for this purpose. I have just read a telegram in the Evening Star, foreshadowing one of the greatest disasters that have ever befallen the Mississippi Valley; it is to the effect that the levees on both sides of the river are melting away like mush. Now, if we undertake to fix any such limit as that assigned by the gentleman from Illinois, we may so cramp the exertions of these people in their efforts to preserve human life that what we appropriate will be of little value.

Mr. STRUBLE. But Congress can come to the rescue at any time just as it has come to-day.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Of course, if there was time to make an appeal here and have it acted upon that might be done. But I am not finding fault with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, although I think it would be better to make the amount much larger.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me a moment, I would like to say a word on this question.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know what importance is to be attached to the predictions or prophecies of the Signal Service. Certainly in some instances we have had evidence that they have afforded most valuable information as to the approach of storms, and I have just read in the papers of to-day a prediction by Sergeant Dunn, of the Signal Service, if I recollect aright, that in the near future the Mississippi Valley will be visited with the most disastrous calamity of modern times, one of the greatest floods known in the history of the country, and he supplements his prediction with the statement that if he were living in the city of New Orleans at the time the flood wave strikes that city he would not regard his life as being worth five cents.

Mr. KILGORE. That shows pretty plainly that he does not know anything whatever about the condition of affairs at New Orleans.

Mr. ROGERS. But, Mr. Speaker, whether that prediction is based on any supposed reliable data or not, I know one thing is certain, that if an appropriation is to be made for the relief of these people who are now in danger, it does not seem to me it ought to be left in that situation that the Army officers should be cramped in their operations, but that they should be permitted to use these boats for relief wherever needed. I do not know whether they will be needed at all; but if they are needed this provision ought to be made effective, whether they are to be used in Louisiana, Arkansas, or Mississippi. In a case where human life is at stake we ought not to draw any strict lines as to appropriations of this character.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I would like also to impress upon the House the fact that the president of the Mississippi Commission is General Comstock, who is well known to many here present, and there is not to-day in the service of the Government a more prudent, painstaking, or efficient officer. He will have the disposition of this fund, and, knowing him as I do, I would not hesitate, if it were a contribution from my own private funds, to leave it entirely to his discretion. If, however, it is deemed best to limit the appropriation, as the gentleman suggests, of course I can not object. I feel that I have discharged my duty in bringing the matter to the attention of the House, and hope it will receive the attention which I think its importance demands.

Mr. COLEMAN. In connection with the prediction of Sergeant Dunn, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a telegram which is addressed to me, and sent by B. F. Eshleman, the president of the New Orleans Board of Trade, in which he says:

Sergeant Dunn's sensational forecast will work great injury to this section unless authoritatively contradicted by General Greeley.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move that be referred to General Greely.

Mr. PRICE. Has General Greely made any authoritative denial?

Mr. COLEMAN. Can the gentleman tell me where I may find him?

Mr. PRICE. At the Signal Office, I presume.

Mr. COLEMAN. I have not received this telegram more than a half an hour ago, but I desire to submit it to him.

Mr. CANNON. I will withdraw the amendment, as the gentleman thinks it is in the interest of saving human life and as the Arkansas and Mississippi Legislatures are not in session and no fund provided to take care of these people. In the presence of death or great danger I do not feel like insisting on the amendment, and will withdraw it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope that this resolution will be passed in a liberal form. I shall certainly take great pleasure in voting for it, if it is to relieve Louisiana and Mississippi, as I have always done; and I do not know of anything that could add to the pleasure I should feel for either of these States unless it would be the especial pleasure it would give me to vote for some such relief for the people of Arkansas, representing as I do the liberal-minded people of the town of Eastport, in the State of Maine. [Laughter.]

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

REPAIR SHOPS FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion to adjourn until I can ask unanimous consent for the passage of a joint resolution from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will withdraw that motion temporarily.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 123) construing part of act of March 2, 1889, making appropriations for the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That such part of the act of March 2, 1889, making appropriations for the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General as appropriates $10,000 "for the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to make a lease of a suitable place in the city of Washington, and to furnish and equip the same with tools, implements, and machinery and other material which may be necessary to repair mail bags and sacks, and mail locks and keys," shall be construed so that the appropriation (until exhausted) shall cover all expenses of purchasing tools, implements, and machinery and other material, and that the "other material" mentioned above shall be construed to mean such other material as is necessary to put the building leased for the shops in a suitable condition for repairing the various mail equipments used by the Post-Office Department, and that all other material and machinery found necessary to the successful operation of the repair shops shall be purchased and paid for out of the funds appropriated for the purchase of mail bags and locks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to ask of the gentleman in charge of it what is the necessity for it?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will explain the necessity of it. It is simply this: That in the construction by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury of the words "other material," which were in the last appropriation bill, and which was intended for the purchase of lumber and other material to put the shops in a condition for repair, the use of the words "other material," this Sixth Auditor has construed, applies to the purchase of hemp, jute, leather, and all that pertains to the repair of the mail bags and sacks and that which goes to the repair of the mail locks and keys. The construction is simply on the words "other material." The $10,000 was wanted for the shops, to put the shops in perfect repair for the work of repairing the mail sacks and the like.

Mr. McMILLIN. What I inquired was whether that is allowed under any existing law.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is made necessary by the construction of the Sixth Auditor; in view of the fact that it authorizes the Department to buy material for the repair of mail locks, keys, and mail bags and sacks, that the appropriation, therefore, would be exhausted. This appropriation of $10,000 went to the equipment of the building, and not to the repair of that which is to be repaired in the building.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the last Congress, thoroughly understands the proposition. It was so intended when we passed that paragraph in the last appropriation bill, and it comes unanimously reported from the committee for the reason that the entire repair shop to-day is tied up because the Sixth Auditor says you can not spend as you have heretofore spent out of the appropriation for the repair of mail locks, keys, sacks, and the like for repairing, but this money can only be used for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Has it the approval of the Department?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is urgently asked for by the Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it was held by the last Postmaster-General, when this scheme was inaugurated, that it would effect a very large saving to the Government in the matter of mail-bag repairs. It was passed in the House without any adverse criticism. I think it is very important that it should be passed now.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE IN THE CHICKASAW NATION.

Mr. HARE obtained unanimous consent to have the following memorial, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, printed in the RECORD:

Answer of the Chickasaws to the memorial of certain white men, complaining that they have been unlawfully deprived of the elective franchise in the Chickasaw Nation.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

In answer to the memorial of certain white men, complaining that they have been unlawfully deprived of the elective franchise in the Chickasaw Nation, the Chickasaws respectfully ask leave to submit the following statement:

It is true that article 33, of the treaty of April 28, 1866, contains the following provision:

"Every white person who, having married a Choctaw or Chickasaw, resides in the said Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation, or who has been adopted by the legislative authorities, is to be deemed a member of said nation."

But this provision of the treaty contemplates the actual relation of marriage, maintained in good faith, and not the mere performance of the marriage ceremony, as a device for the acquisition of Chickasaw citizenship and Chickasaw lands, to be followed by immediate and permanent separation of the persons so nominally married. If only such white men as the treaty was intended to embrace had sought the benefit of its provisions, the Chickasaws would not have withheld from them the elective franchise. But in recent years the appreciation of the value of the Chickasaw lands has stimulated the rapid development of a new branch of business in the Chickasaw Nation. To get a Chickasaw wife is, in the language of the new industry, to "get a Chickasaw right."

The white husband abandons the Chickasaw wife as soon as the marriage ceremony is performed; but he never relaxes his hold on the pasture lands to which he claims to have acquired a treaty right by this fraud upon the Chickasaw Nation. In view of the rapidly increasing number of such frauds and the vast amount of land thereby acquired, the Chickasaws are constrained, as a matter of self-defense, to withhold the ballot from the men by whom they are perpetrated. Frauds of this class resemble each other so closely that one will fairly illustrate all. A citizen of Texas, having realized a considerable sum of money from the sale of property in Texas, crossed the Red River into the Chickasaw Nation on Sunday to establish a cattle ranch, stating that he was going over to "get a right" in the Chickasaw Nation.

On Monday he proposed marriage to an estimable Chickasaw woman and was contemptuously rejected. On Wednesday he married a Chickasaw woman who had had several children, but had never had any husband. When he applied for a license he was unable to give the name of his intended wife. The marriage ceremony was performed, and when he became the husband of this woman of ill-fame and the stepfather of her illegitimate children, he became a Chickasaw citizen. But as soon as the ceremony was performed the husband abandoned his wife and his stepchildren. One of the undersigned remonstrated with the county judge who performed this marriage ceremony, but was informed that it was the seventh ceremony of a similar kind performed by the same county judge during the year.

In compensation for the honor resulting to the Chickasaws from this nominal relation of husband of a Chickasaw woman and stepfather of Chickasaw children, the Chickasaw Nation is compelled by the treaty of 1866 to recognize this man as a citizen of the Chickasaw Nation and to permit him to occupy as a cattle ranch a tract of land with a front of 2 miles on the Canadian River. The Chickasaws submit that this is a high price for the honor realized out of the transaction, without a grant of the ballot to the covetous husband and stepfather. This case is a representative of a large class of the cases covered by the memorial now under consideration. But another large class is represented by the case of a Chickasaw citizen whose citizenship was acquired as follows:

T. C. Thomas, a white man, married Susan Love, a Chickasaw woman, the daughter of one of the subscribers of this statement. The wife died. Thomas then married Martha Jones, a white woman, and subsequently himself died. The widow of Thomas afterwards married Perry Thompson, a white man. Perry Thompson then claimed that the marriage of the white man, Thomas, to Susan Love made Thomas a Chickasaw Indian; that the subsequent marriage of Thomas to the white woman, Martha Jones, made Martha a Chickasaw Indian; that the subsequent marriage of Thompson to Martha, the widow of Thomas, made Thompson a Chickasaw Indian, and, accordingly, by this ingenious circuitry, Thompson claimed and secured all the advantages of citizenship in the Chickasaw Nation. He represents a class of the persons who now seek redress at the hands of Congress.

The Chickasaws respectfully submit that, while bona fide marriage does secure citizenship under the provisions of the treaty of 1866, the citizenship so secured does not include the right to vote. The right of suffrage is a political right originally conferred as well as regulated by law; a right which may be conferred upon or withheld from those who do not exercise it by those who do exercise it, and may be withdrawn from such of those who exercise it as the others may be able in the mode prescribed by constitutional or valid statutory provisions to deprive of the right. Accordingly the Chickasaws availed themselves of the right, which is inalienable in every government, to withhold the elective franchise from all white men who had married Chickasaw wives, finding it impossible to separate in practice those who in good faith maintained the marriage relation from those who resorted to the marriage ceremony merely as a trick for robbing the Chickasaws of their pasture land.

The governor of the Chickasaw Nation applied, through the Secretary of the Interior, to the Attorney-General for his interpretation of the clause of the treaty of 1866, just cited, and the Chickasaws were ready to abide by his interpretation of that treaty provision. The reply of the Attorney-General was that the treaty of 1866, while it did secure to the white men mentioned in article 33 citizenship in the Chickasaw Nation, did not secure to them the elective franchise; that the elective franchise was not a necessary incident of citizenship, and that it was competent for the Chickasaw Nation to grant to or withhold from these white men the right to vote in that nation.

Subsequently the same white men applied for redress to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Commissioner adopted the decision of the Attorney-General.

The claim of the memorialists that the right to vote has been vested by the Chickasaw constitution in these white men is erroneous. It is impossible for the people or the authorities exercising, at one time, the power to frame the organic law, to so fetter the people or other depositaries of political power that, at a subsequent time, they can not, by an amendment of their constitution, either confer a right to vote upon those who had not previously enjoyed that right or withhold the right to vote from those who had previously enjoyed it. The words "succeeding Legislature," in section 11 of the general provisions of the Chickasaw constitution, as there used, mean "succeeding session" of the Legislature. The Chickasaw constitution contemplates no succession of legislatures. The constitutional amendment withholding suffrage from these white men is valid.

It is true, as the memorialists state, that the right of suffrage has been heretofore accorded to white men, and the Chickasaws would never have thought of withdrawing it if no frauds had been practiced upon the nation under cover of the treaty stipulations. But it came to pass that a large proportion of the white men, who exercised the right of suffrage by virtue of marriage with Chickasaw women, had either lost their Chickasaw wives and married white women or abandoned or become divorced from their Chickasaw wives. And these facts, coupled with the rapid accumulation of cases in which marriages were sought for the sole purpose of enabling white men to obtain the use of Chickasaw lands, compelled the Chickasaws in self-defense to withhold a privilege which had been generously bestowed, but had been most unjustly abused.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WASHINGTON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Olympia, this 17th day of February, A. D. 1890.

[SEAL.]

ALLEN WEIR, Secretary of State.

[Senate memorial No. 19.]

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Washington, would respectfully represent:

That, notwithstanding the great volume and immense value of the agricultural and manufactured products of the United States, the percentage thereof exported to foreign countries in American vessels is insignificant; which fact, when compared with the earlier history of the commerce of the country, is extremely humiliating to the pride as well as detrimental to the interests of every patriotic American citizen;

That we are the producers of various articles of agriculture, the manufacturers of oleaginous and cereal merchandise, of agricultural implements, of milling and mining machinery, of woolen and cotton fabrics, of furniture and household wares, which are unexcelled by those of any other country, but the great and pressing want is efficient means of transportation to those who would be consumers of our products, and thereby afford us a wider market and encourage the development of our resources;

That the establishment of a steam-ship line or lines between the United States of America and the republics of Central and South America and the empires of Japan and China would place our farmers and manufacturers in a position to compete successfully in their markets with other countries, and thereby secure the trade that properly belongs to us;

That our merchant marine, which was once the pride of every American citizen, has declined from its former proud eminence to comparative decay and unimportance, a result largely attributable to the neglect of our General Government and the liberality and fostering care of foreign nations in subsidizing their steam-ship lines, and as there can be no doubt that a similar course of subsidizing our own merchant marine by our Government would enable us to regain our share of the commerce of the world;

Therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Washington, would most respectfully and earnestly petition your honorable body to enact speedy and effective legislation making appropriations and granting subsidies for the purpose of aiding American citizens and American capital in establishing and maintaining at least two lines of steam-ships from the Pacific coast of the United States, one from the port of San Francisco to the Central and South American republics, and one from Puget Sound to China and Japan.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.
Passed the senate January 13, 1890.

CHAS. E. LAUGHTON,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house January 15, 1890.

TREASURY NOTES AND BULLION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed.

Mr. REAGAN. In pursuance of the notice given by me on Saturday, I call up the bill (S. 2350) authorizing the issue of Treasury notes on deposits of silver bullion and the bill (S. 1558) to provide for the free coinage of both gold and silver, and for the issuance of coin certificates to circulate as money, and for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and for other purposes, with a view of submitting some remarks thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the Senate bill No. 2350, "authorizing the issue of Treasury notes on deposits of silver bullion," as reported by the Committee on Finance, deserves most serious consideration. I suppose it is intended to relieve the country from the evil effects of the worse than blunder of Congress in suspending the coinage of silver dollars by the act of February 12, 1873. It is a hopeful sign that a Republican Senate should join in this great work, though the remedy proposed may not be the best. It is something to the country that the existence of this great wrong has at last been recognized and admitted, and that a remedy may now be hoped for.

I will go beyond a strict discussion of the merits of this bill, and will inquire what are the causes and what the meaning of all the complaints of hard times and scarcity of money, burdensome debts, and mortgaged farms, which are coming to us from all parts of the country? And what are the remedies for these grievances?

Gold and silver have been the money of the world as far back as we know either its history or its traditions. These constituted the money of the mother country and of the English colonies before they became American States.

The Constitution of the United States provides that—

The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin.

And that—

No State shall * * * coin money * * * or make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts—

Thus making gold and silver coin the lawful and constitutional money of this country.

For a more full understanding of this important question I submit the following statements as to amounts of the precious metals.

The world's estimated product of the precious metals from 1498 to 1889, as estimated by Dr. Soetbeer from 1493 to 1879, and by the American Almanac from 1880 to 1886, and E. O. Leech, Director of the Mint, from 1887 to 1889, has been:

Of gold .....	$5,740,918,565
Of silver .....	7,222,227,433
Aggregating .....	12,963,546,435

I do not assume that the whole of this is now available as money, as there has been some loss by abrasion and by other casualties, and a still greater reduction by the amount which has gone into the arts.

I also give the world's estimated production of the precious metals from 1873, when Congress suspended the coinage of silver dollars, to 1889. It was:

Of gold .....	$1,666,150,000
Of silver .....	758,495,000
Aggregating .....	2,424,645,000

The estimated production of the precious metals in the United States from the organization of the Mint, in 1792, to 1889 was:

Gold .....	$1,839,061,769
Silver .....	921,645,000
Aggregate .....	2,760,706,769

The production of the precious metals in the United States from 1873, when Congress demonetized silver, to 1889 was:

Gold .....	$804,600,000
Silver .....	850,300,000
Aggregate .....	1,657,900,000

The production of the precious metals in the United States from 1878, when Congress provided for the limited recoinage of silver, to 1889 was:

Gold .....	$420,075,000
Silver .....	584,145,000
Aggregate .....	1,004,220,000

I have thought it best to make these statements to aid in an understanding of the questions I shall discuss, and to show, approximately at least, the amount of metal money which is employed in and produced by this country, and to show the relative amounts of gold and silver so employed.

The amount of coinage in the mints of the United States from the organization of the Mint to June 30, 1889, was as follows:

Five-cent pieces .....	$9,917,060.90
Three-cent pieces .....	940,785.45
Two-cent pieces .....	912,020.00
One-cent pieces .....	8,754,804.06
Half-cent pieces .....	39,926.11
Gold .....	1,500,666,207.00
Silver .....	567,291,251.45
Minor coins .....	20,564,596.52
Aggregate .....	2,109,086,651.49

Omitting the several kinds of minor coins, this table shows that there has been coined since the organization of the mint $933,375,045.55 more gold than silver.

By the eleventh section of the act of Congress of April 2, 1792, it was provided that the proportioned value of gold and silver coins should be as 15 to 1; "that is to say, every fifteen pounds weight of pure silver shall be of equal value in all payments with one pound weight of pure gold." By this act silver was overvalued as compared with the standards of other countries. The effect of this was to some extent to drive gold out of the country.

By the ninth section of the act of Congress of January 18, 1837, the proportioned value of silver to gold coins was made as 16 to 1. By this act silver was undervalued as compared with the standards of other countries, which, in about all the commercial nations of the world, was then, as now, 15½ to 1. This undervaluation of our silver-dollar coins, making them worth about 3 per cent. more than coins of like denominations in Europe and elsewhere, it is believed caused the exportation of much of the silver bullion produced in this country up to the time of the degradation of silver by the legislation of the United States and of the most of the nations of Europe; and it is believed that this fact accounts for the very limited amount of silver coinage from 1837 to 1878, at which latter date Congress provided for the compulsory coinage of not less than two million nor more than four million dollars worth of silver bullion per month.

The bill under consideration proposes to repeal so much of the act of 1878 as requires the coinage of not less than two million nor more than four million dollars' worth of silver per month, and to require the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver bullion to the amount of $4,500,000 worth per month, and to issue Treasury notes for a like amount, redeemable in the lawful money of the United States, and made receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and which, when held by national-banking associations, may be counted as part of their lawful reserve.

If this bill should become a law it would no doubt give temporary relief to the people, but I think it is to be regretted that the committee did not report a bill providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver the same as of gold.

While this bill provides for a largely increased use of silver it perpetuates the legal discriminations now existing against silver and in favor of gold. It still retains for the Government the exclusive privilege of coining on Government account silver bullion as money, while gold is coined for any private person who may take it to the mints free of charge. And this bill recognizes the idea that there is too much silver produced and that the amount to be put in circulation must be limited by law.

It was not the great amount of the world's product of silver nor the amount of silver in circulation which caused its deterioration in value; for at the date of the passage of our act of Congress in 1873, suspending the coinage of silver dollars, our silver dollars were commanding a premium above gold. The reason for the demonetization of silver was that it would increase the value of gold and of bonds and other evidences of indebtedness, and that it would increase the value of fixed incomes; that it would tend to enrich the creditor classes and those who owned money. This would, of course, in a corresponding degree increase the burdens of those who were debtors, whether persons, corporations, or States, and of those who create wealth by labor. It was inspired chiefly by the English and German bondholders, by the privileged and wealthy of Europe who lived on fixed incomes, and by the bondholders and bankers of this country. It sprang from the venal and corrupt motives of those who designed to enrich themselves by oppressing and wronging others. And I am persuaded history will write it down as the greatest legislative crime and the most stupendous conspiracy against the welfare of the people of the United States and of Europe which this or any other age has witnessed.

While the masses of the people of this country and of the Governments of Europe which participated in this conspiracy all suffered greatly from the effects of silver demonetization, the holders of gold have, by this policy, had their hoards increased about 30 per cent. in value. The holders of Government and corporate securities have realized a like or greater increase in their value. And those who enjoy fixed incomes find the purchasing power of those incomes greatly increased.

The United States was, in 1873, as now, a great debtor country. The several States, nearly all of them, the municipal corporations of this country, most of them, and the railroads, and many other corporations of this country were debtors then, as they are now, to an enormous extent, mostly to English capitalists, but to a considerable extent to German capitalists, not to speak of the great aggregate of indebtedness of joint-stock companies and individual citizens of this country. And on this account it was against the interests and policy of this country to add some 33 per cent. to this vast volume of indebtedness, as was done by the demonetization of silver in 1873. The United States, then as now, was the largest silver-producing country in the world.

The world's production of silver during the calendar years 1878 to 1889, inclusive, was $1,368,200,000. The production of silver in the United States during the same time was $584,145,000. It is thus seen that during the last twelve years the United States has produced about 43 per cent. of all the silver produced in the world. A principal effect of the demonetization of silver was greatly to depreciate this vast fund of wealth in its value while reducing the value of all other property to gold prices. The royal commission of Great Britain, in 1886, which was appointed to investigate the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals, estimate that the reduction of the prices of commodities generally was about 33 per cent. by demonetizing silver. Other authorities estimate this reduction at from 30 to 35 per cent. The value of all the property in the United States in the year 1850 was estimated at $7,135,780,228.11. In 1860 it was estimated at $16,159,616,068. In 1870 it was estimated at $30,068,518,507. In 1880 it was estimated at $43,642,000,000. These estimates are taken from Spofford's Almanac for 1890. The New York World Almanac for this year estimates, on the authority of the financial officers of each State and Territory, that the value of the property in the United States is this year $61,459,000,000. If the revolution in prices caused by the degradation of silver has reduced the value of this property by the sum of 33 per cent., it means a loss to the owners of this property $18,437,700,000.

The wages of labor went down in very nearly the same ratio. And by the depression of business thousands of laboring people in this and other countries were thrown out of employment. And Senators will remember how bankruptcy and financial ruin spread their sickening pall all over this country from 1873 until 1878 and the vast amount of property which, during that time, was sold for taxes, because money was so scarce and dear that a large part of the people could not obtain it to pay either debts or taxes.

On December 31, 1888, Poor's Manual shows the interest on the indebtedness of the railroads of the United States to have been $361,835,317.69.

The net earnings of these railroads for that year was $382,261,557, only $20,426,240 more than the interests on their debts.

The same authority shows that the excess of available revenue over actual payments for that year was only $14,708,010; which was the sum available for that year for the payment of their enormous debts and their accruing interest of about 7 per cent. per annum. The interest on some of this indebtedness is higher and on some lower than the rate above supposed. But the average is probably about 7 per cent.

These figures are presented to show how difficult, if not impossible, it will be for our American railroads to pay their indebtedness in gold with the prices of commodities and of transportation reduced to gold rates.

Most of this indebtedness was created when gold and silver and United States legal-tender notes were the current and lawful money of the country, and before the prices of commodities and of transportation had been reduced by the demonetization and degradation of silver by our own and other countries.

With values reduced 33 per cent. by the degradation of silver by the combined action of the United States and the Governments of Western Europe this would be equal to adding to the indebtedness of our railroads the sum of $1,705,795,069, increasing it to the sum $6,874,871,036. It would require, on the basis of last year's receipts, the entire net earnings of our railroads for about eighteen years to pay the principal of this indebtedness without reference to the supposed interest of $361,835,317 which would accrue annually. And this without being compounded would, in eighteen years, produce an aggregate of interest of $6,513,035,706. In the year 1873, when silver was demonetized, the public debt of the United States amounted $2,234,482,993.

The reduction of the value of commodities and labor out of which this debt was to be paid 33 per cent. by the demonetization of silver resulted substantially in increasing the debt about $737,379,387.

The State, county, and municipal debts in the United States in the year 1880, as shown by the census, amounted to $1,056,584,146. Thirty-three per cent. of this sum makes $348,672,768.

We have no means of determining the amount of other descriptions of corporate indebtedness and of the debts of associations and individuals, the payment of which, like those just mentioned, was influenced and rendered more difficult by the demonetizing of silver. But their aggregate doubtless amounted to more than a thousand million dollars.

Now, let us recapitulate the supposed increase of the items of known indebtedness as just stated:

Increase of railroad indebtedness.....	$1,705,795,069
Increase of national debt.....	737,379,387
Increase of State, county, and municipal debts.....	348,672,768

Aggregating..... 2,791,847,224

I make these statements to show that the act of Congress of 1873 demonetizing silver, in connection with the hostile policy of Great Britain and Germany and the Latin Union and other governments of Europe towards silver as money, was the equivalent, to the people of the United States, of the creation of a new debt of $2,791,847,224 in connection with the three items of indebtedness I have mentioned above. How great the other burdens of debt and taxation imposed on our people in connection with other classes of corporations and associations and individuals by this legislation and policy I have no means of stating, but it must have been enormous.

Now, let us not forget that this was debt created by law, for which those who have to pay it received no consideration and for which those who received it have not paid anything. It was simply the transfer of that enormous amount of values from one class of our people, without price or consideration, by a bold, bald, audacious, and fraudulent piece of legislation, for the purpose of making the rich richer and the poor of the country poorer, of making dear money and cheap labor and property.

Will this Senate continue to sanction this great wrong and outrage and refuse to adopt a partial remedy by restoring our ancient and constitutional currency of silver and gold, without any legal discrimination against silver? I say "partial remedy," because much injustice, much wrong, has already been done by demonetizing silver which can never be remedied.

The reduction of the value of farms, factories, and other kinds of property and labor in this country by the degradation of silver is almost incalculable. This policy has been the cause of the sacrifice of thousands of homes, and has entailed a vast amount of poverty and suffering on the people, for which no action which Congress can take can ever reward them. In the name of justice and humanity let us now, by an act of wise statesmanship, protect our people against such wrongs in the future.

These percentages of loss may to some extent have been influenced by other causes, such as the increased use of improved machinery and improved facilities for transportation. But I think there can be no doubt that it is mainly due to the efforts of the capitalistic classes to control the financial policy of this and other countries, so as to enrich the few at the expense of the many. I submit the following table to illustrate the fall of the prices of various staple commodities from the year 1873, when silver was demonetized by the United States, to the year 1886, as shown by the American Almanac. I have not the data to show later and lower prices:

R. Dodge, the statistician of the Agricultural Department, for December, 1889, giving the increase in the number of bushels of each and the decrease in the value of each from 1888 to 1889:

While such of the foregoing were some of the consequences of the demonetization of silver upon the interests of the people of this country, let us see how it affected the interests of Great Britain and Germany. Great Britain produced very little silver, and therefore had to make but little sacrifice in taking from it the quality of money. The United States produced a great deal of silver, and therefore had to make a great sacrifice in impairing its use as money. The following table shows the amount of silver produced in the United States and Great Britain, respectively, during the years of 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886:

	1883.	1884.	1885.	1886.	Aggregate.
United States.....	$46,200,000	$48,800,000	$51,600,000	$51,000,000	$197,600,000
Great Britain.....	209,000	335,000	316,000	420,750	1,280,750

This table shows that the United States produced during those years more than one hundred and fifty-four times as much silver as Great Britain. And by the demonetization of silver in 1873, in addition to other losses, the interests of tens of thousands of men engaged in silver mining and of their dependent families were to a large extent sacrificed by that Congress. While the interests of our people in these many respects were being thus sacrificed, Great Britain, by the shrewdness of her statesman and financiers, was enriching her people as the result of the stupidity of our Congress.

Our silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver, from the year 1834 to 1873, had ranged from the par of gold to a premium of 4.69 per cent. above gold. Since 1873 the discount on our silver dollars has ranged from 1.4 per cent. to the present discount of over 28 per cent.

Great Britain has profited by our folly by buying the greater part of our silver bullion at the current London rates of discount and coining it into rupees and using them or the bullion so purchased at par in her trade with India.

The amount of silver produced in the United States, at coinage rates, from 1873 to 1889, inclusive, was $584,145,000. The discount on silver in the London market during the years just named averaged about 15 per cent. If all this had been sold in Great Britain, as the greater part of it was, our loss and her gain would have been $87,621,750 in the single item of discount on silver bullion.

Great as this sacrifice has been to the people of this country and great as the profit growing out of it has been to Great Britain, it is the smallest part of the profit that country has derived from the demonetization of silver.

Capitalists of Great Britain own, and did then own, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of the interest-bearing bonds of other countries and of the corporations of other countries. They are the owners and holders of a considerable part of the bonds of the United States, of the bonds of the several States, of the bonds of the municipal corporations of this country, and of the bonds of the railroad corporations of this country. The bonds they hold on this and other countries constitute a considerable part of their dividend-paying property. It is to the interest of Great Britain to give these bonds the largest value.

To reduce the volume of the money of the world and the kinds of money out of which they can be paid is to increase the difficulty of paying them, by reducing the value of the property and labor required for their payment. For instance, a million bushels of wheat in 1873, when the average price of wheat was $1.90 cents per bushel, would have paid off $1,900,000 of American indebtedness. While a million bushels in 1886, when wheat was only worth 90½ cents a bushel, would only have paid off $907,500 of our indebtedness to that country.

So a million pounds of raw cotton in 1873, when its average price per pound was 17 cents, would have paid off $170,000, while a million pounds of cotton in 1886, when it was worth 8½ cents a pound, would only have paid off $88,880 of our debts to Great Britain. Germany has the same kind of an interest in this respect which Great Britain has, only in a less degree, as her people hold a less amount of the bonds of other countries.

The interest of the capitalists of both those countries was to secure the adoption of a financial policy which would make money scarce and dear and property and labor cheap, while on account of the large indebtedness of the governments, corporations, and people of this country, our true interest was to have had an ample volume of money with good prices for property and labor. And our statesmen and financiers owed it to our people to sustain such a policy instead of weakly or wickedly aiding to carry out the British and German policy by demonetizing silver.

The monometallists, the bondholders, most of the bankers and large money-holders, and many of those who have fixed incomes in this and other countries continue their war on silver as money. They are continuing this struggle for dear money and cheap labor and cheap property. It is this that justifies, at this time, my review of the unwise and impolitic demonetization of silver. The pretense for this was that there was too much silver.

That pretense is answered fully by the fact that from the time of the adoption of the ratio between gold and silver of 16 to 1 by the act of Congress of January 18, 1837, until the passage of the act of February 12, 1873, which suspended the coinage of silver dollars, that is, for the thirty-six years immediately preceding our demonetization of silver, it was continuously at a premium over gold. In 1854 that premium was 4.26 per cent. and in 1857 it was 4.67 per cent. These facts show conclusively that silver coinage was not suspended on account of its value as money being reduced by its abundance, for our silver dollars up to that time were worth more than our gold dollars, but that its depreciation was due alone to the hostile legislation of this and other countries.

This review is also made necessary by the fact that every administration of the Federal Government from the time of the passage of the Bland-Allison law of 1878, providing for the coinage of not less than two million nor more than four million dollars' worth of silver bullion per month, has been hostile to silver coinage; and each of these Administrations has limited the amount of silver coinage to about the minimum amount prescribed by that law. And the officers of the Treasury Department have all this time used their official positions and influence to degrade silver for the benefit of capital and to the injury of the industry and labor of the country. And in my opinion each of these Administrations and every officer who has so acted ought to be held up to public reprobation for the violation of this great public trust.

The same interests and the same influences which have opposed silver coinage in this country have induced Congress and the Treasury Department, under the third section of the act of Congress of January 14, 1875, "to provide for the resumption of specie payments," and under the twelfth section of the act of June 12, 1882, "to enable national-banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," held idly and uselessly in the United States Treasury from year to year for ten years $100,000,000 in gold on the pretense that this was necessary to enable the Government to redeem and retire from circulation the outstanding legal-tender (greenback) notes. And this large sum of gold has for years been withheld from circulation and from use in the business and industrial interests of the country in disregard of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1878, "to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes," which provides that "when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation."

I refer to this among other things to show that for years the Treasury Department has disregarded the requirements of an act of Congress designed for the benefit of the general public, by preserving the legal-tender notes as a part of the money of the country instead of a part of the public indebtedness, and under which this reserve of $100,000,000 of gold should have been released and should have gone into circulation. But the national banks wanted the legal-tender notes retired so that they might supply their place with bank paper, while the bondholders, large money-holders, the creditor class, and those having fixed incomes required the contraction of the volume of circulating money. And their will seems to govern the financial policy of the United States instead of considerations looking to the general good of the public.

We are informed by the Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report that the Government sold $100,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds to accumulate $100,000,000 in gold, to be held for the redemption of the outstanding legal-tender notes; and that—

We have already paid out $40,000,000 interest on these bonds, as a portion of the cost of maintaining the outstanding $340,000,000 of United States notes, and we are still paying $4,000,000 a year for that purpose.

That is, we have already paid $40,000,000 for the luxury of keeping $100,000,000 of gold idle in the Treasury, to redeem notes which the law requires to be kept in circulation, and instead of using that hoard to pay $100,000,000 of our public debt and to relieve the people from paying $4,000,000 interest a year, we tax them $4,000,000 a year to keep $100,000,000 of gold out of circulation.

In view of the fact that the Government collects annually about $400,000,000 of revenue and has an annually increasing surplus of revenue in the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury made, without comment, a statement which leaves the impression that the sacrifice of $4,000,000 a year is necessary as a means of maintaining at par the outstanding legal-tender notes. I doubt if there is an intelligent person in the country, outside of the Treasury Department and of the class benefited by the present financial policy of the Government, who does not know that the people prefer the legal-tender notes to gold. And there is no reason to doubt that, if this $100,000,000 of gold were paid out and put in circulation and the public debt and interest on it reduced by that means, still the legal-tender notes would remain at par with gold.

In this statement I do not forget the relative dates of the acts of Congress of 1875 and 1882 to which I have just referred. But the latter act does not repeal the former, and the retention of that large sum of gold in the Treasury is certainly unnecessary for the redemption or for the preservation of the value of the legal-tender notes as currency.

Besides the wrong of keeping this large sum of money out of circulation, I submit that while the Government is collecting a million and a half dollars of revenue a day, even if the legal-tender notes were required to be redeemed, it would not be necessary for it to retain so large a reserve as this. Its position is entirely different from that of a bank, which draws no revenue from the public except the interest on its loans, and its policy, by the rules of common sense, ought also to be different.

I call attention to the following paragraph in the late annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

If the issue of silver dollars, or the certificates which represent them, should become so numerous as to endanger the free circulation of gold and its representatives, gold certificates and legal-tender notes, the dues of the Government would soon be paid in silver, and as heretofore the interest and principal of the obligations of the Government have been paid in gold, it would only be a question of time when the specie reserve in the Treasury would change from gold to silver to such an extent as to force the Secretary to pay out silver.

The Secretary seems to forget that the customs duties, which constitute the principal part of the revenues of the Government, are now payable in silver and silver certificates and have been for twelve years past. The financial policy of the present Administration, as of all its predecessors for the last seventeen years, draws its inspiration from the bondholders and money-sharks of Great Britain, Germany, and this country, and gets its law from Wall street for the virtual repeal of the act of Congress which makes silver dollars and legal-tender notes a lawful tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except the interest on the public debt.

Wall street and the Treasury Department recognize silver dollars as a good legal-tender in the payment of public contractors and the officers of the Government and in the payment of the Army and Navy and pensioners; but this Administration, like its predecessors, assumes that nothing but gold is good enough to pay to the bondholders. In reaching this conclusion it seems to have been convenient for the present and past Administrations to forget that these bonds originally cost the holders of them only about 50 cents in specie on the dollar.

Notwithstanding this fact, they have by the unjust policy of the Government been made its preferred creditors and have been allowed to dictate the financial policy of the Government. And this will continue to be the case until we elect a President who may draw his financial inspirations from the people of this country and from the consideration of what is their interest, and who will not permit Wall street to dictate to him who shall be Secretary of the Treasury. In this connection I wish to call attention to a few other paragraphs in the recent annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. He says:

The continued coinage of the silver dollar, at a constantly increasing monthly quota, is a disturbing element in the otherwise excellent financial condition of the country, and a positive hindrance to any international agreement looking to the free coinage of both metals at a fixed ratio.

Mandatory purchases by the Government of stated quantities of silver and mandatory coinage of the same into legal-tender dollars are an unprecedented anomaly and have proved futile, not only in restoring the value of silver, but even in staying the downward price of that metal.

The Secretary also forgets that we had the unlimited coinage of silver for eighty-one years, from 1792 to 1873, without disturbance of our finances on that account, and at par with gold all that time.

Again he says:

Surely the stock of these dollars which can perform any useful function as a circulating medium must soon be reached, if it has not been already, and the further coinage and storage of them will become a waste of public money and a burden upon the Treasury.

Again:

While many favorable causes have co-operated to postpone the evil effects which are sure to follow the excessive issue of an overvalued coin, the danger none the less exists.

Again:

The amount of gold and gold certificates owned by the people and in circulation, exclusive of $187,572,386 owned by the Treasury on November 1, 1889, was $196,622,300. Free coinage of silver dollars would, as already stated, very soon put this large amount of gold at a premium and cause it to be hoarded or exported, and thus retire it from circulation.

We were told a few years ago by a Secretary of the Treasury that the country could not stand more than $50,000,000 of silver coin. And we have from time to time been warned in many ways that silver coinage would drive the gold out of the country. But we have gone on coining silver up to $343,638,001 on the 1st of November last; and still the increasing accumulation of gold in the Treasury and in the country goes on, from $213,199,977 in 1873, when we commenced the limited coinage of silver, to $680,063,505 last year, as shown by the following table:

Revised estimate of the stock of metallic money in the United States at the close of each fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, to June 30, 1889.

E. O. LEECH, Director of the Mint.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE MINT, March 11, 1890.

Further on he says:

Every silver dollar coined at the ratio of 16 to 1 (actually 15.98 to 1) is an additional obstacle in the way of the adoption of any practicable ratio by international agreement, which is the only final solution of the silver question.

No one knows better than the Secretary of the Treasury that it is not possible to secure an international agreement as to silver coinage as long as the capitalists of Great Britain and Germany believe they are securing advantage and profit by degrading silver. The Latin Union and other governments of Europe will not agree to any arrangement on this subject without the concurrence of Great Britain and Germany. And while the masses of the people of those two governments need and want silver coinage, as our people do, the wealthy and titled classes there control the financial as well as all other questions of public policy.

The capitalists there know as well as we do the advantage they are deriving from the present vicious policy in relation to silver. They will not surrender that advantage until forced to do so by the distress of their own people. The talk here about an international agreement on this subject is no doubt intended to amuse and delude our people and to postpone any action by the Government of the United States for their relief.

The President of the United States is understood to indorse the financial policy of his Secretary of the Treasury.

After referring in his recent annual message to the fact that neither the present Secretary of the Treasury nor any of his predecessors had deemed it safe to exercise the discretion given by the law to increase the monthly purchases of silver bullion for coinage into silver dollars, they having heretofore limited such purchases to about the minimum provided for, the President says:

I think it is clear that if we should make the coinage of silver at the present ratio free we must expect that the difference in the bullion values of the gold and silver dollars will be taken account of in commercial transactions, and I fear the same result would follow any considerable increase of the present rate of coinage. Such a result would be discreditable to our financial management and disastrous to all business interests. We should not tread the dangerous edge of such a peril. And, indeed, nothing more harmful could happen to the silver interests.

I quote the above extracts to show, among other things, how thoroughly the present Administration is opposed to the free coinage of silver dollars, notwithstanding the President in his annual message and the Secretary in his annual report express themselves as being in favor of silver as money. I appeal to the Senate and to the country to require our Secretaries of the Treasury to obey the acts of Congress, made for the good of our people, and to cease their subservience to the selfish interests of bondholders and large money-holders, by surrendering themselves to the guidance in financial law and morals of Wall street.

The functions and value of silver dollars depend mainly on their use.

The policy of our Government of late years and the policy of the present Administration is to assume that the product of silver is too great to admit of its use as money, that its coinage should be limited, that it must be treated as a commodity and used for what it is worth as a commodity.

I am aware that both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have used expressions in treating of this question which indicated that the use of silver as money was desirable. But no one can read all they have recently said on the subject without feeling that those expressions were meant to propitiate the general public, while the effect of their policy and recommendations is against the free use of silver as money. They keep up the policy of holding our laws on this subject in abeyance and carry out a financial policy in conflict with them, as I will show further on.

The bill under consideration, while it proposes to enlarge the use of silver as money, falls into the trap of monometallists by recognizing the principle that too much silver is being produced, and that its coinage, or the use of its representative, silver certificates, must be limited. This bill perpetuates this legal discrimination against silver. And it perpetuates two other important legal discriminations against that metal: the one that the silver dollar shall not be a unit of value and the other that the Government is to have a monopoly of the coinage of silver bullion, and that it shall not be coined free for all holders of bullion, as gold is.

So it will be seen that I do not agree with what I understand to be the policy of the Administration on this subject or with the principles and purposes of the committee's bill.

I will recapitulate my objections to the committee's bill:

First. It perpetuates the legal discriminations against silver and in favor of gold.

Second. It fixes a legal limitation to the amount of silver to be coined.

Third. It denies free coinage to the holders of silver bullion, while allowing the free coinage of gold.

Fourth. It fails to make the silver dollar a unit of value the same as the gold dollars.

Fifth. It by implication admits that there is too much silver produced in the world to allow its free use as money.

These defects in the scheme of the bill are likely to perpetuate fluctuation in the value of silver and the value of marketable commodities.

I will suggest what seems to me to be a much wiser and better policy on this question than either of those I have combated. First, I would provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver the same as of gold, and I would make the silver dollar, like the gold dollar, a unit of value. This would abrogate all legal discriminations against silver and restore it to its former status as money.

Second. I would require the Secretary of the Treasury to use silver as well as gold in the payment of our bonded indebtedness. This would serve the double purpose of giving it use, employment, as money, and it would at the same time put it into the possession of the classes of men who have done so much to degrade it, and who would, when they had become the possessors of it, be interested in giving it full value and character as money. This course would without doubt do much towards restoring it to its par with gold. It would take away the temptation to degrade it. And it would place our Government in the just and logical position of desiring the use of silver as money and of doing justice to our own people by paying other public creditors in the same sort of money with which they pay our soldiers, sailors, pensioners, contractors, and public servants.

Third. I would call in the gold certificates and silver certificates now outstanding and issue in their stead coin certificates, and I would issue like coin certificates and use them at par for the purchase of gold and silver coin and bullion, and for any gold and silver coin or bullion which might come in the Treasury, and make these coin certificates redeemable in either gold or silver coin or bullion at the option of the Government; and I would make them receivable for all public dues and taxes, a lawful tender in the payment of all public and private debts, and allow them to be counted as so much of the reserve required to be held by the national banks. In this way I would have the Government hoard as much gold and silver coin and bullion as it could; and by so doing make it the interest of the governments of Europe to accept silver again as money at the customary ratio with gold.

Whatever doubt may be entertained as to the soundness of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in holding that the issue of legal-tender notes of the Government, which rest on the general promise of the Government for redemption, was warranted by the Constitution, it seems to me there could be no difficulty in making coin certificates, which would simply be the representatives of so much gold and silver coin in the Treasury, a legal tender. These certificates would be the same as that much coin.

Fourth. I would also issue coin certificates on the $100,000,000 of gold now held in the Treasury for the pretended redemption of legal-tender notes, or use the gold as might be thought best along with silver in paying off so much of the public debt and thus relieve the people of that much of the principal and the annual $4,000,000 of interest on that debt.

Fifth. I would provide for the retirement from circulation of all legal-tender and national-bank notes of denominations less than $10 and substitute the small legal-tender notes thus retired by the issuance of legal-tender notes of denominations of $10 and more; and I would issue coin certificates to take their place and to take the place of the national-bank notes of denominations less than $10, and thus by use give value to the coin certificates.

Such a course would enable us to get the full benefit of our extensive mines of gold and silver. It would give us a steady and reliable currency free from fluctuations, and (with the $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes) of sufficient volume, and it would make our Government the master of its own financial policy and enable it to defy the intrigues of money sharks to use it for selfish, unjust, and unpatriotic purposes.

The coinage of $4,500,000 of silver annually, or its use as bullion upon which to issue Treasury notes, as provided by the committee's bill, would still be a recognition of a necessity for fixing a limit to the amount of silver to be used, would preserve the Government monopoly of its coinage, and would leave it subject to fluctuations in price.

The public mind is now ripe for just legislation on this question. The question is better understood than ever before, and it is now before us for consideration. The best interest of our own country and of mankind requires its settlement, not by means of a compromising expedient which may seem to tide over present troubles for a time, not with a view to the promotion of class and selfish interests, but upon sound financial principles, and so as to do justice to all, and so as to make the United States lead the nations of Europe out of the mire of wicked speculation into a condition of financial confidence and prosperity.

On the 20th day of December last I introduced a bill, Senate bill 1558, made up mainly from the provisions contained in a bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and one introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], proposing such legislation as I have just suggested. At the proper time I will offer that bill as a substitute for the bill reported by the Finance Committee now under consideration.

No more important question than that under consideration could occupy the attention of the Senate, and I trust the result of our action may prove to be a blessing to our own and to other countries.

In view of the depressed condition of the agriculture of the country and the reduced values of all kinds of property and of the wages of labor we can not afford to let the present session of Congress end without the passage of measures to remedy these evils. Congress and the State Legislatures have commenced the great work of economic reform by the subordination and control of our great lines of transportation by the political authorities.

Let us continue this great work:

First. By providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and the issuance of coin certificates.

Second. By the adoption of a tariff for revenue, limiting the amount to be collected to the actual needs of the Government economically administered, so as to prevent the robbery of the farmers, laborers, and others for the benefit of the wealthy barons of protection.

Third. By the crushing out of existence, by Congressional and State legislation, of trusts and combinations in restraint of free trade among the people, for the purpose of raising prices on them and of plundering them to enrich corporations and monopolies.

Fourth. The repeal of all such legislation as is intended to benefit a part of the people at the expense of another part of them.

Fifth. The suppression of stock gambling in futures by the Legislatures of the several States and by Congress as far as it has power to act.

With these things done, and all combinations of capital against labor and production ended, there would be no further necessity for labor organizations as a means of protection against the combinations of capitalists and class legislation.

This would terminate the contentions and jealousies between different classes of people and allow all to go forward, under equal laws, in the race for success in business. It would restore the condition which many of us are old enough to remember, when there was no such thing as class legislation, class interests, or class prejudices; when every class respected the rights of every other class, and when all felt that they were blessed not only by the freest and happiest Government on earth, but by the fairest and most just laws on earth. Then every citizen was proud of the prosperity of every other citizen, and loved with patriotic fervor the Government which secured such blessings to all alike.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GAY.

Mr. GIBSON. I give notice that on Friday, the 18th proximo, I will call up the resolutions from the House of Representatives in regard to the death of Hon. Edward J. Gay, late a Representative in the House of Representatives from the State of Louisiana.

PENSION AGENTS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether or not it is expedient to increase the number of pension agents in the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN also submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be directed to report to the Senate as to the expediency of increasing the number of pension agents in the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3279) to suspend the enforcement of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers;" and

An act (S. 1296) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, the pension bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 389) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. DAVIS. Before that is proceeded with, I desire to submit a verbal amendment. On page 4, section 3, line 16, I move to strike out the word "pensioner," and insert "officer or enlisted man"—a mere verbal amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Is my amendment pending?

Mr. DAVIS. I stated that before that was acted on, I wished to offer a verbal amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. On page 4, section 3, line 16, I move to strike out "pensioner," and insert "officer or enlisted man."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, section 3, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "pensioner" and insert "officer or enlisted man;" so as to read:

That said widow was married to the deceased officer or enlisted man prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. PLUMB. You had better insert the word "soldier."

Mr. DAVIS. The phraseology of the act that precedes this reads in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BERRY. Is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas when the bill was last before the Senate in regard to repealing the limitation on the arrears of pension?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BERRY. That is the amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. That is the amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. It strikes me that the amendment ought to be read in full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

That section 2 of the act of March 3, 1879, chapter 187, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all pensions which have been or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to discharge, and if such disability occurred after the discharge then from the date of actual disability or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension; and in the consideration of any and all claims for pensions in consequence of death from, or disability resulting from, disease contracted in the service during the late civil war the person on whose account the said pension is claimed shall be conclusively presumed to have been sound and free from disease at the date of entering the service."

Mr. COCKRELL. I have just sent to the Senate document-room for a copy of this bill, which was ordered to be reprinted on last Saturday, and have received information that it has not been received there. I think it is remarkable that when an order was made to reprint a bill on Saturday it should not be in the document-room at 1 o'clock on Monday. I hope the Secretary of the Senate will take some means to ascertain whether the Public Printer received that copy and why it has not been returned here. We want the copy for examination in discussing the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask for information. Who offered the amendment just read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to state that no such amendment or provision as the one read or embodied in that amendment was at all considered by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state in regard to the amendment that the proposition covered by it has been before the Committee on Pensions for a long time in the shape of bills offered to accomplish a purpose similar to that of the amendment which I have proposed. It is not a new subject by any means. It is one which has been agitated for a long time and grows out of the passage by Congress of the act of 1879, to which reference has been made. By that act only those who applied prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, were entitled to receive arrears, notwithstanding they might be able to prove that the disability for which they were pensioned occurred in the line of duty and had since continued.

The spectacle is therefore presented of the man who applied on the last day of June, 1880, receiving arrears and the man who applied the next day or the succeeding day being denied arrears, although his disability was of precisely the same character and covered the same period of time. The obligation of the Government to the first class has been recognized and fairly met; that to the second class, whose cases are covered by the amendment, are outstanding unsettled, and they deserve recognition at this time especially. There is no reason why the Government should not now respond to this sacred obligation, too long deferred, and every reason why there should be no further delay.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas if the present Commissioner of Pensions has made an estimate of the probable cost which the adoption of this amendment would add to the bill. In other words, if the limitation on the arrears act be repealed, how much will it cost the Government? Has an estimate of that kind been made by the present Commissioner? If so, I ask the Senator to state what that estimate is.

Mr. PLUMB. The Commissioner of Pensions was interrogated by the House Committee on Pensions some weeks since, and, if my recollection now serves me, he said that the cost of this proposition, that is, the amount of money which would be necessary to discharge the obligation recognized by this amendment, would be about $478,000,000. An estimate has been made by the chairman of the House committee which somewhat exceeds that, and perhaps puts the sum at $500,000,000; but that the amount will be somewhere between $470,000,000 and $500,000,000, I presume can not be questioned. The amount is large, but not larger than the Government can readily meet, and if it were even larger there should be no hesitation about it.

It is not a question of amount; it is a question of the recognition of that obligation which the Government has heretofore freely conceded and about which there has never been any controversy either as to the soldiers of the late war or those of preceding wars, that whenever proof was made of the incurrence of disability in the line of duty there followed the obligation of the Government to respond according to such ratings as had been established by law to be paid to the person who was suffering under the disability.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question for information?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has there ever been any law prior to that of 1879 which gave pensions back of the date of application?

Mr. PLUMB. There was a limitation under the law in existence at the time of the close of the war, of five years during which the application must be made, but the application being made during that period it related back to the date of the disability, and up to the time of the passage of the law of 1879 a large number of cases had accumulated, and at the time of the passage of that law it was supposed in a more or less definite way that the cases which had been filed would represent the larger number of beneficiaries of the act of 1879. The facts show that there was a very large number of people who had not then applied, but yet who were entitled by reason of the incurrence of disability in the line of duty to pension, and whose cases came in subsequent to the passage of the law of 1879.

But, Mr. President, Congress has in various cases removed similar limitations, and the Senator from Missouri has himself been instrumental in doing it on one or two occasions, especially in having the limitation removed in regard to claims for lost horses. There has always been a feeling that for the Government to insist upon a limitation in a matter of this kind, where it had all the instrumentalities for the allowance of claims in its own hands, was inequitable and unjust, and it was a recognition of this fact in the passage of the act of 1879 and the filing of claims subsequent thereto which brought to light the necessity for the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to state for the information of the Senate that there are pending before the Committee on Pensions some eight separate bills covering the entire question of arrears. While the committee have considered those bills, they have deemed it their duty to take up first the bill now under consideration, providing for those who are dependent upon their labor for their support, and who are on that account disabled. It has stood prior in desire and order of expressed wish by the persons interested for many years, and it has been the objective point of legislation in Congress for the last three Congresses. Logically and as a matter of relief it naturally and necessarily comes first.

The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is on a different subject, covering a different ground and introducing other considerations, and, until the bill now under consideration is disposed of, your committee have not felt free to report upon the other matters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FAULKNER. Before the yeas and nays are taken upon the amendment, I think it is fair and just to the Senate and to the committee to state that a matter of such grave importance as this should not be passed upon by the Senate without having been acted upon by the committee to whom it properly should be referred. In this case, as it has not been brought before the committee, it strikes me that the Senate should not approve of this method of introducing it into the Senate and trying to affix it upon an important measure and one so essential to the interests of those disabled as the bill now before us for our consideration. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the vote is taken on the amendment I should be glad to know from the Senator from Kansas if he has any approximate or accurate estimate as to the amount of money that will be involved in his amendment if it is agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I have already stated that the Commissioner of Pensions has recently made an estimate for the benefit of the House committee on this subject to the effect that it would take somewhere between $470,000,000 and $480,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I had not heard that statement.

Mr. PLUMB. It has been estimated to be somewhat higher by other persons, but I should think it would be safe to say that the amount would be nearly or quite that estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. Within a range of $500,000,000?

Mr. PLUMB. Somewhere in that neighborhood, I should say.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the question of the amount involved in this proposition to allow arrears of pensions, I desire to present to the Senate the minority report made in the Fiftyeth Congress, first session, in the House of Representatives, being Report 2120, part 2, which contains a letter from the then Commissioner of Pensions, and also the views of the minority of the committee in that Congress in the House of Representatives. That report was submitted by Hon. JAMES P. WALKER, of Missouri. I send the document to the desk to be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following views of the minority:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submits the following reasons why, in his opinion, said bill should not become a law.

From the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and also a special communication from him (a copy of which is hereto appended), the following facts are obtained: The total sum paid in pensions up to June 30, 1887, amounted to $883,440,294. Add to this the amount paid in pensions the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1888, say eighty millions, and we have a grand total to the present time of $963,440,298 paid in pensions during the past twenty-five years.

In addition to the above our ever-increasing annual pension appropriations must be made, in order to meet present obligations to the ex-soldiers or those whom they have left dependent on them. The last annual pension appropriation bill, as it passed the House, amounted to the large sum of $90,276,000.

The majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in the face of these facts, gravely propose to add to the above the enormous sum of $380,581,300, this being the amount estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions.

In the light of past experience with such estimates, all of which have fallen far below the actual amounts required, it is my deliberate judgment that the passage of the bill will necessitate the expenditure of at least five hundred millions. The majority of the committee suggest that this would be a splendid method of dissipating the surplus millions now in the Treasury. I desire to make the further suggestion that the passage of the bill would not only accomplish that purpose, but it would add several hundred millions to the annual tax burdens of a nation already weighted down under too much taxation.

The facts and figures show conclusively that the American people have not only been fair and just to the ex-soldiers, but have enacted pension laws with a liberality and generosity unparalleled in the pension legislation of any other country on earth. In behalf of the tax-paying public, a large majority of whom are struggling to make a living, many even struggling "to keep the wolf from the door," I respectfully dissent from the opinions of the majority and protest against the passage of the bill.

JAS. P. WALKER.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C. May 19, 1888.

SIR: In response to your recent request that I furnish to you an estimate of the probable cost to the Government should the limitation imposed by the arrears acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879, be repealed, I have the honor to make the following statement, the estimates submitted being the result of a careful consideration of all the accessible data in this bureau:

To pay the arrears in invalid claims which have already been allowed I estimate will require.....	$139,548,500
To pay widows' and others' claims allowed.....	13,500,000
Total to pay those now on the rolls.....	153,048,500
Total to pay invalid claims which are now pending and which will be allowed.....	189,830,000
Total to pay claims of widows and others now pending and which will be allowed.....	87,702,800
Total in pending claims.....	227,532,800
Grand total of probable cost of the repeal of limitation imposed by arrears acts of 1879.....	380,581,300

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

HON. JAMES P. WALKER,
House of Representatives.

MR. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this report shows that according to a very low and mild and underestimate of the Commissioner of Pensions in 1888 the amount which would be allowed as arrears upon pending claims which have since then been adjudicated or would be very soon adjudicated after the passage of an arrears bill amounted to over $227,000,000. That is upon claims already pending and already adjudicated. There would have to be over $153,000,000 paid out on the claims which had been already adjudicated and upon which the pensioners are now receiving their monthly pensions. That would go right out of the Treasury at once, and on the first pension pay-day after that time, $153,000,000, and then upon the claims that were then pending, May 19, 1888, many of which have since been allowed and the arrears upon which would have to be paid at the first pension pay-day after the passage of the bill, another sum of $227,000,000 would be paid out.

As a matter of course, we can not tell exactly what proportion of that would have to be paid out on the first pension pay-day, but the pensioners will be entitled to it, and he estimated that the total would be $380,000,000. Those in the House equally as familiar with the facts estimate it at $500,000,000. I have paid some attention to these guesses about arrears of pay, and in my judgment not one solitary dollar less than five hundred millions of dollars will be taken out by this amendment. I think it is absolutely safe to say that $500,000,000 would be taken out by it, and that at least $300,000,000 of it will be payable inside of six months, if the Pension Office does its duty, if not within three months after the passage of the bill.

This bill as reported by the committee proposes an annual expenditure of $36,000,000. That is the lowest estimate, and the estimate the committee have put upon it is that the present bill as it is reported and will probably pass the Senate will incur an annual expenditure of $36,000,000. This amendment proposes to put upon it an immediate expenditure within a very short time of $300,000,000 more. I think we ought to put on some amendment to provide the revenues to pay it. I can not vote for such a proposition as this.

MR. BLAIR obtained the floor.

MR. BERRY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me just one moment? I wish to correct a statement made by the Senator from Missouri. The present Commissioner of Pensions, as admitted by the Senator from Kansas, says it will cost $478,000,000 instead of $300,000,000, and the Senator from Kansas admits that it will cost $500,000,000.

MR. COCKRELL. I understood that perfectly well, but I was not talking about the estimate of the present Commissioner. I read the estimate of a former Commissioner, and I was not paying any attention to the estimate of the present Commissioner.

MR. BERRY. The estimate has been increased $200,000,000 since the estimate of the former Commissioner.

MR. COCKRELL. When the report was made in 1888 I estimated upon the facts then that it would take $500,000,000, and now the present Commissioner (I had not noticed that fact) brings it up to $478,000,000. If the present Commissioner of Pensions has estimated it at $478,000,000, I will say, then, that it will take $600,000,000 instead of $500,000,000.

MR. BLAIR. Mr. President, I appreciate the motives which have actuated the chairman of the committee in objecting to the adoption of the pending amendment, which is substantially a bill by itself and of greater importance perhaps than the one pending. I do not think it should be adopted as an amendment to this bill. I seriously and earnestly trust that the bill itself will cost more than $36,000,000 a year, and I believe it will. I shall be greatly disappointed if it shall not. A much larger amount of relief is required by the soldiery of the country who saved it, and if the pending bill does not cost twice the amount estimated I shall be greatly disappointed. I believe that the bill will be found in practical operation to reach nearly all the destitution and actual necessity for relief that exist among those who defended the country and its institutions at the time when those who now make the chief objection to the passage of the bill and the relief of the soldiery generally were themselves the cause of that necessity and of this necessity.

But I wish to say a few words in regard to this arrears-of-pension measure itself. There never was a more just measure presented to the American people than that for the payment of arrears of pensions. So great was the equity behind it that prior to 1880 we enacted a law under the provisions of which before the 1st day of July, 1880, applications were made which have been taken from the Treasury somewhere between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000, as I remember, and that money was justly taken from the Treasury. If the re-enactment of that bill into a law would take from the Treasury of this country $500,000,000, nevertheless it would be as justly paid, and more justly paid, than almost any other indebtedness which this Government ever liquidated.

What is the principle upon which arrears of pensions are to be paid? It is not the case of a man who establishes his claim early and draws his pension year by year, from the moment when his disability commenced, that disability originating in the service of his country. It is not that case by any means. The ordinary pensioner who establishes his claim under the law in season draws his annual payment from the date when the disability was contracted. He has the use of the money as he needs it. The common pensioner, the man who avails himself of the law seasonably, has drawn his pension from the beginning. He has had it all of these thirty years since the commencement of hostilities. He has received the good of it. He has appropriated that money in the maintenance of himself and his family. To a certain extent it may be said that the Government has discharged its obligation to that man. He has little to claim of the Government, for he availed himself of all that, by the contract and by the obligation of his country, was due him from the beginning.

But here is another class of claimants, those who claim under the arrears-of-pension law, which ceased its operation in 1880 and which the amendment proposes to revive. They are men who failed to present their application during the specific periods, from whatever motive it may have been, oftentimes from failure to know of their rights under the law, sometimes from inadvertence, oftener still (more often than from any other reason) because of a high-spirited patriotism which prevented their making application for that money to which they were entitled under the laws of the country, giving to the American people for the time being what was their due in addition to the services which they had rendered in war and the disabilities which they had contracted in the service of their country. These men waiting, giving the country the use of the money which was theirs during all these years, at last with age and infirmity increasing upon them, availed themselves of the privilege of drawing their arrears, establishing their claims upon precisely the same evidence as the evidence which was required in any other instance, proving the disability, proving after the lapse of years that it was contracted in the service, and at last asking for their money and receiving it, not as though paid to them originally, but receiving it after fifteen or twenty years had elapsed, and losing meanwhile more than the original sum itself, which the Treasury and the American people had been thus enabled to avail themselves of. So it came to be that the man who was entitled to the money in the beginning really gave to the country one-half of that which was his due. That was the arrears-of-pensions act.

In 1880 that act ceased to operate, and since that time a large number of other claimants equally meritorious have established their right to a pension and have pending claims for pension, the allowance of which depends upon their proving that they contracted their disability in the service of their country. They have given what belonged to them to the country for these twenty-five years. Now they ask the opportunity of asserting that claim and of receiving, it may be, one-third of the money which would have been a burden upon the Treasury of the country had they asserted their claim when it first originated. After giving to the Treasury two dollars that belonged to them they ask that one of the three which the Government owes may come to themselves in their old age. That is what they ask and that is all they ask.

If any Senator can conceive of a more equitable claim than this or a claim which it is more despicable to refuse, I should like him to state it. I am unable to see why these men should be denied who come here year after year and ask permission to file their claims, when the United States never allows the pleading of the statute of limitation in any case where the nation itself has a claim at all events, and ask that the United States shall not set up as against them in their old age a claim for one-third of what belongs to them. If anybody can make any reply to the justice and equity and what ought to be the legality of this claim for arrears of pension, I should be very glad to hear it stated on the floor. No one has ever undertaken to meet the justice of this claim in argument. I have been here some years; this matter has been up for discussion several times. I have had occasion at least four or five times to state this line of argument, and no man has ever undertaken to make any reply save the reply of the Senator from Missouri, who says it will cost $500,000,000.

Great God! it cost six times that amount to keep the Senator in the Union, and, now we have twice the wealth, we have three times the available population, yes we have four times the wealth, and we repudiate this honest obligation rather than raise $500,000,000! Mr. President, there never was a more execrable shame recorded in the history of any nation or any apology for a nation than that which we perpetrate here year after year in denying to the men who ask their arrears the allowance of this slight sum comparatively. Sometimes I am ashamed of my country when she refuses to educate her children and when she refuses to pay a bill like this. Only day before yesterday we passed a bill for Texas, to put $6,200,000 into a little spot of shallow water down there and make her a port on the seacoast. But we repudiate the very foundation principles upon which this country is built as a Republic when we come to a matter like the arrears of pension for those old soldiers who have given us twice as much as they will receive if we do them justice. They have to prove these claims under all the disadvantages which will be gathered about their claims by reason of the lapse of time, and we repudiate the opportunity to let them establish their claims, taking advantage of the meanest form of the statute of limitations, which we never enforce in any other instance than as against the soldier.

But it will take money? Why, Mr. President, of course it will take something in the way of taxation. No governmental debt can be paid without taxation. The question is not whether the debt be large or small, but whether it be a debt, and then even if we can not pay it we ought to acknowledge it and allow the soldier the opportunity to prove it.

But can we not pay it? Has the time arrived when the Republic is without the credit to hire the necessary money, if she has it not by ordinary taxation? Can we issue no more bonds if need be? Can we not raise this $500,000,000 for the sake of keeping a pure record for the country, a consistent record, what we have admitted to be the proper record to make against the country by allowing this act to be operative down as far as the year 1880?

No, Mr. President, the time is coming when the American people have got to think of something besides the tariff and material wealth; things of more consequence and of more value than most of those we are thinking upon at this session and in these more recent times. It will not be long before a halt will be called in these low and earthly and sensual and devilish things with which we are dealing principally.

Mr. President, I felt as though I ought to speak my mind upon the merits of the arrears of pension bill, and I have done so. As a friend, as all here are friends, to soldiers, I should be glad to compromise, since I see the impossibility of getting full justice, and to pass a bill which would allow these old soldiers to establish their claims under the provisions of an arrears-of-pension act which would drop back fifteen years if we can not give twenty years or thirty years, the whole period of time up to the date when they received their wounds or contracted their other disabilities, by reason of which they should receive arrears of pension. Give them ten years, give them back to 1880, if you can go no further in the way of justice. If you must rob them of something, rob them of fifteen years, but allow them what belongs to them for the last ten years. That would help them in their old age.

But as to the idea that we can not pay this debt, it is a reply to all the considerations which we hear urged before the Senate and the country to say that it will cost $500,000,000; that even the present Commissioner of Pensions admits it will cost $478,000,000, and my friend from Kansas is willing to admit that it will cost $500,000,000. I suppose it will cost more than that. Very likely it will cost six hundred millions, and perhaps a billion; but we spent three billions in the great war which kept us a nation, and we can well afford to give these old soldiers at least a part of the arrears which belong to them when the amount due them is three times that which, under any allowance, we shall be likely to give them.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I regret that this amendment is before the Senate. Not that it places me in a position where I must vote for or against it, but because I should regard its adoption as a terrible menace to the soldiers of this country. In addressing bodies of soldiers, especially in my own State, I have undertaken to show them that there was a pace too rapid altogether for their welfare and for their good; that there was a danger of overleaping in this matter of pensions. When Mr. Cleveland was elected President of the United States and immediately commenced to veto special pension bills and also the general pension bill known as the dependent measure, and I saw the Democratic party of this country ratifying what he did, and not only the Democratic party of the country, but many of the business men in the Republican party, too, extending to him their approval for what he was doing; when I saw that over his veto it was impossible to pass any pension bill; when, if I remember aright, there never was but one so passed, and that I had the honor to present here to the Senate, and it did not succeed in the other House at first, but it did at the next session—I say when I saw these evidences of opposition to pensions, I felt that while there was a safe course for the soldier there was an exceedingly unsafe and dangerous one.

Now, sir, there are thousands and tens of thousands of as good soldiers as ever wore the uniform of the Union in this Republic to-day without pensions—men disabled, as much so as the men who lost arms or legs, men who served four years in the Army and never were in hospital, who never were under the surgeon's care—faithful, brave, true soldiers; but to-day age has crept over them, and it is indicated beyond a peradventure that those four years of service were not without bitter and terrible wounds. Their constitutions were pricked, though they went into no hospital, and old age shows the prick of the constitution beyond peradventure. Those tens of thousands of true soldiers to-day are asking that they may be pensioned. They have been asking of Congress for the last eight years that they might be pensioned as well as those who lost arms and legs, and Congress has refused to listen to their request. The Senate three times has passed a bill which would give those men pensions, and three times it has either been rejected in the other House or has not been acted upon there.

When the sentiment of Congress indicates itself in this way, what will be the sentiment of the country clearly expressed when $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 are appropriated to pay the arrearsages due to the soldiers? I say to Senators who are pressing this measure that they are imperiling the truest interests of the soldiers when they undertake to enact it into a law, and they will create a prejudice against pensions amongst the business interests of this country which Congress can not overleap and will not dare try to.

Then, come behind, those men shortly who by reason of old age have attached to themselves the presumption of disability. It will not be ten years before that presumption will attach, and then it will be the duty of the Congress of the United States to provide service pensions for all of the soldiers who were in the United States Army. Adopt this amendment and enact the bill into a law, and I say to you, Senators, and to the soldiers of the country, that they may look long, and wearily, and earnestly, and finally lose heart for the service pension, and in my judgment for even a pension that shall apply to the disabled soldiers of to-day.

Sir, I yield to no man in my acknowledgments of the debt which is due to the soldiers of this country. I am willing to do everything that I believe to be in the interest of the soldiers. I dare not vote for a proposition which I believe away down in my heart will be absolutely destructive of the truest interests of the soldiers of the United States, and, however reluctantly it may be and however liable I may be to be misunderstood, in the interests of the men whom I admire, in the interests of the men who saved the Republic, in the interests of the men to whom we owe everything that we are and everything that we have—in their interest alone I shall be obliged to record my vote on this amendment "nay."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, unfortunately I have not heard all that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has said, but I am personally obliged to him for saying what I believe to be the serious truth. It is not agreeable to say no to what even is supposed to be the request of soldiers of the Republic. I do not believe that the American soldiers ask for this amendment. I will stake whatever little my political salvation is worth that I can meet five thousand old soldiers and get a heavy majority vote against this amendment after an hour's argument.

The Senator is right. This headlong extravagance will bring men into power who will scrimp and squeeze and deny the soldier. A silent conservatism in the Republic that will be glad to stay with the Republican party, and will stay with it if it can be permitted to do so, will utter no loud word against the soldier nor against the old party, but it will quietly stay away from the polls.

There is a limit to this. I appeal to every old soldier to permit us to be reasonable and to be just. God knows the American nation is not stingy in this matter. Including the present fiscal year and what is proposed for the next, the appropriations for pensions since the war will by June, 1891, amount to nearly $1,300,000,000. I do not complain so far as a dollar of it was necessary to relieve real distress, nor do the American people complain. But no nation in the world ever appropriated a sum that could be compared with it. All that they have done for their soldiers in their distress sinks into utter insignificance in comparison with what we are doing for ours.

I beg the old soldiers to remember that, if we are threatened with war again, that which will scare the people who pay taxes will be, not the cost or the blood of the war, but the consequences of it. I beg them to remember that it is pauperizing and degrading them to constantly insist in their behalf that they have claims and claims and claims. So they have in a sense, but they know—no man knows better than that gallant body of survivors—that we owe every cent we have and every drop of blood to the Republic, and they offered it all proudly. Let them remember that these enormous sums to be paid come out of the pockets very largely of people as poor as themselves. You may lay the tax upon the rich man, but it filters down and down, and a large portion of it finally comes out of his tenant in the tenement house, or out of the subfarmer, or out of the mechanic. Remember the other people in the country who pay taxes.

When General Grant last visited this building, with his characteristic modesty he kept out of this Chamber and sat in that cloak-room in the spot I am pointing at. Nearly every Senator of both parties visited him before he left, manifesting in the most gratifying manner their personal respect. He sat with his accustomed cigar and talked freely upon any question that anybody proposed. I will try to relate as if I were on the witness-stand what he said apropos of this question. He said, "On my way here"—or this morning, or something of that sort—"a clergyman came to me with a petition or memorial to Congress asking that every man who had ever been a prisoner of war should be pensioned. I told him he ought to be in better business; that there were all kinds of prisoners. There was the volunteer prisoner, who got caught easily, because he thereby escaped from an impending battle. There were prisoners who, when the signs in the air, that were infallible to the old soldier, indicated a coming fight, had a stomach-ache or a sore toe, or staid behind fixing their shoes, or bathing, or something of that sort, and got caught by a squad of rebel cavalry. There were others who, without meaning anything out of the way, were getting a little extra ration from a neighboring farm-house and got swept in. Then there were the laughing boys, always to be found, who were away out on the skirmish line and ahead of it, to see the first grayback and to get a shot at him, and before they knew it they looked around and there were the rebel cavalymen behind them. There were all kinds of prisoners. Some of them staid but a short time, had a good rest, missed a battle or two, and were better off for having been prisoners. Many others suffered fearfully and all who show the effects can get a pension. Now," said he, concluding, "I will tell you what I would do if I were President. I would sign any reasonable bill seeking to relieve the distress of an honest old soldier, or his widow, or his children, but I would not vote one dollar to the able-bodied man." That last expression is precisely as he stated it. It sank into my memory. I do not think I have changed a syllable in the last twenty words of his remarks.

I live up to that statement. That is my platform. I would not care to see an old soldier going to the almshouse. If he goes to the almshouse, either his State or the nation must pay the cost, and I would as lief the nation should pension him. I am not going ahead of my State when I vote liberally for the soldier. We have our soldiers' home; we have two hospitals, and the finest, where they may live royally so long as they need any medical or surgical care. Not a soldier in my State has been allowed to suffer. The beneficence of the State gives $80,000 a year in addition to all the soldiers get from the Federal Government, expended from our own treasury freely and gladly.

The theory of a pension is that it takes care of a man to-day, a sufferer to-day, a sufferer by reason of service or from a disability, if you please, whether he can trace it directly or not. It is the theory of a pension bill not to take up a case and go back and give the man two, four, six, eight, or ten thousand dollars when he did not apply for it till ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years after the war. To date back to what we may believe to be the origin of his disability is not the correct theory of pensions. The date of the application is the true time. You had a great deal better, if you are going to spend this $500,000,000, take it and divide it pro rata among the men who actually need the money. Deal liberally with the man who actually needs it. Do not throw out $500,000,000 or $100,000,000 or $50,000,000 at random, and to a considerable extent to strong men who are in comparative health and have a little property or who did not suffer enough to induce them to apply till from fifteen to twenty-five years after the war. Perhaps the man can get along pretty well without it. Aim as sharply as you can at the actual necessity and take care of the old soldiers, and do not—I was about to say something that is not polite—do not be stampeded by claim agents. Do exactly what you think is generous and right. The country will sustain you, and it will not otherwise.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this bill as near as it came from the Committee on Pensions as I can, because I believe some bill of this kind is proper. I do not mean now to commit myself to saying that when the proper time comes I may not vote for the bills that the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Connecticut think are so dangerous, but at this particular time I shall vote against the pending amendment and I shall vote against all amendments of this general character that shall materially change the bill as it came from the committee. I vote in that way in the interest of the soldier. I do not want by that vote to have it said that I am hostile to further legislation in his behalf.

I do not agree with the Senator from Connecticut who sits by my side that we have been extravagant in pension legislation, nor do I agree that we have been particularly liberal in our appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will please allow me. I do not know that I said we had been extravagant. I said we had been generous above all nations in the world, and I am proud of it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to charge the Senator with what he had not said. I got the impression that he thought we had been rather extravagant. However, I want to challenge the statement he made that we have been generous. We have not been overgenerous with the soldiers of this country, and when the Senator says we have been more generous than any other nation in the world I challenge that statement.

I made a showing here two years ago (I could repeat it now if I felt at liberty to take the time) that the French people have taken better care of their soldiers, have been more liberal towards them and treated them with greater equity than we have treated ours. Of course it is true that no nation in the world ever poured out its money for its soldiers as we have poured it out, but no nation in modern times ever put such a number of men in the field; no nation ever put men of the same class in the field. They were not the serfs or the slaves or the cheap people of the country. We took the flower of this land and put it into the Army. There were thousands and tens of thousands of them who carried their rifles and their knapsacks as privates who were the peers of anybody on this floor intellectually, morally, by education, and by family attachment and family ties. No other people ever had such an army; no other people ever had at the close of a war such obligations put upon it as we had put upon us.

Mr. President, there never was such a war in the history of the world as ours. There never was a contest in all the long line of history that had any comparison to it. No other people ever fought their equals as we fought ours—a national affair, with the very pick and flower of the world on both sides, the men of the highest intellectual standing and culture on the face of the earth. When we got through with that conflict we had lost one-half of the accumulated wealth of the country for two hundred years and we had incurred a debt that the great majority of men in this country and all over the world believed was past the possibility of being paid. We have paid it. We have paid $2 of interest to the men who advanced money to carry on the war where we have paid a single dollar to the soldier.

I do not complain of that, although they bought their bonds at a discount. They bought them when everything was high and they made money on them, but it was the plighted faith of the Government that they trusted. We said, "We will pay this public debt," and we are paying it. That is right; we ought to pay it. But we said more than that. We said to the soldiers and to the sailors of this country that if they incurred disabilities we would pay them a pension. We said more than that. We said in every public place in the North, we said it on the rostrum, we said it from the pulpit, that there was a merit in going into the American Army; that we would ever hold its members in grateful remembrance; and that there was nothing they could demand of this Government that they should not receive. When we can pay the great debt of $3,000,000,000 and pay it within a generation and less, we can afford to do justice to the soldier; and whenever it shall be made to appear to me that there is a just and proper demand I shall respond to it without reference to the amount.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] the other day undertook to demonstrate that we could not do certain things because there was not enough money; that there would not be sufficient revenues, and that is the cry every time it is proposed that we shall do something for the soldier. At this hour, right now, to-day, we could call on the Treasury for $300,000,000 for any purpose that we might desire and the money is there, and it could be taken without detriment to the public interest. If it is necessary to do justice, either to pay our debts, whether they be represented by a bond or whether they be represented by our obligation to the soldier, we can in an hour's notice raise more money, and millions more money, than is in the Treasury. We have the power to make legal-tender notes, if that be necessary, which we made in the hour of our distress, and which we made these men take when they were worth 40 cents on the dollar and when they were working at $13 a month. While the bondholders and the business men who the Senator from Maine says are to rise up in arms against our legislation were piling up their money by the millions, these men were working for $13 per month, many of them, and taking their pay in paper money worth 40 cents on the dollar only. If we could then make a legal-tender and impose it upon the community, we may do it now if there is an obligation on us to do it. I do not believe there is. There is revenue enough. There is abundance of money in our hands and coming in to do justice to the soldier and the sailor.

While I shall vote for this bill clean as it came from the committee, because I want to secure practical results, I wish it distinctly understood that when any fair and legitimate measure comes here looking to the interests of the soldiers it will get my vote, and it will get it without any fear of the business interests or a change of Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say a few words in addition to what I before remarked on this question.

As I intimated in what I observed a few moments ago, I can not vote for this as a substantive measure to be attached to the pending bill, but I am in favor of the principle of the arrears-of-pension bill. On this occasion, when again it is called to the attention of the Senate, no man upon either side of the Chamber rises to say that this is not a just debt. No man rises to say that it is not a more just obligation than that which we have discharged to the pensioner who has drawn his dues from the beginning.

It is a withheld obligation. These men have not asserted their claim, when it was as just as any claim which we have honored at the Treasury; and if it were paid to-day, considering the saving of interest to the Government, which is a loss to them, they would receive not more than 33 cents on the dollar of that which the ordinary pensioner has received. The disability by reason of which they finally receive their pension, and which they must establish before they draw anything, is a disability precisely like that for which the ordinary pensioner is receiving his payment from the country. It was a disability contracted in the service, which under existing laws entitled them to draw a pension from the Treasury from the date when it was received. Now, we set up the statute of limitations against that man in his old age for 33 cents on the dollar, when he has offered to compromise with us at that rate. We will not pay him that, nor give him the opportunity to prove his claim in the forum of conscience even, when, richer than ever before, with three times the population and four or five times the wealth, with the old obligations nearly discharged, we are only called upon at the utmost, as is claimed by those who object to this measure, to raise $500,000,000, when we pay annually $300,000,000 or $350,000,000 for the common expenses of the Government.

Mr. President, the great name of General Grant has been summoned to this arena of debate, and he is quoted against the justice of the claim which is set forth in the amendment. General Grant never could have wished to be understood, and never would, if he were living, say that 33 cents on the dollar should not be given to those who bled and suffered and contracted their disabilities under his command. Allusion is made to the prisoners of war and to the somewhat slighting manner in which he seemed to have discoursed in the confidence of private conversation in regard to them; but General Grant never would have said to the American people what has been quoted on this floor as coming from his lips. He never would have desired it to be understood that there was anything like a general application proper in the observation he made with reference to our prisoners of war. If Grant could have said that, it would have been a corroboration of the charges of a cruel nature which the whole Confederacy laid to him when they said that he was the man who was responsible for the sufferings of Andersonville by refusing an exchange of prisoners of war. It would revive the surmises that a certain disgraced Union officer restored to his position and to his old standing in the Army owed what the Union soldiers generally looked upon as a foul blot upon our escutcheon to the secret influence of General Grant. Sir, I disavow the whole; and I say the language is not justly attributable to that great man who first organized victory in the West and led to its culmination at Appomattox, and saved this country, if to any mortal man our restoration to integrity, to prosperity, and to perpetuity is to be attributed.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will kindly allow me, I want to say that there was not a word said in that conversation about the arrears of pension or any claim of that sort. He was speaking upon the general policy of pensions, his aim evidently being to take care of all distress that could be reached.

Mr. BLAIR. That is what we are trying to do, and in doing that we should first seek to be just before we undertake to claim anything due upon the ground of generosity. This claim for arrears of pension adjusted at this late day at 33 cents on the dollar is certainly just. If it be not just, let some one rise in argument and explain wherein it is unjust. Let some one make some reply to this claim, save the everlasting and disgraceful one that it will cost something, when our pockets are full of money. No, the arrears of pension ought to be paid. We are able to pay them. We simply will not do it because we are not obliged to. There is nothing else in the way at all, and it is a disgrace to the American people, as I look at it.

Now, I wish no Senator to vote for this bill in ignorance of what I conceive to be its true force, scope, and construction. I believe it goes to the full extent of relieving all existing necessity on the part of the old soldier, so far as $12 per month will do it. I believe that the bill reaches to the full extent of a service pension, stopping only this side of those who have no necessity to plead for its application. I believe that there will be an end of the claims for a service pension when it is enacted into a law, and when, under a just and liberal construction of its provisions, it is seen what is really included in the scope of this bill of the committee. If it were less than that, if it could be narrowed in its construction to that which was placed upon the former bill by the Executive in a previous Congress who vetoed it, I would never support this measure. I believe it reaches every case where a soldier depends upon his labor to any degree for support and is disabled at all. It does not touch the millionaire; it does not touch the wealthy man; it does not touch the man who, with or without disability contracted in the service, is yet amply able to support himself; and that man never in my judgment, at least in the existing condition of affairs in this country, should set up a pension claim. Nor does he ask it. If he asks it he has that craven nature which would be a good reason for refusing him anything whatever from the country.

I believe we have here a measure which reaches all cases of proper claim against the Government so far as the soldier is concerned, except the one of arrears, and I would not encumber this great and beneficent measure in its passage by attaching to it this other measure, in regard to which there is a different line of argument necessary in its support and in reference to which there may be opposition which will not attach to the original measure itself.

I have not found it necessary, in what little I have had occasion to say upon the stump and upon public occasions to the soldiers and my fellow-citizens in this country, to intimate to them that it was likely injustice would be done them by reason of the assertion on their part of just claims. I have never found it necessary to caution them in setting up proper claims against the country that the meanness of the country would assert itself and deprive them of just payment. I have never seen among the soldiers of this country any, I have hardly seen a man, who was opposed to the granting of these arrears.

It may be that in a miscellaneous gathering of soldiers there may be a great many who could not claim under such a law, but I have never seen them when they would undertake to pretend, or any body of them did pretend, that it was not a just claim. Even if it were so, a body of soldiers who had been made to believe that, if this act of justice were done to the few comparatively who will claim under it, they would be deprived of what belonged to them, would hardly be a fair jury to whom to submit this right. When popular orators undertake to create a wrong impression among a body of men who are to act as a jury upon claims which do not interest them generally, they can hardly be looked upon as the proper body from whom to select jurors as to a legal obligation or an equitable obligation.

No, Mr. President, the soldiers of this country want justice done, simple justice and no more than justice, and the American people want justice done to the soldiers as well as to themselves. I do not believe that the business men of this country will object to justice being done. There may be a few bodies, rich by accumulation, who care little for others. There are extortioners who would be very glad to keep their hoards and not disburse to those whose valor and whose sacrifices gave them the opportunity for their acquisitions. There may be a few of such persons, but the masses of the American people will do justice, and it is safe to assume that.

I think we can enact this bill reported by the committee into a law; and I think, too, that in another measure, properly matured and presented at the proper time, we may be able to do something with reference to arrears, and that justice, absolute justice, is at the foundation of that claim if it is at the foundation of any claim whatever against the country.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of my motion made on Saturday to concur in the House amendments to the bill (S. 2402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania. I moved a concurrence in the amendments, but the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] objected on the ground that he stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to consider the House amendments to the bill named by him.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the yeas and nays on the pending amendment and have this matter disposed of, and then I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the roll will be called on the pending question, which is the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. As I do not know how he would vote on this question, I feel constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here he would undoubtedly vote "nay," and I should vote "yae."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (when Mr. VANCE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], whom I do not see in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is detained from the Senate to-day, and is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I do not know how either would vote if present.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I do not know how he would vote. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yae."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. BECK] is detained from the Senate by sickness. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—9.
Allison, Ingalls, Manderson,	Mitchell, Plumb,	Quay, Sherman,	Turpie, Voorhees,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I now withdraw my objection to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] with regard to the bill which he has in charge.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allegheny City, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I shall have to object to the motion, because it seems to me entirely wrong to interject any other business while proceeding upon this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from New Jersey to object to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Objection being made, the bill can not be considered at this time. The dependent-pension bill is in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following amendment: On page 3, section 3, line 3, after the word "rebellion" I move to insert the words "or in the Florida Indian Seminole war, or in any of the wars between the United States and the Indians;" so as to read:

That if any officer or enlisted man who served three months or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the Florida Indian Seminole war, or in any of the wars between the United States and the Indians, and who was honorably discharged, etc.

Mr. President, the soldiers who served in the wars between the Indians and the United States, in all parts of the United States, are now very old and are dependent to a very large extent. The service which they rendered was one of very great merit and resulted greatly to the advantage of the country. I suppose that no military service ever rendered exhibited greater personal courage and greater adventure or resulted more largely in the settlement and development of the country than that rendered in the various wars between the United States and the Indians. Upon the Southern frontier, we are all well advised that the wars were long, destructive, and very cruel, and they resulted in the end in the acquisition of Florida and were largely instrumental in the acquisition and annexation of the province of Louisiana.

In all these years this service was rendered both upon the southern frontier and upon the northwestern frontier by the pioneers who were organized under the authority of the United States into companies of volunteers. Their service was demanded for the protection of the women and children from the most terrible atrocities. They are now, as I said, almost all of them very old and entirely dependent, and I ask that this amendment may be incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. CALL.

Mr. CALL. Before that is voted on I wish to change the language so as to say, "The Florida Seminole Indian wars." There were several of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest to the Senator that he add to his amendment, "Occurring prior to the year 1860."

Mr. CALL. I have no objection at all to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so modify his amendment?

Mr. BLAIR. So that it may relate only to the wars prior to 1860.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator proposes to limit the provision to the Indian wars occurring prior to 1860.

Mr. BLAIR. The reason I had in my own mind was this: That these were old claims which have been before the country for a long time and often discussed and moved as amendments to almost every pension bill we have had for many years; and if we allow the provision to include those who may take under our general laws, where disabilities have been contracted in recent years, it might raise comparisons as to the number and extent of the expenditures and require some modification of the general law and perhaps embarrass action upon the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest "prior to the year 1870;" that is, twenty years ago.

Mr. BLAIR. I will agree to that.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to modifying the amendment in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. The modification is totally unnecessary, because the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Florida only refers to the Florida Seminole wars.

Mr. BLAIR. All Indian wars.

Mr. CALL. "Or any other Indian war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator modify his amendment?

Mr. CALL. I modify it, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, by saying "prior to the year 1870."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 3, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert:

Or in the Florida Indian Seminole wars, occurring prior to the year 1870, and in any of the wars between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. CALL. The words "prior to the year 1870" should be placed after the words "or any of the Indian wars between the United States and the Indians."

The CHIEF CLERK. So as to read:

Or in the Florida Indian Seminole wars, and in any of the wars prior to the year 1870, between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to this amendment and shall vote for it so far as I am concerned. The only fault I find with it is that it does not go far enough. The men who fought in the Indian wars of this country, the pioneers who imperiled their lives in the defense of the people of the West and of the South in the early history of our country, most of whom are now advanced in years, should, in my judgment, be placed on the service-pension rolls. They should be classed, without any question at all, in my judgment, with the Mexican-war soldiers, those who fought in the Mexican war, and all of whom have been placed on a service-pension roll by an act of Congress passed some few years since. There is a bill of that character now before the Committee on Pensions, introduced by myself early in this session, and I hope, whether this amendment be adopted or not, that that bill will receive the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions. I have some reason to believe that it will. I know of no good objection why it should not, and I wish it to be understood in voting for this amendment that it simply places the pioneer soldiers, who risked their lives and property and everything else in the Indian wars of the West and South, upon the same footing as the soldiers of the war of the rebellion, that is, on the dependent-pension list. So if this is adopted I shall still hope to have the privilege of voting for other bills to which I have referred, which I trust will be reported from the Committee on Pensions at an early day.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me a word before he takes his seat, he will observe that this is a disability act. It relates only to those who rendered service prior to 1865 or the early part of that war, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], if amended so as to embrace down to the date of 1870, gives to those who participated in Indian wars the advantages of this bill to a still later date than it conveys them to those who otherwise were covered by the bill. So it is an advantage to the class he is speaking of.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that they have five years' advantage, so to speak. It includes all who served in the Indian wars prior to the year 1870, while a soldier of the war of the rebellion under this bill must have rendered his service prior to 1865.

I do not wish to detain the Senate and do not wish to interfere with the passage of this bill, but I desire to state that I at one time thought something of offering my bill, which is a service-pension bill for men who fought in Indian wars, as an amendment to this bill. I hesitate, however, to do that for fear that it may embarrass the passage of the pending bill, which I am very anxious, as we all are, to see passed at an early date, but I do hope that the bill which I introduced will receive the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions at an early day.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if there is pending before that committee a bill which covers the amendment now offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. DAVIS. I will inform the Senator from Wisconsin that such a bill is before the committee, and my impression is that the Senate at the last session of Congress passed a bill which afforded full relief in such cases.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and in so doing I do not wish my negative vote to imply an opinion on my part that there is not merit in his proposition. I believe it has merit. There are men in the State of Wisconsin, who served the country many years ago in the Black Hawk war and other Indian wars, who need pensions, and who, I think, are entitled to be remembered in the pension legislation of the country; but the bill now before the Senate is a bill carefully matured by the Committee on Pensions, which relates to a class of persons whose needs are palpable and pressing. It is to afford relief to disabled soldiers of the last war, to dependent fathers and mothers, and to widows and orphans who need the appropriation which will be made by this measure. Its operation will obliterate, I believe—and it can come none too soon—a stigma and a disgrace upon this Government existing in many States of the North.

There is merit in the amendments which have been proposed to the bill as independent propositions, and there will doubtless be merit in amendments which will be proposed to it, but for myself, regardless of the merits of different propositions, I do not intend, against the judgment of the Committee on Pensions, to vote to place upon this dependent pension bill, so called, any proposition which will lumber it up and weigh it down, upon which there can be difference of opinion, and which will thereby endanger its passage.

For that reason I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, and any other amendment which does not seem to be fairly germane and cognate to the main propositions of this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I can not understand what objection the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] can have to placing the soldiers in the Florida war upon the same basis with the soldiers in the late war between the States.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that this present bill will relieve many Union soldiers who at this time are dependent, etc. Every word that is said in their behalf can be said with equal truth of those old soldiers of the Florida Indian wars occurring before the late war. The Committee on Pensions have had the case before them Congress after Congress, and they have made no provision for those soldiers.

How can it possibly be said that it will injure this bill or delay its passage in any way or embarrass it in any respect by putting on the soldiers who fought in the Seminole war, who fought for the Government, and who are as much entitled to its consideration as those who fought in the late war?

I ask the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator who opposes this provision for these old soldiers, many of whom are much older and far more dependent than those included in the terms of the present bill, what objection he can have to the amendment, save and except the objection that some of those who will be the beneficiaries of it happen to live in the Southern States of this Union. If the Senator can bring forward any other objection to giving pensions to those soldiers who fought the battles of the Union in the Indian wars and giving the same consideration to them that he gives to the Union soldiers, save and except that they live in the southern part of the Union, I ask him to present that objection to the Senate and not attempt to prevent justice in their behalf. If this be justice to the others it should be justice to them. I say that these soldiers have waited long and no provision has been made for them, and it seems to me unfair that they should be left out and not provided for while ample provision is made for those who fought in the late war.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I heartily concur in everything which has been said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] with reference to the old soldiers of the Indian wars. I myself introduced a bill in their behalf during the last Congress and again in the early part of the present session, and I hope that before long some action will be taken in their behalf by the Committee on Pensions. Whether the amendment now offered by my colleague is adopted or not, I shall still urge the bill which I introduced or the one that was introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] covering the cases of the soldiers of the old wars between the United States and the Indians.

These veterans have now reached an advanced age. Very few of them who were engaged in the Seminole war are now under seventy and many are over eighty. My mail is constantly filled with letters coming from them and their friends urging that the benevolent and generous policy of the Government which has been extended towards other soldiers should be extended towards them.

I hope that the amendment of my colleague will prevail; but whether it prevails or not, I hope that at an early day some action will be taken in behalf of these veterans and that their names will be placed upon the pension-roll and that proper provision will be made for them and for the widows of such as have died.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator proceeds I wish to inquire at what point his amendment comes in.

Mr. CALL. Section 3, page 3, line 3.

Mr. MITCHELL. Three all around, then.

Mr. CALL. Three all around.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the intention of the Senator to limit his amendment simply to the widows of the soldiers?

Mr. CALL. As I propose to amend it, the section will read:

That if any officer or enlisted man who served three months or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the Florida Indian Seminole wars, or in any of the wars between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. MITCHELL. If that were adopted just as the Senator has read it, it would simply give pensions to the widows of those persons.

Mr. CALL. I see that is true.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that the intention of the Senator?

Mr. CALL. That is not my intention.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought not.

Mr. CALL. I think the soldier himself ought to have a pension.

Mr. MITCHELL. The effect of the amendment, if adopted as proposed, will be simply to pension the widows, and I think that is not what the Senator intends. The amendment should come in at another point.

Mr. CALL. It should be in the second section, line 3, after the word "rebellion."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida, as the Chair understands, changes his amendment so that it will operate as follows.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert:

Or in the Florida Indian Seminole wars, and in any of the wars occurring prior to the year 1870 between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, I wish to make another suggestion to the Senator before he proceeds, and that is that I hope he will strike out all in regard to the Seminole war, because there is no propriety, it seems to me, in picking out one particular Indian war and mentioning it, and then following it by saying "all others."

Mr. CALL. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then let the amendment be modified in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is modified so as to read:

Or in the Indian wars and in any of the wars occurring prior to the year 1870 between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that to be added after the word "rebellion?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it—in the third line of section 2.

Mr. MITCHELL. Please report the amendment again.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert:

Or in the Indian wars and in any of the wars occurring prior to the year 1870 between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why not say "in any Indian war?"

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the Senator say "in any of the Indian wars." It seems to me that will cover the whole case.

Mr. CALL. I will modify the amendment so as to read: "Or in the Indian wars," "or in the wars between the United States and the Indians."

Mr. BLAIR. Why not use this language: "Or in any Indian war occurring prior to 1870."

Mr. CALL. I will accept that modification or any language which conveys the idea.

Mr. MITCHELL. Say "or in any Indian war occurring prior to the year 1870."

Mr. CALL. That will answer. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment as again modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert "or in any Indian wars occurring prior to the year 1870," so as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in any Indian wars occurring prior to the year 1870, and who have been honorably discharged, etc.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this is a dependent pension bill providing for the soldiers of the late war who are dependent and in a condition of disability. The amendment which I propose is of the same character precisely. There is no difference except as to the different wars in which this service was rendered.

I have offered this amendment, embracing all the Indian wars and the soldiers who served in them, for a number of years to every general pension bill which has come up. I think everybody upon all occasions has admitted that they were a proper subject for pension; that the service they rendered was equal in importance and in the character displayed, in the courage and in the heroism, and in the results of the protection and development and improvement of the country to any rendered by any soldiers in any war. Their condition now is one that demands consideration from the public.

They are to be found in all of the Northwestern States and in many of the Southern States, and their number is quite considerable. Nearly all of them have died, and while I should be glad to concur in the action proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and support a bill giving a service pension to all the pioneers who were distinguished and who incurred danger or disability in the early settlement of the country, this amendment is germane to this bill, and in my judgment this is the time and the occasion in which it should become a part of the law.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it has been the desire of the Committee on Pensions to keep this bill as much as possible disengaged from matter which could be at all considered as extraneous to it. Now, the Committee on Pensions have under consideration a bill draughted and introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], upon which it proposes to take early and, I trust, favorable action. The bill under present consideration covers the soldiers in a particular war whose relations to the Government are well ascertained and definitely known, a subject easy to be considered by the committee, and in their deliberations the committee were not at all invited to consider whether we could properly or conveniently introduce into this measure the element of appropriation for soldiers in the Indian wars. Those Indian wars were very different. Very often they sprang up and were suppressed by people who were not mustered into the service of the United States; and yet those people, thus putting down a war of that character, are eminently entitled to be considered favorably in any application for a pension.

I trust this amendment will not be adopted. I make the statement in not to hostility to the general spirit of the amendment, but this bill is not the place for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether there is any limit as to the time of service.

Mr. CALL. All the conditions of this bill applicable to the Union soldiers are applicable to the soldiers of the Indian wars. Three months is the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but after consulting with his colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] I feel at liberty to vote on this amendment, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] is recorded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR. I vote "nay" upon this amendment, and I ask leave to say that I should be glad to vote for the amendment, but that in the judgment of the committee, of which I am a member, it is not deemed proper to place it on this bill, and therefore I vote against it.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That, for the purpose of raising the money necessary to meet the appropriations made by this and other acts of Congress providing for pensions, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the annual gains, profits, or income of every person residing in the United States, or of any citizen of the United States residing abroad, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, except as hereinafter mentioned, if such annual gains, profits, or income exceed the sum of $2,000, a duty of 5 per cent. on the excess over $2,000 and not exceeding $5,000; and a duty of 7½ per cent. per annum on the excess over $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000; and a duty of 10 per cent. on the excess over $10,000. And the duty herein provided for shall be assessed, collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, or income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said duty: Provided, That income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and securities of the United States shall be included in estimating incomes under this section.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he thinks that is an appropriate amendment. Does he think it is in our power to raise revenue in this way on a Senate bill? In other words, is it in the power of the Senate to originate a revenue bill, which this amendment is? Is the Senator serious in that?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides a fund out of which this appropriation is to be met, and it seems to me that the objection made by the Senator from Colorado would not apply to it. We discussed that matter to some extent when we had the anti-trust bill before the Senate a few days ago, and it seemed to be the general opinion that we had the right to raise revenue for the purpose of meeting an appropriation which we were making here by pending legislation.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that the Senator has confounded the rule. I understand that it is perfectly proper for the Senate to determine how the distribution of appropriations may be made. That is not the question. This is for the purpose of raising revenue, not simply to meet the requirements of this bill, because it is not confined to this bill, but to raise generally revenue. In other words, here is an income tax proposed as an amendment upon a pension bill. The Senator from Missouri certainly can not be in earnest when he thinks we can do that.

Mr. VORHEES. I ask for the re-reading of the amendment, as part of it escaped me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. VEST.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to strike out that portion of the amendment which refers to other pension bills, so as to confine it to the pending measure. The Secretary can note the modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words "and other acts of Congress providing for pensions;" so as to read:

That, for the purpose of raising the money necessary to meet the appropriations made by this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I can not believe that the Senator from Missouri is serious in proposing an amendment of that character. It is in direct contravention to section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

In the very forefront of this amendment it is stated that for the purpose of raising money the following revenues shall be raised and levied.

I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Missouri upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri on the table.

Mr. VOORHEES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], whom I do not see present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I announce for the last time my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]; and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] desired me to announce his pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here I should vote "yea" and he would probably vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], with whom I am paired, has been obliged to leave the Chamber on account of indisposition. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present I do not know how he would vote on this motion, but I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not understand that the motion was to lay the amendment on the table; I could not hear the motion of the Senator across the way, and I desire to change my vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 17; as follows:

So the motion to lay the amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add as a separate section what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of any officer or enlisted man of sixty-two years of age or over, or who shall hereafter reach that age, who shall have served ninety days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the war of the rebellion and shall have received an honorable discharge therefrom, said pension to commence from the date of the application therefor and to continue during the term of the life of said officer or enlisted man, at the rate of $8 a month.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this proposition is precisely the same as the one adopted by Congress on the 29th day of January, 1887, with reference to the survivors of the Mexican war. It is provided in that act—

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia, and volunteers, of the military and naval services of the United States, who, being duly enlisted, actually served sixty days with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, in the war with that nation, or were actually engaged in a battle in said war, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said war, and the surviving widow of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become sixty-two years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Mr. President, there does not seem to be any reason why, since this policy of pensioning all the survivors of the Mexican war sixty-two years of age and upward has been adopted, we should not apply it to the survivors of the war of the rebellion similarly situated.

I have a statement prepared at the War Department which possesses some authority at least, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the close of my remarks, from which it appears that the number of the survivors of the war of the rebellion who will on the 30th day of June next be sixty-two years of age or over will be 149,531. The estimate is not made here, at least I do not find it on a cursory examination, as to the number of those who are now pensioned, but I have seen a statement which would indicate that somewhere about 90,000 of them were not now on the pension-rolls, and would therefore be embraced within the purview of this amendment.

The statement which I have in my hand and which I have asked to have printed is somewhat elaborate, and shows the number to be added to this list in each succeeding year down to 1909. It also gives an approximate estimate of the number of ex-Union soldiers now surviving and the death rate which may be anticipated until the last one has passed beyond.

This statement has been challenged to some extent by persons who have examined it, and I do not say that it possesses absolute authority. The challenge, however, has been because the statement is too large as to the number of ex-Union soldiers surviving, but I think it is in all probability substantially accurate.

At all events, Mr. President, the amount that will be added to the pension payment during the coming year by reason of this amendment would be a little less than $10,000,000. Of course the amount would increase, as, for instance, in 1891 there would be an addition of 20,817 persons. In 1892 the number would be 22,692; in 1893, 24,891, and so until the maximum of 106,043 is reached in 1905. The number then declines until in 1906, 97,836 are left; in 1907, 44,147; in 1908, 5,672; and in 1909, 820.

It seems to me that we can not do at this time any less for the survivors of the war of the rebellion than we did for the survivors of the Mexican war. There was no controversy about that measure. It received practically the unanimous support of Congress, and it was signed by the President, and I may add at the same session of Congress, as I remember now, and perhaps with the same pen with which he vetoed the bill giving a pension to the survivors of the war for the Union who were disabled.

The amendment is in the line of a precedent recently established, one which is wholesome and one which I do not think we can at this time afford to disregard.

The statement referred to by Mr. PLUMB is as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. The consideration of this question of the service pension, as to when it shall be passed, as to what age, upon what basis, and what is to be expected from such a bill when it goes into operation, is undoubtedly very interesting, and, as a matter of duty, it should receive the consideration of Congress; but I regret very much that the figures which the Senator from Kansas has just now submitted to the Senate have never been submitted to the Committee on Pensions in connection with any measure which has been introduced and referred for their consideration. Then the amendment itself has no proper place or relation to this bill, which is a dependent pension bill on account of disability, a bill devised for the purpose of aiding and relieving those who are in immediate straits and need, by reason of disability, a bill which by its very terms and upon its very theory excludes entirely the idea of a service pension. Now, to go on in this manner upon an amendment sprung upon this bill at the closing hours of its consideration, voting pensions for amounts which are not vouched for and for numbers which are not vouched for, strikes me as very hasty legislation and likely to be improper. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]?

Mr. PLUMB. I think I shall venture to have the yeas and nays on that if I can get a second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. President, this dependent pension bill is not altogether satisfactory to me, but I want to vote for it because it will relieve a good many of those who are in distress now, and it will relieve the nation from the odium of having a large number of its defenders in the poor-houses of the country. It has been going on now for weeks and no action has been reached. It seems to me that it is time that this one bill was carried through the Senate and placed in the progress of enactment by both Houses of Congress.

I wish to say in regard to the amendment which has just been submitted by the Senator from Kansas, speaking for myself alone, that I object to it because it does not go far enough, and I make this remark now in order that my vote upon the amendment may not be misunderstood by the soldiers. At the proper time I hope there will be introduced in this Chamber (and if no one else introduces it I shall take occasion to do so myself) a bill which is more liberal in its character than the amendment which has been submitted by the Senator from Kansas. I have examined the figures very carefully, and I do not believe they go far enough or are liberal enough to the old soldiers.

I simply desired to make that explanation before the vote was taken.

Mr. PLUMB. One little thing did not seem to occur to the Senator; and that is, he did not move any amendment to make it more liberal.

Mr. PIERCE. I am not prepared to do it in proper form at this moment; otherwise I should be glad to do so.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is detained from the Senate Chamber by official business. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARDOUR].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have received word from the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I have announced a pair, that I am at liberty to vote on this amendment. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HALE] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. As he is not in the Chamber I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DOLPH. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 38; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, with the permission of the Senate, to say one word in regard to the amendment which has just been rejected. I voted for it because I desired in this way to express my belief that the principle of a service-pension bill ought to be adopted with reference to those veterans who have attained a certain advanced age, and I suppose the age fixed in the amendment is the proper one to conform to the present laws. I do not, however, altogether like the amendment as it was proposed, and should prefer, when the system or doctrine of service pensions is adopted that there should be something in the way of a graduation of the pension to the length of service. I do not think that a three-month man, who perhaps never was in the front, who merely enlisted and guarded some fort, perhaps sometimes even a fort in one of the Northern harbors, should be entitled to precisely the same amount of service pension as a veteran who went to the war and staid all through and bore the burden and heat of the day.

I introduced some two years ago, at the request of a person who had carefully studied this matter, a bill giving so much a day, a service pension proportioned to the length of service, which I think would be a more just and reasonable provision than the one just now proposed. I recorded my vote in favor of this project of the Senator from Kansas because, as I said, I desired to express my approbation of the principle and my belief that the time has come when we ought to be dealing with this pension subject in that line.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out, commencing in line 6, page 2, of the reprint of the bill, in section 2, these words:

Which incapacitates them from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor, or on the contributions of others not legally bound thereto, for their support.

That eliminates from the section what is known as the dependent feature of it. I have already stated all I care to say upon that point, and now will say something in response to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has said.

There is great force in the suggestion, upon general principles, that whoever served the longest should have the greatest pay where that pay was given because of the service alone, not on account of disability. In proposing the amendment which I did, and which has been voted down, I followed the example which Congress has recently set with reference to the survivors of the Mexican war and the precedent which was set in the pensions to survivors of the war of 1812. It may be proper at this date now to make a new rule in regard to the survivors of the war of the rebellion. Upon that I do not care to express any final opinion, but merely to say that it is totally opposed to every principle of legislation which we have heretofore applied in the shape of pensions, and that whoever seeks to apply it in such a way as to do exact justice will find there is considerable difficulty before him. Yet I would be willing to vote for some such proposition as the Senator from Massachusetts has spoken of, perhaps the identical one that he has suggested, and I hope the fact that I have presented these amendments which have been criticised by a member of the committee and by the Senator from Massachusetts as being crude—

Mr. HOAR. I did not criticise—

Mr. PLUMB. As being objectionable because they did not go far enough, and so on. I hope they will not be restrained by any means, now, inasmuch as this matter has been voted down, to propose another measure which they think will more nearly meet the situation.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator—

Mr. PLUMB. Excuse me. The Senate furnishes stationery, pen, ink, paper, and things of that sort. The Senator from North Dakota who spoke [Mr. PIERCE] has had some experience in putting his thoughts upon paper. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] himself is somewhat of an adept in that line. I hope there will not be any restraint growing out of any lack of appreciation of the ability of Senators on that subject or of any innate modesty either.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose it will be remembered that nearly all who would be covered by this proposition to give a service pension upon attaining the age of sixty-two years are already included in the terms of the present bill, for not less than three-fourths of the soldiers of the country who are not already pensioned under other laws are included under the provisions of this bill whether they have reached the age of sixty-two or are younger. Of those sixty-two years of age there are at least three-fourths who are incapacitated by "mental or physical disability" "from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor, or on the contributions of others not legally bound thereto, for their support." The universal construction of the language used in the pension laws is that the support or the dependence need not be total in order to enable the claimant to avail himself of the provisions of the law, and this incapacity to earn a support need not be a total support.

Any incapacity such as is included in the language which I have read here in the sixth and tenth lines, any lack of support or any degree of dependence, whether it be dependence wholly or in part, or support wholly or in part, is sufficient to bring the soldier within the terms of the bill. Any one who knows aught of the condition of the soldiers of the country must see that the bill covers everybody who ought to have help, no matter what the age is, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas would simply be inclusive of those soldiers who are over sixty-two years of age who do not need any assistance whatever. For my own part I am against the pensioning of millionaires, I do not care what their age is or what their service may have been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2 of the reprint of the bill, line 6, after the word "habits," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "support" in line 10, as follows:

Which incapacitates them from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor, or on the contributions of others not legally bound thereto for their support.

So as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add as a new section the following:

Sec. —. That, when it shall appear that any applicant for pension on account of disability was confined in a Confederate prison for a period of thirty days or more, such applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the presumption that such disability was incurred while he was in the military service and in the line of duty, and be pensioned accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there has been for a long time a contention, with which members of the Committee on Pensions especially are familiar, that the men who were confined in Andersonville, Salisbury, and other Confederate prisons should be entitled to a recognition of their sufferings and disabilities which they are not able to make proof of for reasons which are entirely obvious. The bill as reported from the committee will give a certain recognition to them, but it will not give a recognition which carries a rating above $12 per month. This amendment is in the line of the provisions of the second section, but will have the advantage of giving a greater rating than $12 to a number of these very deserving men. I know the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, with that preference for his own bantling which all parents have, does not want the bill amended, but I hope he will see that in this amendment there is sufficient merit to warrant the exception. It will make at the same time a very just recognition of a deserving class of people who may not get relief if they do not get it through the medium of this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The amendment has no proper place in this bill. The question of presumption under the bill, when or where a man was disabled, is entirely done away with by its very provisions. By the bill it is sufficient if a man is disabled at the time he filed his application, no matter when or where he may have incurred the disability. So far as benefits under the bill are concerned, whether he incurred the disability in prison twenty-five years ago or yesterday as the result of any of the ordinary casualties of life makes no difference. Hence the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, however apparently meritorious, is not harmonious with the provisions or the theory of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is quite possible that, as the discussion proceeds, I shall vote against something, perhaps more than one thing, that I heartily believe in. But an experience of some years in Congress has taught me this at least, whether it has others, that if you have a committee you trust, and that committee give great time to a bill and are sure of it, and it is well considered, and the committee come in unanimously and beg you to stand by the measure and not listen to plausible amendments, it is better to do it practically, because then we shall get something done certainly. I am afraid to vote for amendments in this way. I shall vote against any amendment to the bill simply on that ground, and I want to get through a first-rate proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], who is detained from the Senate by indisposition. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] to the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], so as to enable both the Senator from Arkansas and myself to vote. That being agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. On the transfer of pairs, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire if any Senator has announced a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]? I understand he is paired with some Senator and I shall not attempt to transfer my pair to him.

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask whether the vote of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is recorded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. EVARTS. Then I must withdraw my vote.

Mr. FARWELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not recorded.

Mr. FARWELL. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] has a general pair with his colleague [Mr. HEARST]. I understand that his colleague voted "yea."

Mr. PLATT. As the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is absent and unpaired, I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] to the Senator from California and vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Which Senator from California does the Senator from Connecticut refer to?

Mr. PLATT. I refer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. His colleague has voted.

Mr. HARRIS. My understanding has been that the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is generally paired with his colleague [Mr. HEARST].

Mr. PLATT. And his colleague [Mr. HEARST] voted the same way which he would vote.

Mr. HARRIS. That answers my question.

Mr. PLATT. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that his colleague [Mr. HALE] is necessarily detained from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If permitted, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BECK] on account of ill-health. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I will make another inquiry. I wish to ascertain whether the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] has been announced as paired with any Senator?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. CULLOM. All right; I can not get in my vote.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. The Senator from Rhode Island asked me to arrange the pair and wished me to state that he is in favor of the bill, and if present would vote for it.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 12; as follows:

The committee report to amend the title, so as to read: "A bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to their widows, minor children, and dependent parents."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions how a soldier who is now incapacitated for labor can have a widow.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the word "their" be stricken out before the word "widows."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the title will be amended as it will now be read.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents."

SENATORS FROM MONTANA.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the Montana contested-election case. I will state that it is not my purpose to urge the Senate to proceed with the matter to-night, but to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. GORMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] who submitted the views of the minority is not here.

Mr. HOAR. I have an understanding with the Senator from Delaware that this case shall not be proceeded with until to-morrow, Tuesday. I call it up, as I just stated, for the sake of making it the unfinished business for to-morrow. I propose now to move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

MONDAY, March 31, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. E. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

CORRECTIONS OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the Journal corrected. The Clerk read that Mr. LEWIS had asked for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill to issue a duplicate check to O. M. Carter. It should have been Mr. LESTER, of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. The amendments presented to the bill (H. R. 2402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, are stated to have come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The amendments did not come from that committee, but were proposed by myself.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. The Journal as corrected will, without objection, be approved.

PURE LARD.

Mr. MORGAN obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following memorial from the presidents of eleven State Farmers' Alliances:

At a meeting of presidents of the various State Farmers' Alliances, called by the president of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, held in Atlanta, Ga., on the 19th day of March, 1890, the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That the representatives of the cotton States, here assembled, do assert that the compound-lard bill now pending in Congress is unwise, special, and class legislation, and will increase the burdens of one class of producers and only benefit a monopoly that by no means manufactures a pure article of hog's lard, and members of Congress are hereby most respectfully and earnestly requested to oppose the passage of said measure."

It was also resolved that the above resolution pertaining to national legislation on the compound-lard bill shall be printed in The National Economist and be placed on the desk of each Senator and Representative.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted.

SALE OF UNITED STATES PROPERTY IN PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 753) authorizing and directing the sale of certain property belonging to the United States, situate in Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to reserve the right of objection until explanation has been made of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is so much confusion we are unable to hear what business is being transacted.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to sell and convey to the purchaser or purchasers all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all that certain parcel of ground, belonging to the United States, situate in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., at the northwest corner of Penn avenue and Garrison alley, in the fourth ward of said city, fronting 100 feet on the west side of Penn avenue and extending northwardly along the west line of Garrison alley, preserving the same width, to low-water line of the Allegheny River, subject, however, to such public easements as exist thereon and thereover.

Sec. 2. That said sales shall be by public auction after due advertisement, daily, for three weeks in three newspapers of the city of Pittsburgh, and after publication of notice by printed hand-bills posted for that length of time on said property and in ten of the most conspicuous places in the said city, and shall be of the property as a whole or in parts, for cash, as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may best subserve the interest of the United States and secure the best price for said entire property.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, before unanimous consent is given I hope that the report from the Secretary of War, if there is one, will be read.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to my friend from Indiana, if he will give me his attention, that the sale of this property has been recommended by four different Secretaries of War: first by Secretary Belknap, then by Secretary Lincoln, then by Secretary Endicott, and last by Secretary Proctor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the reasons given by the present Secretary for the sale will be stated.

Mr. DALZELL. The reason assigned is that the property is of no use to the Government. It is worth, perhaps, $250,000 or $300,000, and the Government is substantially paying $18,000 a year rent for property that it does not use. This is a piece of old fort property which was abandoned as a fort seventy-five years ago. It is now in the business portion of the city of Pittsburgh and is very valuable, while it is of no use to the Government. On the last page of the report there appears an extract from a communication from General S. V. Benét, Chief of Ordnance and Acting Secretary of War, in which he says:

This land is not needed for the use of this Department, but the United States should sell what it owns—all its right, title, and interest—for cash, at public auction, the proceeds of the sale to be covered into the Treasury.

And under date of January 15, 1890, Quartermaster-General S. B. Holabird, in a letter to the committee, says:

The property in question, a part of old Fort Fayette, has been in the possession of the United States since 1794. It is not now needed, and will not be needed in the future for military purposes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I may add to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, that the bill is reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAISH. And it was reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will go into the RECORD as showing the basis of this action.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see the object of printing the report after the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. It tends to keep the proceedings of Congress from being read.

Mr. HOLMAN. We often sell property low and afterwards buy it back at high prices, and I wish to have this report printed to show the reasons for this sale.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not object to this report being printed; but, Mr. Speaker, we are in the habit almost every day of passing bills first and then printing the reports in the RECORD, and I do not see the object of that practice.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is convenient as a matter of reference.

Mr. BLOUNT. But there is no use in printing the report after the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to printing the report?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio,) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs have considered House bill No. 753, authorizing and directing the sale of certain property belonging to the United States, situate in Pittsburgh, Pa., and recommend that it do pass for the following reasons:

The property in question constitutes a portion of what was originally Fort Fayette, situate on the banks of the Allegheny River. By an act of Congress approved August 2, 1813, all of the property originally owned at this place by the United States was authorized to be disposed of by public sale, and subsequently all was so disposed of excepting the portion now embraced in this bill. This has been for some years under the control of the Quartermaster's Department. It has on it a two-story brick house and some other buildings of no importance.

Owing to the growth of the business portion of the city of Pittsburgh the property has now become very valuable and would command a high price in the market if exposed to sale. As long ago as 1874 this property was the subject of special examination and report by the Quartermaster's Department. In a communication dated June 2, 1874, addressed to the Adjutant-General, C. G. Sawtelle, quartermaster and brevet brigadier-general of the United States Army, who had made a special examination of this property, reported as follows:

"The whole property is centrally located, is admirably adapted for business purposes, and is very valuable. There seems to be no probability of it ever being needed for military purposes. I am therefore of opinion and I recommend that the whole property be sold at public auction, after due public notice, so soon as requisite authority therefor can be obtained."

Following this report Quartermaster-General M. C. Meigs, in June, 1874, in his report to the Secretary of War, made the following statement:

"As this real estate of the United States is said to be worth $100,000 and is not now needed for use of the Quartermaster's Department, it is believed to be advisable that the question of its sale at public auction should be submitted to Congress. Six per cent. of the estimated value of $100,000 is $6,000 per annum, which is probably greatly in excess of what the rent of any quarters and storehouses needed in the future at Pittsburgh will cost."

This report to the Secretary of War was sent to Congress with the favorable indorsement of the then Secretary of War, Hon. William W. Belknap. For some reason or other no action was taken by Congress in the premises.

Since the proceedings recited were had the value of this property has very greatly increased, and its retention by the Government is now, in the judgment of the committee, very unwise. It does not seem to be needed for Government purposes, and the amount that it would bring at a fair sale would yield in interest a rent which the Government is not justified in paying for property that is practically useless to it. A communication to the committee, signed "S. V. Benét, brigadier-general, Chief of Ordnance and Acting Secretary of War," under date of March 7, 1888, says:

"This land is not needed for the use of this department, but the United States should sell what it owns—all its right, title, and interest—for cash, at public auction, the proceeds of the sale to be covered into the Treasury."

Quartermaster-General S. B. Holabird, in a letter to the committee dated January 15, 1890, states that—

"The property in question, a part of old Fort Fayette, has been in the possession of the United States since 1794. It is not now needed and will not be needed in future for military purposes."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DALZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEWIS STEELMAN.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 2142), for the relief of the heirs of Lewis Steelman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to withdraw from the files of the Department of State, and deliver the same to the heirs of Lewis Steelman, or their legal representative, the papers and evidence presented to the late American and Mexican Claims Commission, organized pursuant to the convention of July 4, 1888, between the United States and Mexico, in his claim against Mexico for $54,500, for the seizure of wrecking apparatus by the captain of the port of Salina Cruz, September 19, 1889, which case is known as 563 on the docket of said commission, to enable said heirs, through their legal representatives, to further prosecute said claim against Mexico through the Department of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to hear an explanation, reserving the right to object.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will make the explanation in a very few words. Mr. Steelman in 1870 filed some papers in the State Department, to be placed before the Mexican Commission, but it turned out that the papers were filed too late. They are of no use there, and the State Department does not desire their possession, as it declines to make any use of them in the prosecution of the claim. This citizen simply desires to withdraw those papers from the Department, and the Department makes no objection, but concedes the fitness of this legislation, with the amendment which is found in the latter part of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does it require an act of Congress to enable a man to withdraw such papers?

Mr. DUNNELL. It does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows: Amend by striking out all after the word "commission," being the following words: "to enable said heirs, through their legal representatives, to further prosecute said claim against Mexico through the Department of State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CASTLE ISLAND, BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 14) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted to the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, through its park commissioners, to improve and beautify Castle Island, situated in said city, and belonging to the United States, in connection with a public park to be laid out on land adjoining and connecting with said island, with the right to the said city of Boston to make such excavations and fillings, and erect and maintain such structures as the Secretary of War may from time to time approve: Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to pass any title in said island, but that the ownership and control of the said grounds shall remain entirely in the United States, and shall be subject to such changes and uses for military or other purposes as the Secretary of War may direct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following words:

"And that the bridge leading from the harbor line to the island shall not be constructed until the plans for the same have been approved by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR LINES IN PORTAGE LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HERMANN. I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7345) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to establish new harbor lines in Portage Lake, Houghton County, Michigan.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the regular order.

PORT ELLIS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands upon the bill (H. R. 8049) to provide for the disposal of the abandoned Fort Ellis military reservation, in Montana, under the homestead law, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the lands embraced within the abandoned Fort Ellis military reservation, in Montana, to be regularly surveyed by an extension of the public surveys over the unsurveyed portions thereof.

SEC. 2. That upon approval of such surveys by the Secretary of the Interior said lands shall become a part of the public domain and subject to exploration, location, entry, and settlement under the mining and homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall limit the operations of any grant of land heretofore made to the State of Montana for educational or other purposes.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause any improvements, buildings, building materials, and other property which may be situate upon such lands not heretofore sold by the United States authorities to be appraised by three competent and disinterested men, to be appointed by him, who shall, after each having been duly sworn to impartially and faithfully execute the trust imposed in him, appraise the said improvements, buildings, building materials, and other property situate thereon and report their proceedings to the Secretary of the Interior for his action thereon; and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the same to be advertised for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in at least two newspapers of general circulation published in said State of Montana for four successive weeks, giving the time and place of said sale. Any sale of improvements made under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

Amend section 2 by inserting after the word "lands" in line 2 the words "and otherwise disposed of."

Add to section 2 the following:

"And be it further provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of this grant."

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering this bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that since the reporting of this bill to the House I have received from a gentleman named J. W. Imes, claiming to reside on the land in question, a telegram requesting that action on this bill be suspended, and stating that he would send to the distinguished gentleman representing that State [Mr. CARTER] affidavits on the subject. I understand that those affidavits have been received. I have conversed with the gentleman from Montana, and in view of his statement I do not feel justified in asking further postponement of this question, as he is of opinion that the rights claimed by this party are not injuriously affected by the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in addition. I notice that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] has not excepted from the homestead provision in this bill the commutation clause. I thought that exception had been made. I hope there will be no objection to making the exception by inserting a provision that "agricultural lands shall be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead law, except section 2301, which shall not apply."

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any use in debate proceeding unless we have order enough to hear it. I have not heard a word that the gentleman from Indiana has said, and I have been listening intently.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point is well taken. The House will come to order. Gentlemen in the aisles will please take their seats.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad to have the view of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] in regard to the matter I have suggested.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, if this bill becomes law these lands are opened for settlement under the homestead law. No general bill repealing the commutative section of this law has ever passed Congress, and none has been favorably reported to this House at this session from the Committee on Public Lands. The committee is unwilling, I think, to make at this time any special law to apply to these lands which does not apply to other public lands. The pre-emption law will not operate as to the lands to be opened by this bill. This is the law under which the frauds, if any, have been committed. We simply extend to this 33,000 acres the provisions of the homestead law. I think that is right, and so far as I am concerned I would like to make such a general law. I do not see the use of the pre-emption law; but with it out of the way there is use for section 2301. Some such law is necessary to protect settlers against unforeseen casualties. I hope the bill will pass. It ought to pass, and pass speedily, so that the land may be opened in time for settlement during the coming season. It is right and gives no preference to any one.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in our later legislation this commutation clause has been almost uniformly suspended, for the reason that under it the purchaser generally buys for purposes of speculation, not for the purpose of securing a home, and because with that section in operation, you might as well apply at once the pre-emption law.

Mr. MCRAE. The person taking up this land under the homestead law must swear that he does so for actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the purpose of speculation. He can only get it in this way, and after so swearing, he must, before he receive title, prove this fact by two witnesses.

Mr. HOLMAN. Our experience, however, has been that vast bodies of land have been taken up for speculation under the commutation provision, as my friend knows.

Mr. MCRAE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The frauds have been committed under the pre-emption law.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I was not present in the committee when this subject was acted on, I do not feel justified in antagonizing this bill, although I am not satisfied with it in this respect.

Mr. MCRAE. I will say further, in support of the position assumed by the committee, that in the passage of the Oklahoma bill through the last Congress, section 2301 and also the provisions of the pre-emption law were not permitted to operate in that Territory; but when we came back here at this session we found there was a clamor from that country for some relief of this kind, and the result was that, while in the bill organizing the Oklahoma Territory the exception that my friend from Indiana would insist upon was inserted, the provisions of the pre-emption law, much more dangerous, were at the same time extended to that Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but the reason was that the section having that effect was never reached for consideration by the House. If it had been reached, I have no doubt it would have been struck out.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRANK. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

D. B. HENDERSON,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of this report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before the question is taken on adopting this report, I would like the gentleman from Iowa to explain to the House, so that it may be fully understood, that in this conference report the Senate has receded from its amendments by which a maximum amount was appropriated for the payment of arrears of pay of two and three year volunteers, for commutation of rations to prisoners of war and soldiers on furlough, and of claims for bounty, about which we had a discussion in the House. I think the House ought to understand that the Senate receded from those amendments; and I deem it due to myself to state that I do not withdraw the opposition which I originally made to the form of the bill as brought into the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

Therefore, the amount which the Senate put on, and which was stricken out nominally, is not really stricken from the appropriation carried by the bill. It is not as a matter of fact that $412,358 is stricken from the bill, for it is only nominally stricken out, for in point of law we do appropriate, possibly not that precise sum, but an indefinite and perhaps larger sum, a sum that may be larger than the amount named. As it was shown by our associate on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], last year these items of expenditure amounted to $1,332,998.

This bill carries $711,000 for this purpose and it still leaves the sum of $621,000 to be expended under the provisions of the bill, provided the claims audited this year equal the amount passed last year.

Mr. SAYERS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Senate recedes from all these amendments?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, not from all. It recedes from all of the items except that as to the pay of claims for lost horses. The amendment is numbered 68 from which we recede and concur with the Senate.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman from Kentucky explain why this rule is applied to only one class of cases or claims and another class is provided for differently?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes. There is a very clear distinction between the two; whether it justifies the action of the committee or not is for others to decide, but in the judgment of the committee there is a clear distinction. The claims in the other items are provable by the records of the Government. All that is necessary for a claimant to prove under the other items is his own identity. The claimant for a horse, however, has to prove his claim by testimony outside of the record.

Mr. SAYERS. You refer in the other class to those claims that are for back pay and bounty, etc.?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In the former items to which I have referred, bounty, etc., the claims are proved by testimony which is kept by the United States, is furnished by the United States, and is wholly a matter of record belonging to the Government, in which case the claimant has only to prove identity. In such cases, therefore, the chance for fraud is comparatively slight, and there is a real distinction between such claims and those known as horse claims, where the Senate adhered to its amendment and the House conferees receded. I believe I state it fairly, so that the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Texas can see the distinction.

But I thought it only proper and due to myself that the House might understand that the managers on the part of the House insisted on the position taken by the House, and the Senate receded, and that therefore the statement that this bill carries twenty-four million two hundred and one thousand and odd dollars ought to be coupled with a statement, or at least should be understood to mean, that this is the amount it appropriates specifically and by name, but it also carries an appropriation of possibly $600,000 additional for the payment of these items, which the auditing officers under it will have a right to pay as soon as the auditing is completed.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I am permitted to do so. I believe that I am occupying the floor in the time of my colleague, and by his courtesy.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. ROGERS. Just for a moment, for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. As I understand this question, when the identity of a soldier who claims bounty or back pay is once established the records of the Government show the amount due him or furnish the proof of the amount of his claim?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. And as to that we make the indefinite appropriation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is correct.

Mr. ROGERS. But when you make provision for claims of the other class how are they audited, I would ask the gentleman?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In precisely the same manner.

Mr. ROGERS. By the same officer?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. By the same general class of officers. Some of them fall under the Second Auditor and some of them under the Third Auditor.

Mr. ROGERS. But the testimony?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The testimony is made up by proof outside.

Mr. ROGERS. Wholly extraneous to the record?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Altogether.

Mr. ROGERS. In that case how is the appropriation made by the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In that case we adhere to the old mode; the auditing officer has the power under the law to audit the claim, and must report to the Secretary of the Treasury, who reports to Congress, and Congress, of course, has power to make the necessary appropriation for it.

Mr. ROGERS. So you only provide in this bill for the claims that are not reported to Congress?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That's all.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, one word further in this connection. How will Congress, which is supposed to hold the purse-strings, be advised as to the expenditure for that class of claims and the amount required to pay them?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Well, as a matter of legislation Congress will not be so advised; but will be advised as a matter of information. It is the duty of the officer charged with the disbursement of such funds to report the expenditure and amount of the payments made, and it will be a matter of information which Congress will receive. Congress will have no duty to perform in the premises unless it discover that some fraud has been perpetrated which will require impeachment.

Mr. ROGERS. I only desire to know whether there is any period, near or remote, when these officers will be able to report to Congress that they had struck bottom.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. They will, of course, report to Congress the amount of money expended; but that, however, will be subsequent to the expenditure. The whole question here is that in this class of cases payment can be made by the auditing officers prior to a report to Congress. They are meritorious cases, and payments ought to have been made long ago, and have not been made for reasons with which I am not entirely familiar and which I do not mean to criticize. Such cases can be audited from documentary proof in the possession of the Government; and under some late improvements inaugurated in the War Department, originally suggested under the advice of a gentleman named Ainsworth, I believe, these cases can be more speedily audited, and payments probably made more rapidly.

It is a temporary matter which should expire in the next three or four years; so that in and of itself it is mainly objectionable, as affording a dangerous precedent in favor of indefinite appropriations. In addition to that there is, of course, the objection that it conceals, in the appropriation bill, the amount of the appropriation itself. It is a mode of making appropriations which conceals the amount appropriated. It also confers powers on auditing officers which they ought not to possess.

I simply wanted to call the attention of the House to these points.

Mr. DOCKERY addressed the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DOCKERY. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. All right.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I was not here when the debate commenced and do not know what has been said.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have not heard what has been stated on that side.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask of the gentleman in charge of this bill what amount he estimates is concealed by this indefinite appropriation for the balance of this fiscal year?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing concealed in this bill; not a dollar. No living man can state the amount that will be required to meet the indefinite appropriations for back pay, bounty, commutation of rations, etc. The amount estimated when we made up the bill for the House was $412,000; but a subsequent letter has been received from one of the auditing officers, who finds that there will be about $30,000 more required. They are allowing them at a more rapid rate than heretofore, and we can not tell how much it will be; but we are agreeing, and the Senate agreeing to the proposition, receding from their amendment; so that whatever the amount may be it is provided for in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman estimates—

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It will be at least $412,000, and may be a great many thousands more than that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does he not believe that it will be somewhere over $600,000, because last year the amount necessary was $1,330,000 in round numbers? This bill gives $711,000, which gives a distinction of over $600,000, and the statement was made that these claims are being audited much more rapidly and efficiently than they ever have been, so that there probably will be a larger payment made this year, and probably the payment will require $600,000 more than the sum named in our bill, will it not?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing of what the amount will be, except that the auditing officer made an estimate for $412,000; a few days afterwards they made an estimate of $30,000 more. But we propose that when these claims are considered and allowed these poor fellows shall have their cash, be it more or be it less. I will say, while on that subject, that I had not referred to it, because it is explicitly referred to in the extended report we have made, and it is stated therein in express terms that the $24,308,770.49 embraced in the bill contains a provision of $412,000 for these indefinite appropriations. There is nothing covered, nothing concealed, and the report made by the conference committee on this bill, if adopted, will enable the gentlemen to make the fullest use of it in the campaign, if they want to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Have no fear as to that. We will use it to the fullest extent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And when that time comes we will meet them successfully on the stump in regard to it. We will be prepared with wholesome reasons for consumers in the campaign.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] asked for a minute, and I yield it to him.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I criticised the other day the manner in which conference reports were formerly drawn. I desire only to say that this report is drawn as I think all such reports ought to be drawn, and when the Clerk read item after item I followed it with my pen in my hand. If I had had any serious difference with the committee on any point I should have been enabled to discuss it at once without asking any question. I respectfully and sincerely hope that the Committee on Appropriations will keep up the good practice.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois has encouraged me to renew my motion for the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 and ask for a further conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky.

SERVICE-PENSION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies extra of House bill 8297 and accompanying report be ordered printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What report is that?

Mr. MORRILL. It is House bill 8297, providing for a service pension for the soldiers of the rebellion and their widows, and for other purposes, which has been reported back to the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. A general pension bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

DUTIES ON BREADSTUFFS AND PROVISIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the following privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives a statement showing what, if any, changes have been made by foreign countries since 1879 in the rates of duty imposed upon breadstuffs and provisions imported in said countries from the United States, and what laws, if any, have been enacted or regulations have been made in such countries since said date prohibiting, obstructing, or in any manner interfering with the importation and sale of such articles.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at 1 o'clock and fifteen minutes, and the call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] to the bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will be reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendment has been reported a number of times.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to-day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to section 2 the following:

"Provided, That the consent of the Indian tribe or tribes through whose reservation this railroad shall pass shall first be had and obtained."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Committee on the Territories was called.

Mr. STRUBLE. The Committee on Territories have nothing to present this morning.

The Committee on Labor was called.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of that committee has been called away by serious illness in his family. Before he left he requested me to ask that the committee be passed over without prejudice, and under the circumstances I think the request ought to be granted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman know that there is anything to be presented by the committee?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. The chairman asked me to make the request that the committee be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the Committee on Labor be passed on this call without prejudice?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make that request.

The Committee on the Militia was called.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, by instruction of the committee I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER (after examining it). This resolution would not be in order. The committee has only the right to call up a measure that is on the House Calendar.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, and it is merely a resolution to fix a day.

The SPEAKER. But it is not on the House Calendar, and is not in order.

The Committee on Patents was called.

Mr. SIMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Patents be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions was called.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I call up the bill (S. 390) to amend paragraph 3 of section 693 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is this bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. MORRILL. It is not on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not in order at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee have no bills on the House Calendar.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department was called.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the absence of the chairman of that committee the committee be passed without prejudice.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, was the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department called?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I see the chairman of that committee is not present, and I should like to ask that it be passed now with leave to return to it on a subsequent call.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department be passed without prejudice?

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the chairman of that committee is sick, and, if so, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee on Accounts was called.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether the Chair has just decided that it is not in order upon this call to move to fix a day for the consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Only bills on the House Calendar are in order under this call.

Mr. HAYES. A bill or resolution that is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole is not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

SECTION 1018, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 6952) to amend section 1018 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 1018 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 1018. Any party charged with a criminal offense and admitted to bail may, in vacation, be arrested by his bail and delivered to the marshal or his deputy at the place of trial before any judge or other officer having power to commit for such offense, and at the request of such bail the judge or other officer shall recommit the party so arrested to the custody of the marshal and indorse on the recognizance, or certified copy thereof, the discharge and exoneration of such bail; and the party so committed shall therefrom be held in custody until discharged by due course of law."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I call up the bill (S. 2542) to provide for the administration of oaths, for which a substitute is reported by the committee, embodying the provisions of House bill 121.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate bill and then the House bill which is proposed as a substitute.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That, in addition to the persons now authorized by law, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the circuit and district judges of the United States, and the clerks of the United States courts, and the commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States be, and they are hereby, respectively authorized to administer all oaths authorized or required by the laws of the United States, excepting in cases in which any such oaths are required to be taken before a particular officer of the United States.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That any justice, judge, clerk, or commissioner of any court of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered, within his territorial jurisdiction, to administer oaths in any matter or proceeding, civil or criminal, that may hereafter arise under or wherein an oath may now or hereafter be required by or administered under the laws of the United States. And any oath so administered shall be operative and valid for all the purposes contemplated in its administration in every part of the United States.

Sec. 2. That in every case wherein an oath has heretofore been administered by any officer mentioned in the preceding section, in any matter or proceeding, civil or criminal, provided for in said section, said oath shall be valid and have the same force and effect upon any civil rights or matters involved, where no adverse right has vested before the passage of this act, and in criminal matters as to all acts hereafter performed in violation of said oath which would constitute an offense if said oath were valid, as if administered after the passage and under the provisions of said act.

The substitute was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OPINIONS BY FEDERAL JUDGES ON QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill (H. R. 649) to deprive the judge in a court of the United States of the authority to give an opinion upon questions of fact. The committee recommend as a substitute for this bill the provisions of House bill 7305.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That no judge in a court of the United States, in delivering a charge to the jury in a civil or criminal action, shall give an opinion whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proven, such matter being the true office and province of the jury; but he shall state plainly and correctly the evidence given in the case, and shall declare and explain the law arising thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the proposed substitute. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That no judge in a court of the United States, in delivering a charge to the jury in a civil or criminal action, shall express any opinion upon the facts."

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there a Senate bill pending here in regard to this question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. No, sir; there is a Senate bill in regard to judges delivering their charges in writing.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Let the report in this case be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why should not the judges be required to deliver their opinions in writing?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will wait a moment we shall bring before the House a bill to that effect.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 649) to deprive the judge in a court of the United States of the authority to give an opinion upon questions of fact, beg leave to report:

In nearly all the States the rule prevails that the judge can not give to the jury any opinion upon the facts or on the weight of evidence. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided in several cases that the contrary rule prevails in the courts of the United States, and that the powers of these courts in this respect are not controlled by the statutes of the State forbidding judges to express any opinion upon the facts. (Nudd vs. Burrows, 91 U. S., 426; Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Co. vs. Putnam, 118 U. S., 545; St. Louis, etc., Railroad Co. vs. Vickers, 122 U. S., 360; United States vs. Reading Railroad, 123 U. S., 113; Williams vs. Conger, 125 U. S., 307.)

Your committee are of the opinion that the judges of the courts of the United States should not be permitted, in submitting a case to the jury, to express any opinion upon the facts, and therefore report the following substitute, with the recommendation that it do pass and that bill H. R. 649 do lie upon the table.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether any serious complaint has been made to the Committee on the Judiciary as to the manner of transacting business in the Federal courts under the existing law in this respect.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. No, sir; I do not know that there has been.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is there any necessity, then, for the passage of this bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I think there is.

Mr. HOPKINS. If this bill becomes a law, it will deprive a Federal judge of any power to instruct the jury to find a verdict, even if there is no evidence at all.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. No, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Not by any means.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why not?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is a question of law.

Mr. HOPKINS. It may not be.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It always is; it can not be anything else than a question of law. In such a case the charge of the judge is that under the state of facts as proven there is no law sustaining the action.

Mr. HOPKINS. But, if this bill becomes a law, it seems to me it will require the judge in every instance to send the jury out to find whether there is any evidence sustaining the action.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman is very much mistaken in regard to that matter.

Mr. COBB. If there is no evidence at all it is a question of law for the court.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. In reply to the question whether any serious complaint has been made on this subject, I will say that no such complaints have been made in form to the Judiciary Committee; but every member of that committee who has had experience before the courts has seen occasions where complaint ought to have been made. Under our general system in the States, the jury is the judge of the facts, the court the judge of the law, and the jury takes the law from the court. But in the Federal courts, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, the judges are allowed not only to state what the verdict should be under a given state of facts, but to say what the facts are, what the evidence is, to comment upon the evidence, to argue the case upon the facts, to become in effect attorneys, if they see fit. I think, for one, and the committee so thought, that this is a power which ought not to be exercised.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to state whether during the one hundred years that our judges have had this power there has been any serious complaint made or whether any judge has been charged with corruptly using this power.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is a question so broad that I shall have to allow the gentleman himself to answer it. I will say this: that serious complaint is continually made, but no complaint, so far as I know, of corruption on the part of the judge.

Mr. HOPKINS. But, Mr. Speaker, every lawyer in a Federal court who in a jury trial is defeated by reason of the ruling of the judge, thinks probably for the time being there is something wrong; but the experience of practitioners generally in our courts is that this power is exercised for the public good.

This bill is an innovation on the common law. This power has been exercised by the Federal judges since the adoption of the Constitution and the establishing of the courts.

It seems to me, unless some complaint is made and some facts are presented to this committee showing the necessity or expediency of such a measure, these gentlemen ought not to propose an innovation of this character on the Federal judiciary.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The Committee on the Judiciary reported favorably on this bill because it is here. If the House thinks otherwise, it is of course in the power of the House to defeat the bill.

The fact in regard to the matter is this: For most of the judges it has been understood heretofore that they were compelled on this question to adjust their practice to the practice of the States in which they hold their courts. It has not been until lately there was a different assumption, and when that assumption arose it met with complaint. In four or five cases, commencing with 91 United States Reports, the question came before the Supreme Court. It was there decided that the courts were not bound by the policy of the States in like cases, but they had the common-law power to direct the jury as to what the facts were, to direct the jury as to the meaning of the evidence, and to comment on it as they did in the days of Jeffreys for that matter. And it struck many of the courts, as it did most lawyers, as being an innovation, and one which ought to be corrected. It was an innovation. The judges did not understand before that they had the power to do it. Now complaints exist and come from every quarter. These innovations are growing, and this difficulty is becoming more and more burdensome. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] would not submit for a single moment to have his own judges have common-law authority. He would not allow that. He would have resisted it in his own case. We merely think the practice in the United States courts should conform to the principles and practice which the State courts generally have adopted.

Mr. LANSING. Is not this practically a statutory reversal of the traditions of the common-law courts?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They claim it in the eastern courts.

Mr. LANSING. They do.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Do you like it?

Mr. LANSING. Certainly, I like it. Let me ask the gentleman how a judge can charge a jury without referring to facts in some way. If this legislation be adopted you make exceptions which are carried up, and thereby make litigation interminable.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Of course there is no question the judge may refer to facts; he may claim the charge was so and so, but the safe practice is to have the court hold that it can not act as attorney for either party.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Under the State practice you have referred to, do not the judges do what you say, that is, advert to the facts? Do they not refer to the facts by stating what the facts are?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They may advert to the testimony.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Is it not a fact they do so advert to the facts under the State law?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They do not with us in Ohio.

Mr. CHIPMAN. They do with us.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They are not allowed to sum up the matter.

Mr. CHIPMAN. They do it under the State law (similar to the bill under consideration) with us. They do it everywhere, and I have known error to arise on it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They may.

Mr. LANSING. I believe the enactment of this law is in the interest of the lawyers. I believe if you go into court with this system, with the judge between a question he can speak on and one he can not, you will have appeals in every case coming before the court. If I were to characterize it, it is an act to increase litigation.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The law now is that where a judge attempts to instruct a jury on a question of fact it is error, and may be reversed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will state the time he needs, but I do not wish the whole hour to be taken up in this discussion.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not ordinarily speak for the mere purpose of speaking. I shall only want three or four minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes if he wants the time.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, in my own State we have no difficulty upon the question to which this bill is directed. One result of its passage, however, will be that the rule which applies to the instructions of the judges in my State will not be the rule in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Nor in the Federal courts.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Nor in the Federal courts of the United States.

Another inevitable result will be questions constantly arising by counsel as to whether the judge, in stating the facts of the case to the jury, has not indicated an opinion; and I take it, sir, that instead of decreasing litigation the inevitable effect of such a measure as this will be to inaugurate and increase it.

I can conceive of no reason—and I am speaking of my own State now and the trial of causes in our courts and the practice of the courts of that State—I can conceive of no reason for the passage of an act of Congress like that now proposed, except to emancipate the bar from the reasonable, necessary, and proper control of the judges over litigation in our courts. The reasonable, judicious, and intelligent charge before a court upon the facts is necessary to control and give direction to the action of juries. Why should a lawyer, a powerful advocate, a man who can play upon human passions, be permitted, as constantly is the case in our courts, to pour into the jury-box powerful, impressive, eloquent harangues in regard to the testimony, unless it is placed within the power of the judge, or even sometimes made his duty, to correct it by a lucid presentation of the facts? And that is what is embodied in the ordinary charge.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. But there is nothing in this act which would prevent the judge from doing that.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Speaking from experience in my own State and looking at the probable consequences to flow from this change, I am opposed to this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does not the argument of the gentleman simply mean that the judge may have the concluding speech, if he thinks proper, against the counsel on the other side? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. I stated in the outset of the discussion of this case that if he transgresses the legal boundaries and gives to the jury instructions upon the facts of the case he is liable to be, and can be, reversed in his rulings.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, it is the opinion of everybody who has given thought to the matter that so far as the power to judge of facts is concerned, upon the evidence before a court or jury, the judge is no more able to correctly determine than the jury. But every practitioner before the courts of the country knows that, whenever a judge undertakes to express an opinion upon facts, such expression of opinion is liable to have, and does have, an undue influence upon the jury. The object of this bill is to prevent that in future.

So far as the trouble suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is concerned, it is purely imaginary. No judge in a written charge ever states the facts of a case to the jury, but simply the issue as written down in the pleadings of the parties. He does not state the facts or anything relating to them; and what he does allege he takes from the pleadings of the parties themselves.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. Has not that been substantially the practice in our courts for thirty years?

Mr. HAYES. You mean in the Federal courts?

Mr. REED, of Iowa. In the State courts.

Mr. HAYES. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. And did you ever know an appeal taken on the ground that the judge had invaded the precincts of the jury; have you ever known a case to be reversed on that plea?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir; and so far as our State courts are concerned there has been no such evil, and there will be no necessity for the change in the law. But in other States there have been great complaints, and in our State also, as to the Federal courts.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the committee.

The substitute was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, Judge REED.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. I call up, by instruction of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill (H. R. 75) to fix the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the southern district of Alabama.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of Alabama shall be held annually on the fourth Monday in November and the first Monday in May, at the city of Mobile, in said district.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CASES BEFORE THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7044) to amend section 707 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 707 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding thereto, at the end thereof, the following proviso: "Provided, however, That where, in cases pending in the said Court of Claims in which the sum in controversy is less than $3,000, it shall appear from the affidavit of the plaintiff, or otherwise, that the decision of the court will affect a class of cases or furnish a precedent for the future action of any Executive Department of the Government in the adjustment of a class of cases, an appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, on behalf of the plaintiff, without regard to the amount involved, in the manner now allowed by law."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out, in lines 8 and 9, "from the affidavit of the plaintiff" and insert "to the satisfaction of the court by competent evidence."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF LAND IN BIBB COUNTY, GEORGIA.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by instruction of the Committee on Judiciary, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5971) to make valid a deed to a certain tract of land in Bibb County, Georgia, made and delivered by Brig. Gen. David Tilson, acting assistant commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau, to Samuel I. Gustin, his heirs and assigns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title conveyed by deed from David Tilson, brigadier-general of volunteers and acting assistant commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau, on the 27th day of April, 1865, to Samuel I. Gustin, of the county of Bibb, State of Georgia, to 4 acres 1 rood and 10 perches of land situated in said county and State, being a part of the 20-acre lot of No. 8 in the Macon Reserve, west of the Ocmulgee River, and further known as a part of that portion of said lot which H. I. Peters and Jacob Russell deeded to Samuel P. Moore in his capacity of surgeon-general of the Confederate States, is hereby confirmed to, and whatever right or interest which the United States may be supposed to have in said described tract of land is hereby granted and released to, the said Samuel I. Gustin, his heirs or assigns.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws militating against this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying this? If so, I ask that it be read.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I can make a brief statement which will show the facts.

This property was claimed by the Confederate States and was conveyed by the surgeon-general. At the close of the war it was confiscated and sold and the money was covered into the Treasury. General Tilson, then in command, made a deed of it, and the question arose as to his authority to make said deed. This is simply to validate the title made by him without any special statute.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced approval of acts of the following titles:

On the 27th instant:

An act (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.;

An act (H. R. 3592) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield; and An act (H. R. 5751) to increase the pension of Isaac Endaly.

On the 28th instant:

An act (H. R. 346) to extend "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

On the 29th instant:

An act (H. R. 6099) granting an increase of pension to Elmer A. Snow. JUDGES OF UNITED STATES COURTS TO REDUCE CHARGES TO WRITING.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. CASWELL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 530) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in certain cases and substitute thereto, both of which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill and then the substitute.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all States wherein by the laws thereof judges of courts of record are required to reduce charges and instructions to juries to writing judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall conform to such practice, and such written instructions shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, returned with their verdict, and retained with the files and be a part of the record in each case.

The substitute, the bill (H. R. 8240) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing when requested, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That judges of the United States circuit, district, and Territorial courts shall, when so requested, previous to the commencement of the argument before the jury, reduce their charge to the jury in writing; and such charge shall be filed with and become a part of the record in the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. I call for the reading of the report of the committee on that bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire it read in his time?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I desire it read for the information of the House, so that we may know what is being done.

Mr. DOCKERY. Take the floor and have it read.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will take the floor and have it read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield for that, but I do not think it will afford much information.

Mr. HOPKINS. I may want to take some time in the discussion of the bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing when requested, submit the following report:

The committee have carefully considered this bill and approve its objects and purposes. But they have prepared and herewith submit a substitute, and recommend its passage, and that the original bill lie upon the table.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Does the substitute provide that the Federal practice shall conform to the State practice?

Mr. CASWELL. It does not. Mr. Speaker, the substitute in that respect differs from the original bill. The committee thought that they would make it so that only when requested the judge should charge the jury in writing, but that the request should be made before the argument begins. In offering this substitute it was believed that in a great many cases of small account the request would not be made; but in important cases, involving land titles and many other important trials, it was thought that if either side should make a request that the charge should be made in writing, in order that there should be no question in settling the bill of exceptions, they should have the right, whether that conforms to the practice of the State courts or not.

They are, as a general rule, all over the country requiring in all the State courts that these charges shall be made in writing; and we simply permit it in Federal practice when one of the parties shall make a request before the argument begins that they shall be entitled to have the charge in writing.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to antagonize the Committee on the Judiciary on all proposed legislation here to-day by this committee, but it does seem to me that some of these bills that are being offered for consideration by the House are remarkable in character in the proposed changes in Federal practice.

Now, I think the experience of disinterested persons is that the practice of the Federal court for one hundred years is such that no serious trouble has come of judges having the power that they now exercise under existing law. For example—

Mr. CASWELL. If the gentleman wishes to make a detailed argument, I believe I shall have to ask him how much time he wants.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not intend to make a detailed argument. I just want to say a word or two.

Now, upon the question of judges commenting on the evidence in the charge to the jury. One of the gentlemen has said that the juror is as capable of passing upon the facts as the judge himself. I controvert that statement, and I controvert it by the experience of every man who has had any considerable practice in the trial of jury cases. They are selected from various vocations in life, with no experience in the examination of evidence to determine what is material and what is not in the written pleadings of the case. It often requires the skill and the ability of the learned judge who sits upon the bench to aid the jury in eliminating the chaff that has been dragged in during the progress of the trial in evidence from the real wheat or material point that is to be passed upon by them. Now, by the bill that has passed that is substantially taken from the judge.

Mr. CASWELL. I can not yield to the gentleman to discuss a bill that has passed.

Mr. HOPKINS. But I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, one minute, then. I want to say a word about the bill under consideration. The Judiciary Committee propose to require the judge to reduce his instructions to the jury to writing. Take the Federal judiciary at Chicago and New York City, or in any of those great commercial centers, and this imposes a burden upon those judges that ought not to be placed upon them. The amount of work that they do is simply tremendous in its character. Now, by the aid of short-hand reporters, that every lawyer has in his office, all parties engaged in litigation can have the opinion of the judge taken in short-hand, and no trouble whatever will arise in settling a bill of exceptions; but if the judge is compelled on the request of a lawyer to write out his opinion before it is delivered to the jury it frequently will delay the trial of the case and will impose an extra amount of work upon him that is not only unnecessary, but uncalled for in the interest of justice.

Now, it seems to me that that requirement ought not to be made, especially in these days when every lawyer can have a short-hand reporter at his command, so that the opinion of the judge can be taken down exactly as it is delivered.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman [Mr. CASWELL] whether this bill requires the Federal judges to give their instructions to the jury in writing.

Mr. CASWELL. It does, when the request is made before the argument begins.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does it make that requirement without providing for stenographers or reporters?

Mr. CASWELL. It makes no reference to reporters.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I think that requirement would impose an excessive tax upon the judges.

A MEMBER. The State judges do it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes; but they have reporters.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose a cranky lawyer gets into court; he can compel the judge, in any trivial case, to reduce his opinion to writing.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman in charge of this bill permit me a suggestion? It seems to me that when this bill was before the House on a former occasion there was a proposition that the instructions given to the jury might be taken down by short-hand reporters, and I think there was at that time some suggestion of a compromise or an amendment which would provide for that method of procedure.

Mr. CASWELL. That may be; but there is no such bill pending before the House now.

Mr. MORROW. Well, the gentleman must see that in courts where the business is pressing this requirement would very materially retard the business of the court.

Mr. CASWELL. I can see that where there are short-hand reporters employed it will greatly facilitate the business; but the Federal courts do not, as a rule, have short-hand reporters attached to them.

Mr. MORROW. They always have them in the United States courts in California.

Mr. CASWELL. Even where a short-hand reporter was employed the proceedings would have to be suspended until he could have time to write out his notes in long-hand, so that they could be understood.

Mr. MORROW. The short-hand reporter takes down the proceedings, the charge of the court, and the exceptions of the attorneys as the case proceeds, and there is no difficulty whatever in getting a statement on a motion for a new trial or a bill of exceptions.

Mr. CASWELL. There is no objection to the judge employing the services of a short-hand reporter to give him his charge if he chooses to do so.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. But that would require the judge to employ a short-hand reporter.

Mr. CASWELL. Not necessarily. If, as the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] states, there is a reporter attached to the court, he can do this work.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Why, most of the judges are starving now on their petty salaries.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The remark of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] was made in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] that there are reporters connected with the courts in California.

Mr. CASWELL. I know there are such reporters in many of the State courts, and perhaps in a few of the Federal courts in some of the States. I can conceive how the employment of short-hand reporters might facilitate the business in a great many cases, but in the main the committee thought it best to have this work done by the judges.

Mr. MORROW. There is no objection to securing greater accuracy in these proceedings, but you ought to provide the means.

Mr. OATES. Gentlemen seem to overlook the fact that this bill does not require the judge to write out his charge in every case, but only in cases where one of the parties requests it.

Mr. MORROW. And there will always be one party who will make that request.

Mr. OATES. Oh, no; gentlemen who have practiced in those courts know that there will not be one case in fifty where such a request will be made. Lawyers are not so unreasonable. They will not make such a demand unless where they suspect the judge is prejudiced against their side of the case, and then they ought to have the right to have his instructions put in writing.

The question was taken on agreeing to the substitute; and there were—ayes 123, noes 19.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the question of a quorum.

Mr. HOPKINS. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is withdrawn and the substitute is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7619) making appropriations for the support of the Army.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before that question is put, Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of an important resolution which I send to the desk.

The title of the resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 125) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to remove the naval magazine from Ellis Island, in New York Harbor, and to purchase a site and erect a naval magazine at some other point, and for other purposes.

Mr. COVERT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, I understood it was the unanimous desire of the gentleman's committee to have this resolution passed.

Mr. COVERT. No, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the discriminating duty now imposed upon foreign works of art, and recommend that action thereon, looking to the removal of the discrimination, be taken by Congress during its present session, if practicable.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 31, 1890.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2716) to provide for the completion of the improvement of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas;

A bill (S. 1571) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak.;

A bill (S. 1631) making appropriations for improving the St. Mary's River and for improving the Hay Lake Channel;

A bill (S. 1024) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to finally determine the claims of John J. Schillinger and his assignees for the use of the Schillinger patent in the Capitol grounds;

A bill (S. 321) providing for the purchase of the Capron collection of Japanese works of art; and

A bill (S. 316) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougall, deceased.

It also announced disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VEST.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, asked a committee of conference thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MORRILL, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. PASCO.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 954) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa, asked a conference thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VEST.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COVERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The joint resolution just read at the Clerk's desk, with reference to the occupancy of Ellis Island as a site for an immigrant bureau, involves two distinct propositions: one the removal of the explosives from the island and the other an amendment of the Senate carrying an appropriation of $75,000 for fitting up the island as the site for an immigrant bureau. I wish to know whether that resolution can be divided so that the proposition to remove the explosives can be passed upon at this time. I have no objection to that branch of the resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The resolution is an entirety.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows no way in which the resolution could be divided, except by unanimous consent, or hardly then.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

Mr. COVERT. The other branch of the proposition I object to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. [The question was put.] The ayes seem to have it.

UNITED STATES JUDGES TO REDUCE THEIR CHARGES TO WRITING.

Mr. CASWELL. I call for a division. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will withhold his motion for a few minutes until we can dispose of the bill which was pending from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUTCHEON. At the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], I will withdraw my motion for a few moments, with leave of the House, in order that the pending bill may be finished.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Gentlemen have withdrawn their objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The substitute having been agreed to, the question is now upon ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION OF NAVAL RECRUITS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I desire to call up House bill No. 8104, with the understanding—

Mr. CUTCHEON. How much time will it occupy?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I will finish my statement in a moment. With the understanding that the committee shall have the call to-morrow—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the bill to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8104) to amend section 2166, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey (before the reading of the bill was concluded). To save time, I will ask that the bill, with the substitute and the report, be printed in the RECORD, so that they will come up in the morning; and then I understand the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CUTCHEON) desires to renew his motion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the further reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the bill with the amendment and report will be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting therein immediately after the word "armies" the word "Navy," so that the section will read:

"Sec. 2166. Any alien of the age of twenty-one years and upward who has enlisted, or may enlist, in the armies or Navy of the United States, either the regular or the volunteer forces, and has been, or may be hereafter, honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and he shall not be required to prove more than one year's residence within the United States previous to his application to become such citizen; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to such proof of residence and good moral character, as now provided by law, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States."

The amendment of the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the provisions and benefits of section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and they are hereby, extended to those who enlisted in the Navy of the United States prior to the 1st day of May, 1865, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom.

The report (by Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8104) to amend section 2166, Revised Statutes of the United States, submit the following report:

Section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was originally passed in 1862 (see act of July 17, 1862, chapter 200, section 12, page 597). A copy of that act as embodied in the Revised Statutes is hereto appended.

The object of that act, passed in the earlier years of the late civil war, was undoubtedly to confer upon those who in that war enlisted in the Union forces and were honorably discharged therefrom the privilege of becoming more readily naturalized citizens of the country whose Government they had given their services to uphold and offered their lives to defend.

It has recently been held by the judges of some of the State courts that the terms of the act do not include those who served in the Navy. To remedy this technical defect, and to give to those who during the late war served in the Navy of the United States the benefit of this act, the committee recommend that the accompanying amendment be adopted, and that when so amended the bill do pass.

APPENDIX.

"Sec. 2166. Any alien of the age of twenty-one years and upwards who has enlisted, or may enlist in the armies of the United States, either the regular or the volunteer forces, and has been, or may be hereafter, honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and he shall not be required to prove more than one year's residence within the United States previous to his application to become such citizen; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to such proof of residence and good moral character, as now provided by law, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States."

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7619) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon an amendment offered on Saturday last by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the bottom of page 17 the following: "For rifle-range at Fort Sheridan, $10,000."

Mr. ADAMS. In the Book of Estimates there is an item of $10,000 for rifle-ranges generally. That item has been incorporated in the bill. After that Book of Estimates was prepared supplementary estimates were forwarded by the Secretary of War, embracing an estimate of $10,000 for the new rifle-range at Fort Sheridan. This is separate and distinct from the general appropriation. I trust that the Committee on Military Affairs will have no serious objection to incorporating in the bill this amendment, which is recommended by the Department.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], that this item was embraced in the recommendation sent to the committee by the Secretary of War. It will be found in Appendix A attached to the report of the committee, with this note:

NOTE.—This rifle-range will probably be the most important one in the Army and should be completely equipped in every respect. It must serve not only for the practice of a considerable garrison, but also for department, division, and army competitions. It is moreover probable that increased demands will be made upon it by the impossibility of securing suitable ranges at other posts.

The estimate is as follows:

Fort Sheridan rifle-range: For the construction of a range house, visitors' stand, and other buildings necessary to properly equip the rifle-range at Fort Sheridan, Ill., $10,000.

The committee did not incorporate this recommendation in the bill because there were so many urgent matters, and as we did not desire to swell the bill unduly we thought this item could probably wait until the next session of Congress. I know of no strenuous objection to the incorporation of the item, except that the committee thought it might wait until the next session.

Mr. ADAMS. On that point the gentleman will allow me to say it is especially important that this appropriation should be made now because other work is going forward now at Fort Sheridan which would render this money much more available at present than next year. The expenditure would go further. Excavation for building purposes is now going on, and the dike against which the shooting is to be had can be made out of the earth now being excavated. There is economy in making the appropriations this year rather than next.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is an important military post adjacent to Detroit. I have no authority from the committee to accept the amendment. I know of no positive opposition to it. As Chicago is to have the world's fair in a couple of years perhaps it would be well to have this rifle range.

Mr. HOPKINS. I hope there will be no objections to this item. As stated, the work going on there now makes it economy to allow this in the present bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I submit to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COVERT. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, at the end of line 7, insert the following:

"Provided, That in the conduct of ordnance, rifle, or target practice at the post or depot at Willet's Point, New York, such practice shall be so conducted as not to jeopardize or in any way injuriously affect the safety of persons or property lawfully in or upon Little Neck Bay or upon the shores of or lands adjacent to said bay. And that if said practice be continued at said post it be conducted under such regulations or orders of the Secretary of War as shall prevent injury or jeopardy to such persons and property."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, Willet's Point, occupied as an army post, is located on the shore of Little Neck Bay and is distant only some dozen miles from New York City. The bay is an important and much-used body of water. Its shores are dotted with beautiful suburban homes, and it is in every way one of the most attractive localities within equal distance of the great metropolis. At the fort established here rifle practice under governmental regulations is conducted generally from early in April to late in October every year. This practice continues every week-day from about 7 in the morning to 4 in the afternoon, the range covering Little Neck Bay.

Raw recruits are almost constantly drilled here in this practice, and the rifle-balls in many instances go very far from the breastworks, making it extremely hazardous for any one to venture out upon the bay while the firing is going on. So dangerous has the practice grown that the bay is rendered useless to very great extent for boating and bathing purposes. The natural advantages which induced many well known gentlemen of taste and means to establish homes at this point and to expend thousands of dollars in beautifying them, have been to great extent offset by this practical disbarment of the benefit and enjoyment of the bay.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. COVERT. With great pleasure.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Have any fatal casualties occurred at this point?

Mr. COVERT. Fortunately not as yet, I am most glad to say. While no fatal accidents have thus far happened, it is by no means an unusual occurrence to have balls from the fort whistle by in the near neighborhood of those venturesome enough to be upon the water during the hours of practice. An instance has been brought to my attention which illustrates the dangers of the situation. Not long ago one of the residents of Bayside was sailing in his pleasure-craft, when a ball from the fort came tearing through the sail of his boat. It occurs to me that this, in time of peace, is carrying the art of war to an extreme and reprehensibly dangerous limit.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly, sir.

Mr. LANHAM. Have any formal complaints been made as to the dangerous character of the practice?

Mr. COVERT. I hold in my hand duplicates of petitions just filed with the Secretary of War, numerous signed by influential gentlemen resident in the vicinity, asking that the practice be stopped. The bay is the natural home of the saddle rock oyster and little-neck clam industry, and one of these petitions, bearing over a hundred signatures, is from baymen and those connected with the oyster and fishing industries at this point. The petition sets forth the serious interference occasioned to their work by this system of practice at the fort, and asks for its suppression. The constant and dangerous firing practically prevents this large body of workers from following their calling during the most of the working hours of every day for more than half of every year.

I think that this practice at the Willet's Point post should be entirely stopped. The State of New York maintains a complete and perfect range at Creedmoor, only a few miles distant, at which the Federal soldiers frequently practice. Such arrangements should, in my judgment, be made as would confine practice, so far as Willet's Point soldiers are concerned, to this safe and secure range.

I most sincerely trust and can not but believe that the War Department will take favorable action on the petitions filed with it. In the event of non-action in this regard, the proposed amendment, which, I submit, is eminently conservative, should be operative. It simply provides that, if the practice can be continued, such safeguards shall be established by departmental regulations as shall insure the safety of persons and property lawfully upon the bay or in its immediate vicinity.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I insist on the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COVERT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly upon the point of order.

It occurs to me that this comes clearly and plainly within the rule which was established by the Chair on Saturday, when a kindred provision was under discussion. There is no legislation existing with reference to rifle practice. At Fort Willet there is absolutely no statutory provision prescribing that that practice shall be had at that point. There is no statutory law existing, so far as I am advised, as to the measure, which is entirely under the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of War. It seems to me, therefore, that this proposition is entirely germane to the bill and is within the scope and limit of the rule established by the Chair on Saturday. That being the case, believing such to be the fact, I submit that the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, there is scarcely a military post in the United States which has not this rifle-range and rifle-practice, and yet no such provision has been incorporated anywhere in any appropriation bill since the foundation of the Government. It seems to me that it is legislation clearly and openly upon an appropriation bill and is therefore out of order, and unless some other gentleman desires to debate the question further I submit the point to the ruling of the Chair and ask a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. COVERT. May I ask the Chair how this differs in principle from the amendment which was offered on Saturday last and which was held to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could hardly stop to give reasons as between the ruling to-day and that of last Saturday on an entirely different proposition. The Chair holds only that this is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill now under consideration, and is not in order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies not exceeding in value the sum of $200.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso just read, lines 12, 13, 14, and 15. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am sure the gentleman from Michigan will find, if he has the law of last year before him, that I am not mistaken, but that the statement I have made is absolutely correct.

A provision exactly similar to this was contained in the last year's appropriation bill, and was stricken out on the point of order. It is a modification of the Revised Statutes or section which has just been named, and which requires all purchases to be made after due advertisement and proposal, except in cases of emergency, where immediate delivery was required. This proviso undertakes to amend that section of the Revised Statutes, and, as I have said, was ruled out last year on the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is correct in regard to that. It was reported in the last year's bill, with the reasons for it. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and is also desired by the Chief of Ordnance. It is believed to be economical and good legislation. I think the gentleman, however, from Georgia is correct in his statement that a similar provision was stricken out of last year's bill on the point of order. I hope, however, that the point of order here will be withdrawn, because in making small purchases they can be made more economically in open market than by advertisement.

Mr. SAYERS. I understood the gentleman from Michigan in charge of this bill to state on last Saturday that this very same provision was in the law of last year.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was my impression at that time, but I think I was guided rather by the report of last year than by an examination of the statutes. But I now recall that the same point of order was made, and on an examination of the statute, which is before me, I find that it is not in the last year's act. Therefore, if the gentleman insists upon the point of order I suppose it is good. I hope, however, that it will not be insisted upon, because this proposition is inserted here in the interest of economy.

Mr. CLEMENTS. But this is an exceedingly sweeping proposition, and it will not only affect purchases under the War Department, but in all the Departments, and will enable the officers of the Government to make these purchases in small amount and thereby allow collusion between the contractors and the Government. Therefore I feel compelled to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For steel field-guns of 3.20 inches caliber, $25,000.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order on the clause just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish the gentleman from Michigan would withhold the point of order until the remainder of this clause of the bill is read.

Mr. BREWER. I will do that with the understanding that I shall be permitted to embrace them all in one point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There are several other provisions immediately following to which the same point of order would apply.

Mr. BREWER. Very well; let them all be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order of the gentleman to be reserved on that portion of the bill just read, embracing lines 19 and 20 and the two following clauses.

Mr. BREWER. That point of order is reserved for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For metallic carriages for field-gun batteries, $143,135.
For steel shell or shrapnel for field-guns, $12,000.

In all, $180,135.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman makes his point of order, if he will permit me, I wish to submit a slight verbal amendment, a single word, to perfect the language of the bill which has just been read.

Mr. BREWER. Very well.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In line 19, on page 22, after the word "twenty," I move to strike out the word "one;" so that it will read "twenty-hundredths," in place of "twenty-one-hundredths," as it may be ambiguous in its present form.

Mr. BREWER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, my point of order against the several items which have just been read goes to the question of jurisdiction. We find in the Book of Estimates which is sent to the House of Representatives, embodying the needs of the various Departments for each fiscal year, that these three items just read are sent to the House under the head of "Fortifications and coast defenses." We find it in the Book of Estimates under that heading. It never has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in any sense of the word. This is a question of jurisdiction as between two committees upon this point, and this question has been raised on several different occasions.

During the first session of the Fiftieth Congress when the general appropriation bill for the Army was under consideration it was presented and very thoroughly discussed and decided, so far as the various points of order then under discussion were concerned, in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and not in favor of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LANHAM. Were these three items, if the gentleman will permit me, involved in that discussion?

Mr. BREWER. Some of them were involved. Items precisely like these now under consideration were then under discussion. So far as the first item is concerned—

For steel for field-guns of 3.20 inches caliber, $25,000—

the steel for making those guns was then under consideration and discussion. The point of order was made upon that by the gentleman who is now the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CUTCHEON], and I call the attention of the House to the ruling then made after the discussion which took place, and which is found in the RECORD of the session of January 19, 1889, on pages 1007 and 1008.

Now, this is the question which was involved:

For the purchase of steel forgings for field and siege cannon, as follows:

For steel forging for not less than twenty-four 3.6-inch field-guns, $24,000.

This was the steel for the construction of the guns in question. Upon that occasion the following discussion took place:

Mr. CUTCHEON. Upon that part of the paragraph in the following words—

"For steel forgings for not less than twenty-four 3.6-inch field-guns, $24,000"—

I make the point of order, the same point that was made by the gentleman from Illinois on the preceding paragraph; but I shall not take any time to discuss it, only to say that this relates expressly to field-guns for field batteries of the Army.

Mr. SAYERS. Under the head of "Armament for fortifications," page 170 of the Book of Estimates, the Chair will find that clause is embraced providing for steel forging for the manufacture of certain small guns. It belongs to the armament of fortifications. I will send the estimates to the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair will observe that the caption of these estimates is entitled "Fortifications and other works of defense," and this is only one of the minor items under that caption.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to be heard further just one moment, and I will not take more than a minute. I simply want to call the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from Texas also to the estimates under the head of "Armament of fortifications," to which he refers. We have first for finishing and assembling guns under section 4 of the act heretofore passed providing for such purchase, and next is the manufacture of approved field and siege guns and their carriages; in other words, siege guns are guns for fortifications, while field guns are guns for use in the Army in the field; and there is no possibility of mistaking that, and they are not separated in the estimates. But I make the point against that paragraph which relates to the manufacture of field guns only at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say that an examination of the law passed at the last session of Congress will show that the same character of armament was provided for in that bill. Hence the precedent has been set and jurisdiction is established. I have marked the paragraphs of the bill and of the estimates, which I send to the Chair, and think there can be no controversy on that point. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine them.

Mr. RANDALL. I think gentlemen will admit that, as this is the language of the law, it establishes the jurisdiction, because, as will be seen, the language there refers to field guns of exactly the same character.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair). The Chair has examined the authorities cited and overrules the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the test of experimental guns procured under the act of September 22, 1888, namely, for one 10-inch wire-wound gun, steel, $28,000; for one 12-inch gun, steel-hooped, $39,500; for procuring one 10-inch disappearing gun carriage, $13,500; for gun-platforms at proving-ground, $6,500; for projectiles for field, siege, and seacoast guns for issue to the service, $28,500; for siege-gun powder for issue to the service, $7,000; for fuses and implements for issue to the service, $2,000; in all, $125,000."

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon so much of the paragraph just read as embraces projectiles for field guns. I find by a reference to the report of the committee, on page 3, that under the head of "Projectiles" the following provision is made:

"One thousand steel shrapnel for field guns."

"Four thousand eight hundred projectiles, cast-iron, for field guns."

Now, sir, if it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations to provide shrapnel for field guns, it is also clearly proper and in order for them to undertake to furnish cartridges for the muskets of the infantry, and therefore they had better take control and jurisdiction of the whole matter. In the army bill we have $400,000 provided for the manufacture of small-arms, but if this Committee on Appropriations are going to assume the whole thing, why, we had just as well drop that too.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the Committee on Appropriations is assuming nothing at all. We have only been asserting our rights and doing what we have always done under the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When it comes to providing shrapnel for field guns, why then you might just as well take the whole Army under your wing at once.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will not the gentleman from Michigan allow us to go on and get this little miserable amount for our seacoast defenses, and not seek to scrap even that amount by rescuing the jurisdiction of his committee, scrap by scrap, in this manner?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not mean to sit here in silence and see the jurisdiction of the committee of which I am a humble member seized and trampled upon without protest.

Mr. SPINOLA. It applies to gunpowder for the siege guns also.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the ruling upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no ruling.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before the Chair rules I find away down in the bill—

Mr. RANDALL. Wait till we get there.

Mr. SPINOLA. Powder for siege guns. Now, whether the Committee on Appropriations have the right to appropriate for the powder or not I do not know. Mr. RANDALL. We certainly have jurisdiction to provide for the testing of guns, and we can not test them without powder and projectiles.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not want us to lose our powder. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that this question of jurisdiction ought to be settled. That was not the first occasion that points of order had been raised upon these items or similar items to the ones in question. They have always been decided in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer very briefly to former legislation upon the subject of the items involved here, and to point out more clearly the reason why the point of order now raised should be sustained.

By reference to the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1891, page 166, it will be observed that the War Department submits estimates for these objects under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense."

The estimates for the military establishment, with the consideration of which the Committee on Military Affairs is charged under a rule of the House and the reference of the President's message, pages 87 to 101, contain nothing for field guns or ammunition for the same.

There is no rule of the House or statute which defines what either one of the regular appropriation bills shall carry. Their subject-matter, if fixed by anything, is regulated only by practice. In this connection a careful examination of the Army appropriation acts for the past twenty years shows that during all that period no specific appropriation was made in any of them for field guns or for ammunition for the same.

At the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, in the Army appropriation bill for 1885, as reported from the Committee on Appropriations and passed by the House, an appropriation of $15,000 was proposed for field guns and metal carriages, but the Senate, by amendment, struck it from the bill, and the House agreed to their action, presumably because the item was regarded as out of place on a bill making appropriations simply for the support of the Army.

An examination of the fortifications appropriation acts from 1870 to 1886 discloses that appropriations were made from year to year for purchase of machine guns, for howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, and ammunition.

In the fortification act passed during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress appropriations were made for steel forgings for field and siege cannon and for ammunition for the same.

The first specific appropriation for steel rifled field guns was made in the fortifications appropriation act passed at the first session of the last Congress. Twenty-five such field guns were in process of manufacture at the Watervliet arsenal prior to the passage of the above-mentioned act, but the expense of their construction was being defrayed from proceeds of sales of obsolete and unserviceable ordnance material, authorized by the act of 1876. (Supplement Revised Statutes, page 159.)

The division of appropriations for the support of the Government into different bills and the nomenclature of such bills were never recognized by any rule or action of the House until the adoption of the rules at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, when the jurisdiction of appropriations was divided between several committees. At that time, and by the rules, the several appropriation bills as they existed in the preceding Congress were recognized by their titles.

During the first forty years of our history the general appropriations for the support of the Government were made in one bill. As the country grew and the objects of public expenditure increased in number and amount, the committee having control of all the appropriations from year to year segregated them into different bills for convenience of consideration in committee and by the House. The fortifications bill was one of the first distinctive bills thus created.

In making this division of the whole work of appropriations into separate and distinct bills the rules governing the committee at the time are quite apparent now by an examination of the several appropriation laws and the annual estimates for a series of years.

In the case of the Army bill it is manifest that the committee, following the lines laid down in the annual estimates and the logic of what seemed to be the natural elements of such a distinctive bill, confined it almost exclusively to appropriations for the pay, subsistence, clothing, quartermaster supplies, and transportation of the Army, and for its ordnance supplies in the nature of ammunition and small-arms. Even permanent structures at, and enlargement of, military posts, except in rare instances, have been treated as out of place on the Army bills, and have been almost uniformly provided for in the sundry civil bill on the well accepted theory that they belonged to the class of appropriations known as "public works." On the other hand, the money necessary for the repair of buildings at established military posts and for temporary buildings at frontier posts has been appropriated in the Army bills, as such expenditures are naturally treated as in the line of current and necessary annual expenses of the Army.

Now, as I stated, Mr. Chairman, this question has been many times before this House, and in no single instance has jurisdiction been conferred on the Committee on Military Affairs, but in every case it has been conferred on the Committee on Appropriations. Under instructions of the House the Committee on Appropriations has placed the items in question in the fortifications appropriation bill, which I hope will be taken up as soon as this is disposed of. It does seem to me that it is useless for the Committee on Military Affairs to take the time and attention of this committee to have a question which has been adjudicated so many times again adjudicated and decided again to-day.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the question presented here is a very simple one: the question of jurisdiction between two committees of the House. That jurisdiction must be determined by the rules of the House, and I think by the rules of the House alone; because I think that the practice heretofore throws very little light upon this question, as this is the first time we have an appropriation for this class of light field batteries. The third subdivision of Rule XI of the rules of the House, for apportioning the subjects to the several committees, is as follows:

3. to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. Now read in that connection to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Just a moment. The Committee on Appropriations, if it gains jurisdiction at all, does so under the words "appropriation of the revenue * * * for fortifications and coast defenses."

Now we will turn to subdivision 12 of the same rule. Subjects relating—

12. to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a well recognized principle of legal interpretation that where a general jurisdiction is conferred upon one court or body, and a less jurisdiction of the same general nature is carved out of the larger and more general jurisdiction, the words constituting the lesser jurisdiction must be strictly construed. Under subdivision 12 of Rule XI, subjects relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including appropriations, go to the Committee on Military Affairs, subject, however, to this clause in paragraph 3, of appropriations "for fortifications and coast defense." In other words, the Military Committee takes general jurisdiction of all matters relating to the military establishment and the public defense. Now, out of that large and general jurisdiction a lesser jurisdiction is carved for the Committee on Appropriations, expressed in the words, "for fortifications and coast defenses."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question, the single question, the only question, is this: Does this appropriation for light steel batteries of 3.2 inch caliber come under the words "fortifications and coast defenses?"

As bearing upon that, I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk a communication from the major-general commanding the Army, who is at the same time the chairman of the board of ordnance and fortifications. The communication was read, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1890.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of this date I have the honor to say that the "field guns of 3.20 inch caliber," "metallic carriages for field-gun batteries," and "shell and shrapnel for field guns" are intended for the service of light batteries, of which there are two in each regiment of artillery, which serve with the infantry and cavalry in the field, but not in the fortifications or coast defenses.

It would therefore seem clear that everything relating to these field-gun batteries belongs to the "military establishment and the public defense" in general, rather than to "fortifications and coast defenses." These last belong, not to the now existing military establishment, but to the new fortifications and armament of the seacoasts, which are proposed, and which involve new methods, new materials, and large expenditures of a nature not heretofore for many years included in the appropriations for the military establishment, and hence requiring special care and supervision, both in the appropriations and in the expenditure thereof, while the former, namely, the field-gun batteries, are part of the well tried and fully established equipment of the Army, required for its current service, and not involving any question as to cost, of efficiency, or of necessity to the military service.

Very respectfully,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General Commanding.

Hon. B. M. CUTCHEON,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Chairman, here we have the opinion of the major-general commanding the military establishment, who, as I have said, is also at the same time the chairman of the board of ordnance and Fortifications, which has charge of all matters pertaining to seacoast defense, and his opinion clearly and unqualifiedly is that these light steel batteries pertain rather to the permanent military establishment—that is, to the troops in the field—than to fortifications and coast defenses. Or, to quote his own words:

It would therefore seem clear that everything relating to these field-gun batteries belongs to the "military establishment and the public defense" in general, rather than to "fortifications and coast defenses."

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it does not require the opinion of the general commanding the Army to determine this question. What are the light batteries? Are the light batteries ever used in coast defenses or in the permanent fortifications? The light batteries never form any part of the coast defenses or of the permanent fortifications. As Chief of Ordnance Benét said to the chairman of the committee recently, "It might as well be contended that the armament of the infantry belongs to the seacoast defenses and permanent fortifications, because we always man the parapets with the infantry, but we never use light steel batteries in permanent fortifications." Of course, when the troops are engaged in hostilities in the field, light batteries are used in temporary field-works, but never in permanent fortifications. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if we go back to the rule, this appropriation is pertinent to the military establishment, and not to coast defenses or fortifications. My colleague from Michigan [Mr. BREWER]—and he and I will have no difference except upon this matter of jurisdiction—attempts to draw an argument from what took place upon the point of order raised upon the fortification bill in the last Congress. That appropriation related to the steel that was to be worked up in the Army gun factory. Upon that I made the point of order, and it appeared to be the opinion of the House that that factory, being designed chiefly for the fabrication and assembling of the new high-power ordnance for coast defenses, the appropriation should properly go to the committee which had charge of coast defenses.

Mr. BREWER. If my colleague will permit me, is it not a fact that these guns are manufactured or assembled at the Watervliet arsenal?

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is true. If this appropriation is made—and this is the first appropriation that has ever been made for 3.2-inch breech-loading, steel guns—if this appropriation is made, the guns will be fabricated at the Watervliet arsenal under this appropriation. The carriages have been made at the Springfield arsenal, and the shrapnel shell by contractors under private contract. But no argument can be drawn from that. The simple question is, ought this appropriation for light batteries in the field to be in the bill for the support of the military establishment, of which they are to form a part, or should it be in that special bill which is designed to carry the appropriations for the heavy coast defenses and their armament?

It seems to me that the case is so plain, so axiomatic, that no further argument can be required. It makes no difference practically from which committee this appropriation comes. The same appropriation, I believe, without the change of a word or a figure, is in the other appropriation bill. There is a well known principle of equity jurisprudence that where two tribunals may have concurrent jurisdiction of the same subject-matter the one getting the jurisdiction first will hold it; and it may well be that, even if it should be the opinion of the Chair that if the other bill had come in here first containing this appropriation it might properly be retained in that bill, nevertheless it is also properly in this bill, and this is the bill which is first presented for the consideration of the House. So, Mr. Chairman, we say again that under the rules giving to the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction of the military establishment and its armament, this appropriation belongs to that committee, and no argument can be drawn from the practice which has prevailed heretofore, because heretofore we have never made an appropriation for this particular variety of field gun.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if any other gentleman desires to add to what I have said, I will give way for that purpose. I think, however, that I have covered the whole ground, and I am willing to submit the question for the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word upon this, and I will be exceedingly brief. Under clause 3 of Rule XI, certain matters contained in the President's message were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and by reference to the Book of Estimates it will be found that these precise estimates were referred specifically to that committee.

That consideration of itself, it seems to me, ought to determine the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and the non-jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Again, during the last Congress this precise question in principle came before the Committee of the Whole time and time again; and after full discussion on each occasion the point of order was ruled in favor of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. My friend will pardon me; not this precise question, because we did not have these field batteries before us.

Mr. CANNON. I say a question precisely the same in principle. Now, the gentleman has well said that the Army bill which we are now considering carries these items to which we object, and he has well said that the fortification bill now upon the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Appropriations, carries among others these same items. So that it is a mere question of technical jurisdiction, and it is well enough to keep the jurisdiction right.

Again, it is good policy to let the jurisdiction touching these matters remain as it always has been, so that any one following the legislation can by an examination of the fortification bill exhaust the whole question of appropriations for guns for fortifications or field-guns.

The Chair will see at once the propriety of so holding when he examines the Book of Estimates and the two bills, the fortification bill and the Army bill. I now read from the fortification bill:

Army gun factory: For machinery and plant for the manufacture of steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, $5,000.

That is in the fortification bill, but not in the Army bill.

For machinery to complete the full capacity of present gun factory building at Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., $165,000.

Here is an appropriation for machinery to make these very guns that the gentleman seeks to include in the Army bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is no question upon the gun factory.

Mr. CANNON. So, taking the fortification bill, it carries an appropriation for the steel out of which these field guns are to be made.

Now, it does appear to me that as the fortification bill has always carried these items that enter into the manufacture of these guns, as the jurisdiction has always been with the Committee on Appropriations, and as the fortification bill now carries these items, it is worse than folly to put in the Army bill for the first time the appropriation for field guns, for steel for field guns, for steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, for enlargement of the building for field guns, and many other items. In the interest of sound legislation, one bill or the other should exhaust this whole subject; and the unvarying practice has been all along that the fortification bill should carry this whole subject. I trust, therefore, that the point of order will be sustained, and that the fortification bill will carry this whole subject now.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why did you not carry that principle further, and include in the fortification bill the whole subject of ordnance: the Springfield Armory, for instance, with its $400,000 for small arms?

Mr. CANNON. The fortification bill never has carried the appropriation for small arms; and that is not the question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But all these carriages are manufactured at the Springfield arsenal.

Mr. CANNON. We do not claim that the fortification bill should now carry those; we only ask that it carry, under the rules of the House, what it has always carried and what it is proper it should carry. We claim that not only the rules and the unbroken practice support this position, but sound legislation suggests that one bill should exhaust this whole subject.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman will allow me to say that the metallic carriages for field-gun batteries, for which this bill carries an appropriation of $143,135, are manufactured at the Springfield arsenal, the same as the small arms for the infantry are. They do not come under the gun factory at all.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to see gentlemen who seek to sustain this point of order insisting that no effort in the line of improvement should be made in the system of legislation adopted in this House. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], in giving a very interesting history of the various plans adopted by Congress since the organization of our Government, stated that for the first forty years there was but one general appropriation bill. The wisdom of our legislators recognized in the course of time the importance of segregating or dividing the appropriations for the various departments of the Government; and finally, in the Forty-ninth Congress, a great and well directed stride was made by the rule which distributed the appropriation bills among those committees that were supposed to take the most interest in the subjects to which the appropriations referred.

Now, the only question for the House to decide to-day, without reference to what has been decided before, is whether, under a rule which provides for appropriations for fortifications and coast defenses, there should be included appropriations for field guns of small caliber, a kind of gun which, under ordinary circumstances, does not form a part of the armament of coast defenses or fortifications.

Mr. SAYERS. Will not the gentleman admit that heretofore this class of armament has been provided for by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I admit that has been the case, very improperly; and I say that the House of Representatives, seeking to place the various appropriations with those committees that are supposed from their jurisdiction to take most interest in the subjects, and because of the character of the investigations required of them to know most about them, seeks now to place the appropriations for field guns with the committee whose special—

Mr. SAYERS. You claim, then, that the Committee on Military Affairs knows more about these things than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Knows more about them, because its duties require its members to give more investigation to the subject of field guns than a committee whose investigation is confined to fortifications and coast defense.

Mr. COGSWELL. How do you account for the War Department placing these matters under the item of "fortifications and coast armament?"

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Simply because a clerk followed the erroneous proceedings of his predecessors.

Mr. COGSWELL. Does the gentleman undertake to say that the armament of a fort is complete without field guns?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I say that field guns of 3½ inch caliber are never used as a part of the armament of fortifications for coast defense, but, when armies are brought to bear upon such fortifications and the opposing army is called to their defense, light batteries composed of guns of this character are used in conjunction with the small arms of the infantry and riflemen.

Mr. COGSWELL. The gentleman does not answer my question. Does he say that the armament of a fort is complete without field guns?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Under the present plans of armament it is, but when fortifications are attacked by infantry they should have infantry and field batteries for defense.

Mr. COGSWELL. I differ from you decidedly.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I have never seen guns of 3½ inches placed in coast defenses as a part of its armament.

Mr. COGSWELL. I am not asking what you have seen.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Of course a little battery thrown up in the field is different. What is meant by coast defenses are permanent forts.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is a military man, a graduate of West Point, I believe, and let me ask him, do you know of a fortification in the United States now—take Fortress Monroe, and I am asking for information—do you know of a fortification on the seaboard or elsewhere in the United States where there are not these field batteries?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I have never seen any 3½-inch guns placed in a coast fortification as a part of its armament.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not asking what you have seen; are they not there now?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I have been at several coast fortifications, and looked at guns mounted for defense, and never saw small field guns mounted as part of the armament. They are sometimes, I might say frequently, kept in forts for their better care and preservation, and a few guns are sometimes kept for salutes and for the morning and evening gun.

Mr. SAYERS. You say that you did not see them.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I did not see them mounted as part of the armament.

Mr. SAYERS. They are not, then, there, in your opinion?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Not at coast fortifications.

At Fortress Monroe there is an artillery school, and light batteries are stationed at that post.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations alluded to the fact that so much of the President's message as alluded to the subject of fortifications and coast defense was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In that same message matters referring to the public defense and military establishment, and including everything of that character, were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Everything, therefore, pertaining to the Army and the equipments of the Army in the field, such as guns of this caliber, which are put in the field as field guns, certainly belong to and should be referred to and provided for in bills reported from this committee.

The only argument so far made in this discussion which tends to show that they ought not to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs seems to be based upon the assumption that having been there improperly for several years the improper reference should be indefinitely continued. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] also argues that the Committee on Appropriations should exhaust the whole subject. If they should exhaust the whole subject they would be compelled to take jurisdiction of the entire armament of the Army, which would be in direct violation of the rules. I insist the Committee on Military Affairs ought to exhaust the whole subject so far as it is necessary to provide for the arms, equipments, and guns for the military establishment, because this committee is specially required to do so under the rules which govern this House. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is hardly necessary to say anything further upon the subject.

Mr. LANHAM. I only wish to say a word on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER]. It seems to me that it is not very material to those who shall pay the taxes involved in the appropriations for these items, aggregating $180,135, whether that burden is imposed by the Committee on Appropriations or by the Committee on Military Affairs. Nor does it seem to me that the question ought to be controlled, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], by former references of such matters to any particular committee. The essential point to determine is whether or not the authority to appropriate for these items properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, and whether the guns, carriages, etc., for which these appropriations are to be made belong to and constitute a part of the military establishment.

The committee taking jurisdiction of it heretofore would not necessarily prevail in jurisdiction now simply for that reason. If there has been a mistake in former references, a mistake in conferring or assuming jurisdiction in the past, it does not follow that such mistake should be perpetuated. If we wish to ascertain clearly what belongs to the military establishment or what the terms imply, it would be but natural to refer to those who are specially qualified to speak in such matters from military training and practical experience. In the letter read from the Clerk's desk, coming from the General of the Army, who is, as I understand, president of the board of fortifications and ordnance, it is clearly and distinctly defined that the subjects named are properly classed under the head of military establishment, and hence the jurisdiction for the appropriation obviously belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

General Schofield says:

In reply to your communication of this date, I have the honor to say that the "field guns of 3.3-inch caliber, metallic carriages for field-gun batteries," and "shell and shrapnel for field guns" are intended for the services of light batteries, of which there are two in each regiment of artillery, which serve with the infantry and cavalry in the field, but not in the fortifications or coast defenses.

If this interpretation be correct, the Committee on Appropriations is manifestly without jurisdiction over this subject-matter, for the items mentioned are disconnected from fortifications or coast defenses.

Now, there is in this letter a construction by a very high military authority as to whether or not these items of appropriation belong to the military establishment, and it seems to me that his judgment and interpretation would be infinitely better than that of any number of gentlemen in the House of Representatives. It is also clear, Mr. Chairman, that under the provisions of Rule XI, referring all matters of legislation pertaining to the military establishment to the Military Committee, that committee logically and legally has jurisdiction of this subject-matter and has the right to report accordingly in this appropriation bill. We took jurisdiction of the question, as we thought we ought to do, and reported to the House our bill on the 28th day of February, 1890—

Mr. SAYERS. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. By what authority did you take jurisdiction of the question when this matter was first presented?

Mr. LANHAM. We had submitted to us the estimates from the War Department.

Mr. SAYERS. But how did it get to the House?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not know about that, and in fact I do not think it would be at all material in correctly determining the question of jurisdiction. This bill, I say, was reported on the 28th day of February, 1890. The bill making appropriations for fortifications and coast defenses was reported to the House on the 18th day of March, 1890. We had already taken jurisdiction of the subject-matter involved in this appropriation before that time. We had the judgment of a man of great military ability, a man of splendid military education and high military character, to the effect that these matters belong to the military establishment, and I think we ought not to be prejudiced by any previous reference to another committee or by the fact that the estimates went to one committee or the other. It is important, if there has been an error committed heretofore, to correct it now when the opportunity is presented.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If these items of appropriation belong to the military establishment under the rules of the House, and the jurisdiction is given for the reason assigned by the gentleman, is not the jurisdiction also given to recommend appropriations for the steel out of which they are made? Why did you not recommend appropriations for them? You claim jurisdiction, and yet the gentleman did not seek to cover that and various other matters. Now, where is the distinction?

Mr. LANHAM. We have only placed these three items in our bill on which the point of order has been made. We sought no doubtful jurisdiction, and upon the propriety of our course we have submitted the judgment of perhaps the highest military authority in the country.

Mr. CANNON. Ah, but your highest military authority in the country does not regulate the rules of this House.

Mr. LANHAM. But our highest military authority, it seems to me, would be persuasive, to say the least, as to the definition of what is meant by the term "military establishment" rather than the judgment of the civilian members of the House; and that these items belong to that establishment has been affirmatively made to appear by the commanding general of the Army himself. It is a question for the Chair, of course, as to whether they appertain to the Military Committee or otherwise; but if they are a part of the military establishment, and outside of fortifications or coast defenses, then the Chair must inevitably hold, in my judgment, that the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction of them and has properly incorporated them in its bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, this is a contest with which I am somewhat familiar, by reason of my having had in charge during the last Congress the fortifications appropriation bill. It is the same old fight between the two committees. Now, it will be admitted, it can not be denied, by the Committee of Military Affairs, that before the distribution of appropriations amongst the various committees in the Fiftyth Congress, items of this character were always carried in the bill for fortifications and coast defenses, and not upon the bill for the support of the military establishment. It will be also admitted by the Committee on Military Affairs that no estimate or document of any kind whatever authorizing these items of appropriation went to it from the House.

I therefore ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, how comes it that he reports these items, if there was no estimate or proper document submitted by the Department, through the regular and ordinary channel, to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman desire an answer now?

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Book of Estimates is submitted to all of the appropriation committees, to the Committee on Military Affairs as well as to the Committee on Appropriations. If, therefore, the gentleman had read the report of the committee accompanying this bill he would have found that the committee dealt in entire frankness with the House when we say, on page 3 of the report:

In the Book of Estimates, at page 166, among other items (under the head of fortifications and other works of defense), occur the following.

And then, in connection with that, we submitted the various items to which that paragraph referred.

But we submit further, Mr. Chairman, that the error of a subordinate in the War Department in submitting an estimate of appropriation under the wrong head can not thereby control the jurisdiction of the House. We had this communicated to the committee in a special communication from the Secretary of War himself.

Mr. SAYERS. How? In what manner? Through the House?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Directly to the committee, under the date of February 20th.

Mr. SAYERS. But did it come through the House?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It did not come through the Speaker of the House, if that is what the gentleman means, but directly to the committee, the Secretary of War communicating this item for field batteries in a special estimate on the date mentioned.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, only a few words more. It has been shown that for more than twenty years items like those under consideration have, without interruption, been placed upon the bill which made appropriations for fortifications and coast defenses. It is also true that the estimates for these particular appropriations came to the House regularly and were referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the Committee on Military Affairs, except upon the communication sent to it irregularly by the Secretary of War, had nothing upon which to base the jurisdiction which has been assumed.

Mr. LANHAM. Will my colleague permit me to ask if he thinks this reference by the House to the committee is absolutely decisive of the question of jurisdiction?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so, when properly referred under the rules, especially as no question has been raised as to the propriety of the reference until now.

Mr. LANHAM. But suppose this to belong to the military establishment; would its reference to the Committee on Appropriations be decisive of the question of jurisdiction?

Mr. SAYERS. I think where the reference is made, under the rule, of a matter to a particular committee it would have the jurisdiction, unless an objection were raised within the proper time and in the manner prescribed by the rules of the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In other words, reference to a wrong committee would confer jurisdiction.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not agree that this is a wrong reference.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If this pertains to the military establishment, it would be a wrong reference.

Mr. SAYERS. Not so.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Take, for instance, the items for the Military Academy. We find estimates in one part of the book for the Military Academy and in another for the public works.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, the gentleman will find that all these items have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Yes, sir. All of these are not, however, for the Military Academy, and yet the Committee on Military Affairs have jurisdiction.

Mr. SAYERS. Because they have been referred to your committee under the rules of the House.

Mr. Chairman, this whole question was exhaustively discussed in the last Congress, and it was definitely settled when the fortifications bill was up for consideration, and also when the bill for the support of the Army was before the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him there; he says that this whole subject was exhaustively discussed in the last Congress. Allow me to read from a letter received from the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the Secretary of War; but he is not a member of this House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is simply as to a matter of fact.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not understand that the Secretary of War is a better judge of parliamentary law than an experienced member of this House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, no; but as to a matter of fact.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman has been reading communications from the General of the Army and from the Secretary of War and his officers as to the jurisdiction of committees of this House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The simple point I desire to make, if my friend will allow me, is that we have never appropriated for these 3.2-inch caliber guns before. We have appropriated for guns of larger caliber, but never for guns of this caliber.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman can read it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He writes:

Twenty-five steel field guns of 3.2-inch caliber, $25,000. Congress has heretofore made no appropriation for the steel field guns of 3.2-inch caliber as named in this item; such as have been made have been procured from proceeds of sales of obsolete and unserviceable materials.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, read further.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is all I desire to read.

Mr. SAYERS. Read it all.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Very well.

At the second session of the Fiftyth Congress an estimate for field guns of 3.6-inch caliber was, after a discussion in the House, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and action thereon was taken by that committee as stated.

Mr. SAYERS. Suppose you read all of the letter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, let me see it then.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is all that bears upon this question.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order in this discussion of the point of order to limit debate to thirty minutes on a side?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will limit it in a moment.

Mr. SAYERS. I will read, Mr. Chairman:

An item for projectiles, including steel shrapnel for the field service, was embodied in the fortifications act approved March 2, 1889. The assignment of the estimate for this purpose and the action taken in the Fiftyth Congress, second session, was the same as stated for the two preceding items of this memorandum.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations over the items under consideration is amply sustained by the uniform and uninterrupted practice of the House for more than twenty years; by the unquestioned rulings of three Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole on different occasions during the last preceding Congress; by the reference of that portion of the President's message and of the departmental estimates bearing upon the subject during the present Congress; under a fair construction of the rules themselves; and, finally, because sound policy demands that the appropriations for the erection of arsenals, for the purchase of machinery and of steel, and for the manufacture of guns should be considered, reported, and recommended by one and the same committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a moment. This whole field has been very thoroughly gone over and I have, therefore, no disposition to trespass at length upon the time of the House or the patience of the Chair. The question at issue here is a question of jurisdiction, not to be determined by the opinion of the General of the Army, but to be decided under the rules and practice of this House. Substantially the same issue was decided in the last Congress, both by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who was in the chair when the fortifications bill was being considered, and by myself when in the chair on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, I desire first to call your attention to the preliminary observations of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in the decision referred to. He said:

An examination of the statutes and of the practice of the House for a long series of years shows that prior to the adoption of the present rules the rules simply assigned the work of appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee subdivided their work into various general appropriation bills. Not by virtue of any rule of the House, but for their own convenience. They were designated as the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sundry civil bill, the fortification bill, the District of Columbia bill, the pension bill, the deficiency bill, the military bill, the naval bill, and the bill in relation to post-offices and post-roads, etc.

The subject-matter of these several bills was designated by the Committee on Appropriations itself, and the Chair thinks that the only way of ascertaining the nature of these bills is by an examination of the substance of them. Under these designations they have been crystallized in the practice of the House until they have a significance as pregnant as the strongest language could give them.

Again, Mr. Chairman, when the Army appropriation bill was being considered at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress the question of jurisdiction was raised on the "torpedo item" of that bill; and, following in the line of the premises laid down by the gentleman from Georgia which I have just quoted, the Chair said:

In endeavoring to reach a just conclusion it occurs to the Chair that it is well to go back to the practice of the House in respect to this item before the change of rules distributed the appropriation bills; for that change of rules made no change in their phraseology—

I desire the Chair to take especial note of this fact—but simply assigned certain appropriation bills to committees which prior to that time had not been given the consideration of them.

Further on, in summing up conclusions, I also stated:

The Chair, therefore, thinks that the intent of the House in distributing these appropriation bills was to give to the fortification bill that which it carried prior to the distribution, to the post-office appropriation bill that which it carried prior to the distribution, and so with respect to the bills assigned to the other committees.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the change in the distribution of the bills made no change whatever in the phraseology of the rule. The gentleman from Georgia and myself accordingly held that these bills, as distributed by the change of rules, carried with them to their respective committees only that which they contained when they were under the jurisdiction and control of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, tried by that construction, which has been repeatedly approved by this body, the items against which the point of order is made must be carried in the fortification bill, for examination reveals the fact that for more than twenty years prior to the distribution they always found a place in that bill. As has already been stated, the estimates sent to the House for field guns have been referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Appropriations, which fact ought to confer on that committee unchallenged jurisdiction.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Does not the gentleman yield the whole question when he says that the Committee on Appropriations once had this all in their hands and that they segregated the appropriations into different appropriation bills, as appeared to them to be proper? Upon the same principle would it not be proper now to give this appropriation for field guns to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think not. My point is very clear; at least I have endeavored to make it so. It is this: That in the distribution of the appropriation bills, there being no change in the phraseology of the rules, the military bill as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs should carry those matters which it formerly carried when it was reported from the Committee on Appropriations; that the Post-Office bill should carry under this construction only those items which it carried before the change of rules sent it to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and so on through the entire list of committees.

Now, apply that standard, and the decision must be in favor of the Committee on Appropriations, for I have here a memorandum prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations which shows that for more than twenty years past the Army appropriation bill has never carried an appropriation for field guns.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Because we have not been making appropriations for this kind of light field batteries.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But the line was drawn before.

Mr. DOCKERY. The line was clearly drawn before. Now, Mr. Chairman, the memorandum just read, showing that the 3.2-inch guns have not been made before, is not at all germane to the point of order. The question at issue is the question of jurisdiction of field guns, not the size of any particular gun.

Mr. LANHAM. What part do these guns play in fortifications?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know much about military affairs. I was fortunately so young at the time of the war that I got in only during the last six months, in the militia, and I did not therefore see much military service. [Laughter.] I am arguing this question under the rules and the practice of the House, and the Chair will observe that the practice of the House has been uniform in its support of the views I have presented.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is narrowing itself down to a question of common sense. No gentleman upon the floor of this House will for a moment undertake to claim that a 3-inch gun is to be used in a fortification. A 3-inch gun, as I understand it, is to be used upon the battle-field. No man can point to a fortification in this country where a gun of only 3 inches caliber has ever been used. If these guns were intended to be used for fortifications they would be of much larger caliber. A 3-inch gun is designed to be hauled about by horses and to be handled by men in the field in action. Gentlemen desire to take jurisdiction of this matter for the Committee on Appropriations, but the jurisdiction of that committee is confined to fortifications and does not apply to light field arms.

This gun is a field arm, just like a rifle, only that it is of a little calibre, requiring five or six or seven men to handle it instead of one, and it comes strictly under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. We do not propose to interfere with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations as to fortifications. They claim that jurisdiction, and we say, let them have it; but when it comes to a matter entirely separate and distinct from that, which comes legitimately within the authority of the Committee on Military Affairs, we insist that that committee shall have its jurisdiction, and that is this case, because, as I have said, these guns are never used in fortifications, but are strictly for field purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question presented is not without difficulty, and the discussion has not been sufficiently full to entirely satisfy the Chair, but he understands that the exigencies of the work before the House will not permit further delay.

The practice of the House for the last twenty years preceding the last six years in large part has obtained under different conditions as between committees from those which now exist, and the Chair will confine himself strictly to the rule as he understands it.

Rule XI provides as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating,

To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely: * * * for fortifications and coast defenses * * * to the Committee on Appropriations.

All appropriations relating—

12. to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

As the Chair understands this rule, the Committee on Appropriations in this matter is confined strictly to that which pertains to fortifications and coast defenses. The Chair holds that the provision of the bill before the committee providing for steel field guns and carriages for the same, not used in fortifications, nor made for fortifications, nor for coast defenses, properly goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, and he therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the provisions of this bill, on page 22, from line 16 to line 2, page 23, inclusive.

The Clerk read the paragraphs proposed to be struck out, as follows:

For four mountain guns, carriages, limbers, accessories, and ammunition therefor, $14,920;

For steel field guns of 3.20 inches caliber, $25,000;

For metallic carriages for field-gun batteries, $143,135;

For steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, $12,000;

In all, $180,135.

Mr. CANNON. A single word upon this amendment. I hold in one hand the Army appropriation bill, from which I move to strike out these items. In the other hand I hold the fortifications appropriation bill, in which all these items appear, and, in addition, various other items of appropriations for steel to make these guns, as well as other guns, for an addition to the Watervliet arsenal, for tools, machinery, and plant for the manufacture of field guns, shell, and shrapnel, and for various other items necessarily used in the making of these guns and this shrapnel and shell.

I make this motion because the fortification bill has always carried, and now carries, the items I have indicated, and the Army bill has not heretofore carried these items, and members of this House as well as the country at large are entitled, when they pick up an act of appropriation and read it, to assume that the whole subject is exhausted in that act. Therefore, either the Army bill or the fortification bill, as a matter of sound legislative policy, should exhaust this whole subject of field guns and kindred affairs. I hope, therefore, that these items will be stricken out of this bill, and that the fortification bill, which is to follow and carries all these items, including the steel which makes these guns, the enlargement of the factory in which they are made, the tools with which to make them, shall carry also the guns.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This question, as I have understood, has been determined over and over again heretofore, both by the Chair and by a vote of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; and invariably one way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Has there been any change in the rules on this subject?

Mr. CANNON. Not in the least.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood the Chair to say, in deciding this question, that to-day the conditions are different, or the rules different, from what they were when previous decisions were made, by which, I supposed, the Chair would be guided.

Mr. CANNON. I say again that the rules in this respect are the same as in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses when this question was decided differently upon a point of order.

But I care nothing about the point of order. Whether the Army bill or the fortification bill carries this appropriation—and the items are in both bills—in either event these guns will be constructed. But I do say that in the estimates and in the fortification bill are these additional matters of appropriation for gun factory, for steel out of which these guns are to be made, for tools with which they are to be made, and that one bill or the other ought to carry the whole of these appropriations. I trust that they will be stricken out of the Army bill and that we shall let the fortification bill carry these four items, as it carries a dozen other items which it is necessary that the fortification bill, or some other bill, should carry in order that these guns may be made.

Mr. LANHAM. Suppose the motion of the gentleman should now prevail and that, when we come to the fortification bill, these items should be struck out on a point of order, what would then become of them?

Mr. CANNON. Well, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I hardly think that any Chairman of the Committee of the Whole could be found who would reverse the unbroken rulings of the House on this subject, by holding that these items are not in order on the fortification appropriation bill.

Mr. LANHAM. The present Chairman has very wisely decided that these items are properly on the Army bill.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether it is not true that during the last ten years there have been at least four occasions when we failed to have any fortification bill at all. What has happened in previous Congresses may happen in this.

Mr. CANNON. Well, of course, if Congress does not choose to make an appropriation there will be no money.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. We always pass the Army appropriation bill; but the fortification bill frequently fails to get through in time.

Mr. MOREY. I wish to make an inquiry. If these appropriations be made on the fortification bill, under the direction of what officer or what board will the expenditure be made?

Mr. CANNON. There will not be the slightest difference in that respect from the expenditure under this bill as I understand it. When I make this point, it is not because in either event these guns will not be made; they will be. My point is in the interest of harmonious legislation, upon the principle that one bill or the other should exhaust the whole subject. If these items are left in the Army bill, then you have in the fortification bill a larger number of items than are necessary for the construction of these guns. I want the Committee of the Whole to strike out in this bill these items which are duplicated in the fortification bill, and let them remain in that bill where they are found now, and which has carried them heretofore.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire that we shall get through with this question, go on with the bill, and finish it to-night; and for that reason I shall detain the Committee of the Whole only a single moment.

If these items remain in this bill, these light guns will be constructed under the supervision of the Bureau of Ordnance, not under the supervision of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification. The gentleman says that the fortification bill carries the machinery and the plant for the gun factory. That is so. We have conceded that, and the House has so decided, because the principal business of that gun plant is the manufacture of heavy ordnance for coast defense; and the major jurisdiction carries with it the minor.

Now, if these items be retained here, these guns will be made at the Watervliet arsenal; they will be made under the same general supervision; but they will be made under the direction of the Bureau of Ordnance, as I have said, instead of the board of ordnance and fortification; and the money will be appropriated in this bill instead of the other. That will be the only difference.

We are providing to-day for the Army. There are two light batteries in each of the five artillery regiments—ten light batteries in all; and the object of this provision is to furnish with light guns those light batteries, which are just as much a part of the military establishment as the cavalry, or the infantry, or the engineers, or any other of the corps. I now ask for a vote.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Allow me a single moment. This item, to which my honored friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] has called attention and to which attention is called also by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], might possibly, with propriety, be in either bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think so, possibly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, in either event these guns will be constructed by the Bureau of Ordnance and at the same establishment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not under the direction of the board of ordnance and fortification, if provided for in this bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But, Mr. Chairman, the point is that the House has a right to determine for itself whether these items shall go into one bill or the other; and after the House has deliberately determined the question over and over again, in the face of the appeal of my honored friend from Michigan and others, we had the right to suppose that, without superhuman effort, this House and the Chair would adhere to that ruling.

So far as concerns the distribution of these different items, they are carried now by the same bill that has carried them for twenty-odd years.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We have not had them before—not these.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, the principle is the same. Whether a gun has a caliber of 4 inches or 3 inches or an inch and a half is not of any significance in determining the application of the principle which the House has laid down.

Now, for twenty years; nay, I will say to my friend for forty years, ever since the Committee on Appropriations has had existence, these lines of demarcation between different bills have been as distinct as now. When one bill was turned over to the Committee on Military Affairs it took with it the items it carried while in charge of the Committee on Appropriations. The attempt was made by my honored friend [Mr. CUTCHEON], backed by my equally zealous friend from Alabama, to revise the rules and to reverse the decision of Chairman after Chairman. Now you have succeeded. I congratulate you, although I think the decision is clearly wrong, not because the item in controversy may not be carried in the military bill, but because the House has otherwise ordered and refused over and over again to change or modify that ruling. And it would seem that there should be an end to this controversy. I do not deny that the language of the rule warrants the interpretation the honorable Chairman has given it. The error is, I claim, in departing from the construction the House has, time after time and Chairman after Chairman, given to the clause in question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. The motion to strike out includes the four mountain guns. They are in the bill. They are designed to be taken to pieces and carried over the mountains. The War Department desires them for instruction. The point of order was not made until afterwards so far as they are concerned.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, then, as the gentleman says the point of order was not made until afterwards, I withdraw the amendment as to four mountain guns and accessories.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BREWER. I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to show, Mr. Chairman, the anomalous condition in which the committee will be placed if those items remain in the bill. The last item is:

For steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, $12,000.

That is taken from a clause containing several other items in the Book of Estimates by the Committee on Military Affairs without any estimate to base their report on except as they find it under that referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the committee to this language in the estimate:

Steel shell or shrapnel for field guns $12,000, and for cast-iron projectiles for field, siege, and seacoast guns $24,500.

The committee did not take all, but only took that covered by the $12,000 item. If they have jurisdiction of that part of the clause then both items should be in the bill. Why is only one item included?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. We will get them as fast as we can.

Mr. BREWER. They were mixed up, it is true, but why insert one and leave the other out? Why separate them? I insist the committee should strike out these items, and let them remain where they properly belong.

The question recurred on Mr. CANNON's motion to strike out.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 57.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RECRUITING SERVICE.

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, and in keeping recruits at recruiting depots before assignment to regiment, $113,695.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move, in lines 5 and 6, page 23, to strike out the words "and in keeping recruits at recruiting depots before assignment to regiment."

One word in regard to that amendment. There was an estimate of $25,000 for keeping recruits at recruiting depots before assignment to regiment. The committee did not grant that $25,000, and the rest should go out. The Secretary of War and the Adjutant-General asked the bill be so amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray expenses of sending recruiting parties to small towns and rural districts adjacent to recruiting rendezvous, $25,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to strike out the words "adjacent to recruiting rendezvous;" so it will read:

To defray expenses of sending recruiting parties to small towns and rural districts, $25,000.

This is also here by recommendation of the Secretary of War, and is simply to give a little more liberality in sending out recruiting parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray expenses of sending recruiting parties to small towns and rural districts, $25,000.
In all $138,696.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to come in after line 12, on page 23.

The Clerk read as follows:

And which shall be disbursed and accounted for as expenses of recruiting, and shall constitute one fund.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The object is that the entire $138,696 may be drawn upon as an entire fund. It does not change the appropriation.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL SERVICE.

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs; signal equipments and stores; binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including absolutely necessary meteorological instruments for use on target-ranges; telephone apparatus and maintenance of same; in all, $10,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer the following proviso, to come in at the end of this clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That, from the signal stores herein appropriated for, the Chief Signal Officer, on proper application in writing by the adjutant-general of any State, may sell to such State for use of its militia at contract prices such signal equipments and stores, field-glasses, telescopes, heliographs, and other apparatus as may be necessary for instruction in military signaling; the money received therefor, which shall revert to the appropriation for the current year in which the sale may be made, must be duly accounted for as other public money, and may be used in the purchase of like articles to replace those so sold.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This provision would undoubtedly be new legislation, if the point was made.

The object of it is, Mr. Chairman, to enable certain States, especially the State of California, to purchase signal instruments, and purchase them at cost price, from the signal stores of the Government, the money to be covered back into the same fund. It will cost the Government nothing. It is simply a temporary transfer for the accommodation of the militia of the States which may desire it. I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For contingent expenses of the office of the commanding general, $1,750.
For contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Department at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments, $2,000, being for the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, stationery, binding, maps, books of reference, police utensils, etc.

For binding current orders and purchasing maps for the Inspector-General's Department, $500.

Mr. CUTCHEON. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to the last paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, in line 4, strike out "current" and insert "reports," and in the same line, before the word "maps," insert the words "books of reference and;" so that it will read:

"For binding reports and orders and purchasing books of reference and maps for the Inspector-General's Department, $500."

Mr. CUTCHEON. This change is made at the request of the Inspector-General in a communication which reached the committee since the bill was framed and reported. He states that there are valuable orders and reports not of the current series to be bound. It does not make any change in the appropriation, but simply enables him to bind orders of the past series as well as the current series. I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent now to take up and consider House bill 8391, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was to further consider House bill 7619. I simply make this statement in justice to the Chair and to the committee.

Mr. BREWER. I hope that while we are in committee we will be enabled to take up this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done without objection. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I think we had better finish up the other bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is objection, the bill referred to by the gentleman from Michigan will be proceeded with.

Mr. DUNNELL. Regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to call up this bill, so that it may be read now for the information of the House; and then, if desired, I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. But the regular order has been demanded; and the gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it will not take three minutes to dispose of the Army bill after we get into the House, unless a separate vote is called for, and it seems to me that we might as well enter upon the general debate and probably conclude it upon the fortifications bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I think it is in the interest of the dispatch of public bills to rise and dispose of the military bill.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments; and that, as so amended, the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the top of page 17, where the words "and so forth" are used, in line 3. I was under the impression that it was understood these words were to be stricken out where they occurred in the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I had intended to do that, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. I therefore move now to strike out the words "and so forth," and insert the word "and" before "canteens," in the same line.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is also a similar amendment which should be made in the third line on page 24. The words "and so forth" were used in the estimate, and by some means crept into the bill. I think it better to strike them out and insert the word "and" before the words "police utensils;" so it will read "maps, books of reference, and police utensils."

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. BYNUM. I ask a separate vote on the amendment in regard to the sale of alcoholic liquors in the canteen.

The SPEAKER. If no other separate vote is demanded, the vote will be taken upon the remaining amendments.

The remaining amendments were adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Indiana, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, shall be sold or supplied to the enlisted men in any canteen or in any room or building at any garrison or military post.

Mr. BYNUM. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUTCHEON. A parliamentary inquiry. Would any remarks be in order upon this at this time?

Mr. PAYSON. We do not need any remarks.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will waive that question; but I will say on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs that they do not ask a separate vote on this amendment, and do not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLOUNT. Debate is not in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 32, nays 135, not voting 142; as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit an amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I offered my amendment before the previous question was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to recognition under the practice of the House, and if the House desires any further amendments the previous question can be voted down.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I wish to know whether a provision authorizing the Government to engage in the whisky business has ever been contained in any previous appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHEADLE. I think if I could get an answer to that question—

Mr. PICKLER. I had obtained the floor and offered my amendment before the previous question was ordered; and under the rule, Mr. Speaker, after a bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, it is in order to submit additional amendments; that the first question is upon the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, if the previous question be not ordered. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offered this amendment, and the previous question was not moved until I had offered it. I submit, therefore, that I am in order. The amendment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is correct. The Chair supposed it was in answer to an inquiry. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "dollars," in line 4, on page 17, the following words:

"Provided, That no article the sale of which is prohibited by State or Territorial law shall be sold or offered for sale at any canteen provided for by this act within such State or Territory."

Mr. PICKLER. I think everybody can vote for that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to that.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman has arisen and asked for a division.

Mr. SPRINGER (rising). Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 82.

Mr. PICKLER and Mr. STRUBLE. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 1, 1890.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in his seat, who, I am sure, if present, would not let business proceed without a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the roll be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Davis,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Bate,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Teller,
Blair,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Paddock,	Vance,
Butler,	Frye,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Call,	Gibson,	Platt,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Ransom,
Cullom,	Kenna,	Sawyer,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-nine Senators have responded to their names. No quorum is present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the absentees be sent for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SHERMAN. The roll of absentees had better be called.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have had one call. A call of the Senate is first in order.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the only method of getting a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the only method of getting a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called of Senators who are absent.

The Secretary called the names of the absentees, and the following Senators responded to their names: Messrs. CASEY, GRAY, MOODY, PETTIGREW, PLUMB, REAGAN, and STEWART.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon the call of absent Senators seven Senators have answered to their names. Thirty-six Senators are now present; no quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be directed to call upon the absentees and, if necessary, compel their attendance.

Mr. HARRIS. "Request the attendance of absent Senators."

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock, the usual hour of meeting, and I think all the Senators will be here at that time by natural process.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion is first in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no motion in order except to adjourn or to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not the question on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, to take a recess until 12 o'clock? That takes precedence, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not in order. No motion is in order except to adjourn or request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. We can not take a recess without a quorum.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not without a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from Kansas is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I think, if we had the Senator from Vermont here, we might go on.

Mr. BLAIR. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Sergeant-at-Arms would require him to be present we might proceed with business.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. But two motions are in order: one to proceed with the call and enforce the attendance of absentees and the other to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Rule V. * * *

3. Whenever upon such roll-call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. A motion to take a recess is clearly out of order, I see, by that rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Kansas desires to move to take a recess, which I think will probably be the best course, I shall withdraw my motion.

Mr. PLUMB. A motion for a recess is not in order, it seems.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the regular order. The absent Senators will be here before the Journal is read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion made by the Senator from Missouri the Chair holds to be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. That is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose a motion to adjourn is in order under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggest that the roll be called again. Quite a number of Senators have just come in.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe a motion to adjourn takes precedence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. I think that is a good idea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that motion the Senator from Iowa demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am generally paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]; but believing that he would vote "yea" on this proposition, I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Believing that he would vote "nay" I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]; but believing that he would desire the business of the Senate to go on to-day I take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], but I vote "nay," believing that the Senator with whom I am paired would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. My vote seems to be necessary to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and I withdraw my vote, as he is not present.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—9.
Date, Butler, Call,	Cockrell, George,	Gray, Kenna,	Pasco, Plumb.
NAYS—34.
Allison, Blair, Blodgett, Casey, Chandler, Coke, Cullom, Davis, Edmunds,	Evarts, Farwell, Frye, Harris, Hoar, Ingalls, McMillan, Manderson, Moody,	Morrill, Paddock, Payne, Pettigrew, Platt, Ransom, Reagan, Sawyer, Sherman,	Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vance, West, Wilson of Md Wolcott.

ABSENT—39.

Aldrich, Allen, Barbour, Beck, Berry, Blackburn, Brown, Cameron, Colquitt, Daniel,	Dawes, Dixon, Dolph, Eustis, Faulkner, Gibson, Gorman, Hale, Hampton, Hawley,	Hearst, Higgins, Hiscock, Jones of Arkansas, Jones of Nevada, McPherson, Mitchell, Morgan, Pierce, Pugh,	Quay, Spooners, Squire, Stanford, Stockbridge, Voorhees, Walthall, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.
---	--	---	--

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to explain my absence by stating that I was present at a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary which, by order of the Senate, has leave to sit during its session.

Mr. VEST. The same statement applies to all of us upon this side of the Chamber who are members of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It applies to all the members of that committee.

Mr. VEST. The committee met at 9 o'clock this morning and has been in continuous session and at work until a few moments ago.

Mr. PLUMB. That leaves all the rest of us in a rather unfortunate situation, and unless we make explanations it will be presumed that we were not performing our public duty.

Mr. VEST. I have nothing to say about that.

Mr. PLUMB. I was talking about the conjoined effort of my colleague and the Senator from Missouri, and what the result will be upon the very sensitive public mind, which is much exercised on such questions, about our getting here at 11 o'clock in the morning, and I therefore want to see if I can not get leave that every member may print and put into the RECORD in detail his excuse for not being present at 11 o'clock sharp.

Mr. TELLER. We were here.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will allow me I wish to say, by way of explaining why I was present, that I had to neglect a great many important matters I should like to have attended to before I came here at 11 o'clock; and I think I ought to apologize for being present at 11 o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. If it is in order, I move to rescind the order for meeting at 11 o'clock, and I desire to say a word about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the Journal is first in order. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COLORADO SPRINGS WATER RESERVOIR.

Mr. TELLER. The other day Senate bill 1332 was recalled from the President of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the vote passing the bill may be reconsidered for the purpose of making two clerical amendments. It is, I understand, a question of privilege and may be brought up now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none. The message from the President of the United States will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 28th instant, the House of Representatives concurring, I return herewith the bill (S. 1332) entitled "An act granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs."

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 29, 1890.

Mr. TELLER. I now move that the word "and" in line 21 of the print may be stricken out and the word "of" inserted. I understand the order was entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to reconsider will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The vote on the third reading will be regarded as reconsidered, if there be no objection, so that the bill may be open to amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 21 of section 1 it is proposed to strike out the word "and" where it occurs the second time and insert in lieu thereof the word "of;" so as to read:

Also lots numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the north half and the southeast quarter of—

Mr. INGALLS. Is this another error of the clerks in enrollment? And, if so, by whom was the mistake made, if we may be informed?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to say that it is a little uncertain, but I think the mistake was made in the Printing Office in printing the bill as it passed this body.

I think the Chief Clerk has read the wrong "and" in reading the amendment. It is the third "and," in line 21, in the phrase "and the north half and." The word "and" following "half" should be stricken out; and in line 23 the word "and" should be stricken out and the words "of the" inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 23, strike out the second word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the;" so as to read:

Lots numbered 3 and 4 and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 22

Mr. TELLER. I want to see that the clerks get this right. I think a mistake has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 21 of section 1, after the word "half," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "of;" and in line 23, after the word "half," insert "of the;" so as to read:

Also lots numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 28; lots numbered 3 and 4 and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. That is right. Now, I should like to say, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas, that it is not the fault of the clerical force of this body that this error occurred. That is clear.

Mr. INGALLS. It is evidently the fault of somebody, and this is a spectacle that has been too often repeated, not only at this session, but at previous sessions. There ought to be some way devised by which bills can pass this body and be enrolled as they are passed. We have been repeatedly compelled to recall bills from the House of Representatives and from the President and have amendments inserted that nobody knows anything about by resolution, by joint resolution, or by some proceeding unknown to parliamentary law, because, on account of the neglect of somebody, the bills do not express the declared will of the House in which they originated. If it is the fault of the enrolling clerks or of the Senators, there ought to be something done by which we shall be enabled to have some regular parliamentary proceedings for the passage of bills.

The Secretary informs me that the clerks enrolled this bill as it came to them from the Printer. Now, certainly the Printer is not an officer of this body, and we ought not to be held responsible for what is done in the Government Printing Office. I am told that it is the habit to send out from the Senate the original files of the bills to the Government Printer, and that they do not appear again until some indefinite period in the future. What is sent back here is a printed copy that goes into the files of the Senate without examination or collation. Nobody knows whether a bill that comes back from the Printer is a copy of the bill that went to him or not, and what becomes of the original file nobody knows.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator understand that the original bill which is written out and upon which we act is not returned at once to the Senate or to the House of Representatives?

Mr. INGALLS. It is not. The original bill introduced leaves the custody of the Senate, goes into the hands of a person who is not an officer of or connected with this body, is printed, and the print, without correction and without collation, is sent back here and a printed copy goes into the files, and we act on that.

Mr. HALE. What becomes of the original bill itself?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know.

Mr. HALE. We ought to know.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the practice is entirely defective, and it is impossible that errors should not occur by such proceedings.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as I understand the course pursued, it is that the original bills are introduced here and sent to the Printer. Then they come back and are placed on our files in print; and when we consider bills they are considered from the printed copy and amended by the insertion or the striking out of words. When a bill has passed this body, partially printed and partially written, for the amendments are in writing, it is engrossed and sent to the other House. That bill does not go back to the Printer.

Mr. HALE. No, but is not the result of the action of the two Houses always written out and enrolled distinctly in one written document, and we have that original?

Mr. ALLISON. We have that.

Mr. HALE. And that is what we act upon finally and that is what goes to the President, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but this mistake, as I understand it, must have been a mistake in the print.

Mr. TELLER. There is not any complaint that there was any mistake either by the enrollment here or at the House of Representatives. Undoubtedly the wrong word was in the print.

Mr. HALE. Where and at what time did it get there?

Mr. TELLER. At the Printing Office in the print of the bill. The report was not compared with the print, and therefore there were 320 acres of land conveyed in this way that ought not to have been conveyed. While the land is practically worthless, it was not thought best to allow the bill to go through in that way, and therefore I had it recalled, and I now ask that it be passed, the correction having been made.

I should like to say before I quit that this is not a new thing. I have found that it has been the custom for years to call back and correct bills in this way. I have found a line of precedents to that effect; sometimes it is done in one way and sometimes in another.

Mr. INGALLS. If the bills were properly examined before they passed the errors would be detected. The difficulty is that the examination is made after the bills are passed and have gone out of the custody of the two Houses and gone to the President of the United States, and how many errors there are that escape detection nobody can tell.

The statement that the Senator from Colorado makes is an illustration of the vice of our proceedings. He says that the Public Printer, a man who has nothing more to do with our proceedings than the Emperor of Persia ought to have, sees fit to change the word "of" to the word "and," and that comes back here and we give, in consequence of that change in a bill, 320 acres more to a corporation than they ask for or than they want. Now, does the Senator from Colorado pretend to tell me that that can not be prevented? It certainly would be prevented by examining the bill before it has passed; and why not provide for an examination before the bill passes to see whether it is right or wrong?

Mr. CULLOM. In reference to this particular bill, the original bill introduced is in the hands of the Clerk, and it shows the mistake is in the original bill introduced at this session of Congress exactly as it is enrolled. So there is no fault of the Clerks in connection with this matter whatever. The mistake perhaps occurred by virtue of the bill having come over from a past session and been reintroduced.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that of course this might have been avoided. If I had compared the report I held in my hand with the bill as passed I should have seen the mistake, but it did not occur to me to make the comparison; and when the Land Office made the comparison with the report they had sent here they discovered the error and called my attention to it. I presume the bill might have been signed in that way because it was inconsequential, but I did not feel that I ought to let a bill go through in that way, although the land involved is mountain land nearly 12,000 feet above the level of the sea.

Mr. CULLOM. All I want to say is that it is clear that the clerks are not at fault in this case.

Mr. TELLER. It is not the fault of the clerks. That I have stated.

Mr. INGALLS. What becomes of the bill now?

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may be passed as corrected.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill is not in condition now to pass the House of Representatives. The bill passed the House of Representatives as it has been reported here already and sent to the President.

Mr. TELLER. The President has returned it. I ask that the bill may now be passed as amended.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to know what is going to be done with it when it is passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Kansas incidentally made a remark showing that he is not entirely familiar with the rules of printing offices. It is the uniform rule in printing offices, especially in the United States, to follow copy even if you have to follow it out of the window. The Printing Office would not dare to change the word "of" to the word "and" or to cross a "t" or dot an "i" hardly, unless it was in the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before this matter passes away, in justice to the Public Printer I desire to say that he followed copy in the first instance exactly. The difficulty was in the original bill that was introduced. That is apparent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF CENSUS AGENTS.

Mr. PLATT. A few days since, upon the passage by the Senate of the bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889, I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I now desire to withdraw that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be withdrawn if there be no objection, and the bill will stand passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending that provision be made for the acquisition by the Government of the strip of land upon which the money appropriated by the act of March 2, 1889, is to be expended in building a roadway or entrance to the national cemetery at Hampton, Va.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in further response to a resolution of March 24, 1890, certain information relative to tests made with new methods of firing shells loaded with high explosives.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the communication.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is impossible for the Senate to hear a word that the Chief Clerk is reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been trying to listen to that document and I have not heard two words of it, so that I do not know what it is about, on account of the conversation all around.

Mr. HALE. I have not been able to distinguish a single word.

Mr. BLAIR. And I am not able to hear a word that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has spoken.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is worse yet. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. [A pause.] The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the communication, but before concluding—

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no occasion for a reference of that communication. It is simply sent for information, and I ask that it be printed and laid upon the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I should think as the document has been half read and then broken off the whole of it had better go into the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go into the RECORD and also be printed as a separate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 31, 1890.

SIR: In connection with my letter of the 26th instant replying to the Senate resolution of March 24, 1890, relative to tests made with a new method of firing shells loaded with high explosives, I have the honor to transmit, as pertinent thereto, the following extract from the programme of tests for high explosives adopted by the board of ordnance and fortification, of which General Schofield is president, and to whom the special explosive under consideration was referred by the War Department for the necessary action under the provisions of section 3 of the act approved September 22, 1888, and which appropriated $100,000 for tests of high explosives, namely:

"As to the explosives, we have now before the board explosive gelatine, gun-cotton, Emmentite, the Schwalm mixture, dynamite, and Americanite or the Smolianoff compound.

"Experiments of the kind to be undertaken involve no little time, labor, and expense; and they should therefore be restricted to what promise ultimate success. This is not the case with Americanite, because the liquid form and the liability to become dangerous through evaporation or by lying in store would forbid its use in the military service unless trials should demonstrate that no other variety free from these objections can be so used. That this explosive is liable to deterioration has been proved to the satisfaction of your committee by the results of a personal examination of a sample left in store at Sandy Hook after the trials made by the Ordnance Board in November, 1887. This sample is contained in a glass bottle, stored in a magazine of the fort. On April 5, 1888, a surface stratum of different appearance from that below was noted by Colonel Mordecai. It was then half an inch thick. On July 10 it was fifteen thirty-seconds of an inch thick. On January 3, 1889, it was fully half an inch thick. On March 26, 1889, the date of our inspection, it was seven thirty-seconds of an inch thick, the whole height being 6 inches. Samples of the two strata were then carefully taken with a pipette and at once tested with a hammer on an iron slab. The upper gave no decrepitation, but the lower acted in all respects like pure nitro-glycerine, except that it was perhaps a trifle less sensitive. Shaking the mixture with a glass rod produced no apparent change for recombination of the fluid; but at a subsequent examination, on June 1, a great change had occurred. The appearance then was for 2 inches at the bottom a white fluid; above that for about 1 inch a cloudy combination of white and yellow fluid; the remaining fluid to surface was of uniform yellow color. An explosive possessed of such characteristics would be extremely dangerous in a loading room, and your committee therefore recommends that the action already taken by the board on ———, 1889, in advising that experiments with this explosive be deferred for the present, be adhered to.

Very respectfully,

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Secretary of War.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 25, 1890, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to the number of patents issued up to date to Indians under the severalty act; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 75) to fix the regular terms of the circuit and district courts for the southern districts of Alabama;

A bill (H. R. 3971) to make valid a deed to a certain tract of land in Bibb County, Georgia, made and delivered by Brig. Gen. Davis Tilson, acting assistant commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau, to Samuel I. Gustin, his heirs and assigns;

A bill (H. R. 7044) to amend section 707 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. 7305) to deprive the judge in a court of the United States of the authority to give an opinion upon questions of fact; and

A bill (H. R. 8240) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing when requested.

The bill (H. R. 6952) to amend section 1018 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that about? Please read the first paragraph of the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"That section 1018 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 1018. Any party charged with a criminal offense'—"

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough. It should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 753) authorizing and directing the sale of certain property belonging to the United States, situate in Pittsburgh, Pa., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 2142) for the relief of the heirs of Lewis Steelman was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 136) for the relief of sufferers in the Mississippi Valley; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to act on that resolution without a reference. It is a matter of urgency, and, if passed at all, it should be passed at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If referred, it can be reported to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a case of urgency, and, if passed at all, it ought to be passed at once. The resolution is very short, and when the Senator hears it I think he will not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at length, subject to objection in all its stages. I do not want to prolong debate about it.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the president of the Mississippi River Commission be, and is hereby, authorized, out of any money heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River, to purchase or hire such boats as may be immediately necessary to rescue inhabitants in the overflowed districts of the Mississippi River Valley, and to use said boats for the purpose named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection. Pass it right along.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2542) further to provide for the administration of oaths.

Mr. HOAR. I think that had better go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will observe that the House seems to have made this bill cover all customs oaths and other special oaths where taken before special officers, which the Senate carefully avoided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the amendment of the House of Representatives be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, numbered 41, and asking for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its forty-first amendment and agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

CORRECTIONS OF RECORD.

Mr. PADDOCK. Referring to my request this morning to make a correction in the RECORD of my vote yesterday on an amendment to the pension bill, I desire to state that on an examination of the Journal at the desk I find that the error was not there; that the Journal is correct and shows my vote exactly as it was given, but the error was made at the Reporters' table; and I desire here to state that if I was in the habit of making speeches in the Senate, as I am not, I should insist upon it that the Reporters' table be changed from its present position.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from Nebraska one moment?

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say, out of justice to the Reporters, that it is sometimes absolutely impossible for them to take down what is being said by Senators on this floor on account of the continuous conversation going on in the Senate Chamber and in the galleries. I think that much is due to the Reporters. I have a rather acute hearing, and I have been able to catch scarcely a word which has fallen from the Senator from Nebraska, although he is speaking in a very distinct tone. It is due to the Reporters to say that it is a fact that owing to the confusion which prevails it is oftentimes impossible to catch the words which fall from the lips of Senators.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator had waited a moment—
Mr. BUTLER. I am not complaining of the Senator from Nebraska or of what he is stating, but I am simply saying that it is due to the Reporters to state that they can not always hear what is going on, and I can not hear half of what is going on, and I am making this statement as much out of regard for myself as for the Reporters. I do hope that order will be maintained in the Senate while the Senator is making his remarks.

Mr. PADDOCK. I want to say that the Reporters themselves have stated to me that it is an utter impossibility for them to hear what is said from this corner of the Chamber by myself and Senators behind me. Therefore, I was about to say that if I was in the habit of speaking to any extent, which I am not, I should ask that the table be placed so that the Reporter might sit at it with his face this way in order to hear what we have to say and how we vote.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to give notice that I desire at a future day to present the views of the minority, in opposition to the passage of the bill which has just been reported.

Mr. HALE. In the bill which was just reported I thought, as I listened to it, that the words "and so forth" were used in the title. I do not think that those are good words.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition of the children of Zachariah Taylor, late of Company D, Forty-ninth United States Colored Troops, now on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That the papers on file with Senate bill 1148, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account between the United States and the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company for customs duties," etc., introduced in the Forty-seventh Congress, be filed with Senate bill 3129 now before the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was there an adverse report before?

Mr. BERRY. I am not advised as to whether there was or was not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the order be taken subject to the rules. Undoubtedly it will come out all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made subject to the rules of the Senate.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. HALE. I offer a resolution which I ask to have printed and lie over. The reasons for it will be so apparent I think to every Senator's mind that I do not need to go into them at present. I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Ordered, That on and after Monday, April 7, 1890, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that—no, that is a privileged motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I reserve my vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the negative). I see that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] who is ill is not present, and as the vote has taken a substantially political turn I feel bound in honor to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him on political questions.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and therefore can not vote.

Mr. DOLPH. As I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], I think I ought to withhold my vote on this question.

Mr. PADDOCK (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] and feel that I had better withdraw my vote after the statement made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has voted on this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the affirmative). Seeing that pairs are being observed, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] been recorded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not recorded.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON (after having voted in the affirmative). It seems that Senators are withdrawing their votes on account of pairs. Although I think we have a right to vote on a question of adjournment when paired, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DOLPH. I observe that the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] has voted. I understand that he is paired with his colleague [Mr. STANFORD], and I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 23; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 1, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, again we are called upon to mourn the death of an honored member of this House, dear to many upon this floor. In the arms of our sympathy we bring his bereaved family, beseeching Thee to comfort and uphold them as they weep the loss of a beloved husband and a revered father. May they find, in the blessed hope of everlasting life which Thou hast given us in Thy Son, the consolation which can alone support in such an hour of grief. As these solemn lessons of our mortality are taught us from time to time, we pray that Thou wilt bring home to every one of us the sense that the supreme concern of human life is peace with God, through His Son, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in whose sacred name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8782) for the relief of Sarah A. Oakes, legal heir of Capt. Hugh Worthington, deceased, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRACTICE IN UNITED STATES COURTS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a resolution, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, to investigate the practice of certain United States district courts and other officers in criminal cases; and that the House now proceed to consider the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it appears by official reports filed in the Attorney-General's office that the practice of suspending sentence in criminal cases after conviction prevails in many of the district courts of the United States, and particularly in the northern, middle, and southern districts of Alabama; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized to inquire into the extent, cause, and result of such practice and report their findings to the House; and to this end said committee be authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, to employ a stenographer (if needed), to send a subcommittee to such localities to take testimony, and report the same to said committee as may be necessary, said subcommittee to have while so engaged the same powers herein given said Committee on the Judiciary as to taking testimony, and also to employ a clerk if his services are found to be required; that the Sergeant-at-Arms furnish said committee an officer to attend it or said subcommittee, and to serve such process as may be issued by said committee or said subcommittee; and that the expenses of such investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The proposed substitute, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged by the Attorney-General of the United States, and appears by official reports filed in the Department of Justice, that in many of the United States district courts the practice of suspending sentence after conviction in criminal cases prevails without warrant of law; and whereas it also appears, from accounts submitted to the accounting officers of the Treasury for audit and allowance, reports of special agents of the Treasury Department, and information obtained from apparently well informed and credible persons, that in some parts of the country United States district attorneys, marshals, and their deputies, United States commissioners, and clerks of the United States courts have been guilty of maladministration and of corruption in office: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to inquire into the extent, cause, and effect of the alleged illegal practice of the United States district courts wherever the same prevails; and also to investigate any alleged abuse of United States process or other maladministration or corrupt official conduct of any of the officers connected with the judicial department of the Government; and to report its findings to the House, accompanied by bill or otherwise; and to this end said committee be authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, to employ a stenographer, if necessary, to send a subcommittee wherever deemed necessary, to take testimony for the use of said committee; said subcommittee while so engaged to have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given the said Committee on the Judiciary; and may also employ a clerk or stenographer, one or both, if found to be necessary; that the Sergeant-at-Arms, by himself or deputy, attend said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, to execute its orders, and to serve such process as may be issued by said committee or subcommittee; and that the expenses of such investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and that said committee have leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

The substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKING CODE.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a brief explanation of a bill which I have this day introduced (House bill 8897) to establish a national-banking code.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

WIDOW OF THOMAS SETTLE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 3993) for the payment to the widow of Thomas Settle, late district judge for the northern district of Florida, the balance of a year's salary was referred to the Judiciary Committee. That committee reports that it should be referred to the Committee on Claims. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC-BUILDING BILLS.

Bills of the following titles, returned from the Senate with the notification that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives and asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, were severally taken up, the amendments of the House insisted upon, and the request of the Senate for a conference agreed to:

A bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa;

A bill (S. 954) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa; and

A bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FREMONT, NEBR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 533) for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr., said bill having been returned from the Senate with an amendment in the form of a substitute, and with a request for a conference on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be read. The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN (before the reading was concluded). I do not ask for the further reading of the amendment; but I ask that the first part of the House bill may be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. HOLMAN (before the reading was concluded). I do not ask for the further reading.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYORS-GENERAL FOR NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1984) to create the offices of surveyor-general in the States of North and South Dakota. This bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a surveyor-general each for the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, embracing, respectively, one surveying district.

Sec. 2. That the surveyors-general of North Dakota and South Dakota shall each receive a salary at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I withdraw the call for the regular order to allow this bill to be considered, as I understand it is a matter of great public necessity.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] what is the necessity for the passage of this bill? Does not the general law cover this matter?

Mr. PAYSON. Prior to the division of the Territory of Dakota and the admission of the States of North and South Dakota there was a surveyor-general for the Territory, whose office, under the statute, was located at Huron, now in South Dakota. When we provided for the division of the Territory and the admission of North and South Dakota no provision was made, as the gentleman is aware, for these officers. There is now no officer having charge of surveys in North Dakota, and the Interior Department is of opinion that the officer appointed under the statute creating the office of surveyor-general for Dakota Territory has no power in South Dakota. Hence the necessity for the passage of this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARTICLES FOR ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION OF 1890.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5874) to admit free of duty articles intended for the St. Louis Exposition in 1890 which may be imported from the Republic of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from the Republic of Mexico for the sole purpose of exhibition at the St. Louis Exposition, to be held in the city of St. Louis during September and October, in the year 1890, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as shall be sold in the United States or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on the like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of the importation: And provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption or shall be sold without payment of duty, as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal for sale.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Insert, in line 4, after the word "Mexico," "being the growth or product thereof."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRANK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SPOONER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour, which begins at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

NATURALIZATION OF NAVAL RECRUITS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday when the morning hour terminated the House was considering the bill (H. R. 8104) to amend section 2166, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The committee recommend the striking out of all after the enacting clause and inserting:

"That the provisions and benefits of section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and they are hereby, extended to those who enlisted in the Navy of the United States prior to the 1st day of May, 1865, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OATHS IN PENSION AND OTHER CASES.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 578) in relation to oaths in pension and other cases.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all affidavits and declarations to be hereafter made or used in any pension or bounty cases, or in claims against the Government for back pay or arrears or increase of pension, or for quarterly vouchers, or oath of allegiance may be taken by any officer authorized to administer oaths for general purposes in the State, city, or county where said officer resides. If such officer has a seal and uses it upon such paper, no certificate of a county clerk, or prothonotary, or clerk of a court shall be necessary; but when no seal is used by the officer taking such affidavit, then a clerk of a court of record, or a county or city clerk, or prothonotary having a seal shall affix it thereto and shall certify to the signature of said officer, to the effect that such certifying officer believes his signature is genuine.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any and all affidavits and declarations to be hereafter made or used in any pension or bounty cases, or in claims against the Government for back pay or arrears or increase of pension, or for quarterly vouchers may be taken by any officer authorized to administer oaths for general purposes in the State, city, or county where said officer resides. If such officer has a seal and uses it upon such paper, no certificate of a county clerk, or prothonotary, or clerk of a court shall be necessary; but when no seal is used by the officer taking such affidavit, then a clerk of a court of record, or a county or city clerk, shall affix his official seal thereto, and shall certify to the signature and official character of said officer.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTODY OF PRISONERS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I now call up, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 6956) to amend section 790 of the Revised Statutes, with an amendment recommended by the committee.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 790 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows, to wit:

"Sec. 790. Every marshal shall be held responsible for the delivery to his successor of all persons who may be in his custody at the time of his removal or when the term for which he is appointed expires, and for that purpose he may retain such prisoners in his custody until his successor is appointed and qualified."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add to the bill this proviso:

"Provided, That if process is being served at the time the qualification of the marshal's successor is perfected, such service may be completed by the officer serving the same."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPOSITIONS OF WITNESSES, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 843) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in cases pending in the courts of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in cases pending at law or equity in the district and circuit courts of the United States it shall be lawful to take the depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the courts are held.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIMITATIONS OF SUITS AGAINST ACCOUNTING OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 64) to limit the time to six years within which suits may be brought against accounting officers and the sureties on their official bonds.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no suit shall be commenced and prosecuted against any disbursing officer or other person intrusted with any moneys belonging to the United States, or the sureties upon the official bond of any such officer or person, after six years from and after the expiration of the term of such officer or person, or from and after such officer or person ceases from any cause to exercise the functions of such office or trust.

Sec. 2. That no suit shall be commenced or prosecuted against any disbursing officer or person intrusted with moneys belonging to the United States whose term of office has expired or trust ceased before the approval of this act, or against the sureties on the official bond of such, unless such suits be commenced within six years next after the approval of this act.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the report accompanying this bill be read.

Mr. OATES. I will state in brief, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for recommending the passage of the bill. I introduced this bill in the last Congress, and it was favorably reported then without amendment, and is unanimously reported now from the committee. The purpose is to create a statute of limitation of six years, within which time the Government shall bring suit on the bonds of a defaulting officer or his sureties, after he has gone out of office, or whose authority has ceased from any cause. There is now no statute of limitation; and there are often cases arising where an officer had passed out of office, had been removed, resigned, or his term of office had expired, and where no final settlement had been made; yet, perhaps, after the expiration of fifteen or twenty years, when his sureties had a right to suppose that all the accounts had been settled, suits have been brought, and men have been ruined in cases where they were not aware that there was any latent liability.

This bill requires the Government to bring such suit within six years after the officer ceases, from any cause, to perform the functions of his office or after the expiration of his term of office, or else such suit is barred.

Mr. HOOKER. Does it also include suits on the official bond of sureties?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

Mr. HOOKER. That is proper; it should do so.

Mr. HOPKINS. But in the case of an officer whose official term shall expire within six years after this becomes a law it will bar the prosecution of the case against his sureties, as I gather from the reading of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. OATES. It will take six years, after the officer has gone out of office, before the bar of this statute will run; in other words, it will take six years after the approval of this act before the bar is completed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to have the report read?

Mr. OATES. The report, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, contains nothing more than I have already stated in regard to the purposes of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am opposed to the bill. The accounts of officers are often not made up within six years.

Mr. OATES. Does the gentleman say that they can not be made up in that time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I say that often they are not made up in six years.

Mr. OATES. They ought to be.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true, but it is the case, nevertheless, that they are frequently not made up within that time, and the fact that they are not made up is not proof of any neglect on the part of the auditing officers.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OATES. I do not understand what the gentleman desires.

Mr. HOLMAN. At present I wish to hear this report read.

Mr. OATES. Well, then, I will have it read in my time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill No. 64, have had the same under consideration and respectfully recommend that the same do pass.

The effect of the bill is to limit the right of action by the Government against any disbursing officer or other person intrusted with any moneys belonging to the United States, and the sureties upon official bonds, to six years from and after the expiration of the term when such officer or person ceases from any cause to exercise the functions of such office or trust.

The committee believe that the proposed bill, if enacted into law, will have the effect of bringing about speedy settlements by the Government with its disbursing officers and others intrusted with public funds, and will thus save large sums that might otherwise be lost. Whilst effecting this purpose it will prevent those cases of extreme hardship, now far too frequent, where sureties upon official bonds are obliged by the Government to pay large sums of money when no liability was supposed to exist, and after the lapse of so many years that legal defenses that might have existed fail by reason of the fact that the principal or his witnesses or both are dead.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Alabama will allow an amendment to strike out so much of this bill as applies to the disbursing officer himself, and permit it to apply only to the sureties.

Mr. OATES. I can not yield to that, but I will yield the gentleman time if he desires to debate the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not care to discuss this matter unless I have opportunity to submit an amendment. While I sympathize with this measure so far as it affects the sureties, it seems to me that a disbursing officer having charge of public funds ought not to be relieved at the expiration of six years from any action covering any deficit or liability so far as the officer himself is concerned.

Mr. OATES. Six years after the time he ceases to be an officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I am not able to assert it with confidence, yet I feel reasonably certain that many instances can be found where, without any official negligence on the part of the auditing officers, the accounts have not been made up within six years; and while I can sympathize with the sureties, I think that as to the officer himself no such favor ought to be extended as proposed in this bill.

Mr. OATES. The Government ought to be stimulated to make out its accounts and have them settled within six years. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I can now recall quite a number of cases of this character which have come before the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration within the last six years, wherein the defalcations charged were made from fifteen to thirty years ago. Manifestly the law of lapse of time, the death of sureties, the insolvency of the parties, and various facts have occurred during that time make it necessary to exculpate or release the sureties, and the argument of the gentleman from Indiana that the principal ought not to be released is destructive of itself.

In nearly every one of these cases the principal has become insolvent. The very object of the bill is to spur the flanks of the Government and make it bring these parties to a settlement while they are solvent. The sureties ought to be discharged and the other party exculpated if the Government does not find any defalcation in the accounts of the officer within six years after the time of his going out of office. If the Government does not settle its accounts within that time, it is one of the very highest reasons to make it do its duty in order that the people may be protected from these defaulting officers. So that I conceive that the very argument that the gentleman from Indiana makes destroys itself and illustrates the necessity of a bill of this character, which will compel the Government to bring suits within a reasonable time after the defalcations of its officers. That is in the interest of the Government and of the people.

Mr. OATES. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I indulge in the prediction that if this bill is passed many an embezzler of the public funds will be relieved thereby.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there is no other bill from our committee ready for action this morning except a bill fixing the time and place for holding courts in the State of Washington. It is a Senate bill. That bill was reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary this morning, but is not accompanied by any written report and could not be. If it is in order, I would like to submit it; if not, I will withhold it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman sends up the bill and no point of order is made against it, it can be considered.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2653) to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Washington shall constitute one judicial district.

SEC. 2. That the circuit court of the United States in and for the State of Washington shall be held at the times and places provided by law for the holding of the United States district court in and for said district, and one grand and one petit jury only shall be summoned to serve in both said courts when held at the same place.

SEC. 3. That, for the purpose of holding terms of the district court, said district shall be divided into four divisions, to be known as the eastern, southern, northern, and western divisions. The counties of Spokane, Stevens, Okanogan, Douglas, Lincoln, Adams, and Kittitas, including any and all Indian reservations in one or more of said counties, shall constitute the eastern division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Spokane Falls. The counties of Whitman, Asotin, Garfield, Columbia, Walla Walla, Franklin, Yakima, and Kiklat, including any and all Indian reservations in one or more of said counties, shall constitute the southern division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Walla Walla. The counties of Whatcom, Skagit, San Juan, Island, Snohomish, Clallam, Jefferson, Kitsap, and King, including any and all Indian reservations in one or more of said counties, shall constitute the northern division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Seattle. The counties of Pierce, Mason, Thurston, Chehalis, Pacific, Lewis, Wahkiakum, Cowlitz, Clarke, and Skamania, including any and all Indian reservations in one or more of said counties, shall constitute the western division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Tacoma.

SEC. 4. That all civil suits not of a local character, which shall be brought in the district or circuit courts of the United States for the district of Washington, in either of the said divisions against a single defendant, or where all the defendants reside in the same division of said district, shall be brought in the division in which the defendant or defendants reside, or, if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions, such suit may be brought in either division, and all process subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or all of said divisions. All issues of fact in civil cases triable in any of the said courts shall be tried in the division where the defendant or one of the defendants resides, unless by consent of both parties the case shall be removed to some other division.

SEC. 5. That the clerk of the circuit and district courts for said district shall each appoint a deputy clerk at the place where their respective courts are required to be held in the division of the district in which such clerk shall not himself reside, each of whom shall, in the absence of the clerk, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of clerk within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the court for which they shall have been respectively appointed, and may be annulled by such court at its pleasure, and the clerks shall be responsible for the official acts and negligence of all such deputies.

SEC. 6. That the terms of the district court for the district of the State of Washington shall be held at the city of Spokane Falls on the first Tuesday of September and April in each year, at the city of Walla Walla on the first Tuesday of November and May in each year, at the city of Seattle on the first Tuesday of December and June in each year, and at the city of Tacoma on the first Tuesday in February and July of each year. And the provision of statute now existing for the holding of said courts on the first Monday in April and November in each year is hereby repealed, and all suits, prosecutions, process, recognizances, bail bonds, and other things pending in or returnable to said court on the days last named are hereby transferred to and shall be made returnable to and have force in the said respective terms in this act provided, in the same manner and with the same effect as they would have had had said existing statute not been passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTINUING PUBLICATION OF SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill (S. 567) to continue the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes, embracing the statutes general and permanent in their nature, passed after the Revised Statutes, with references connecting provisions on the same subject, explanatory notes, and citations of judicial decisions, be continued and issued in one volume, to include the general laws of the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses, with a table of alterations and a general index to the whole, to be prepared and edited by the editor of the existing Supplement, authorized by the joint resolution of June 28, 1890, numbered 44 (Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 582), to be stereotyped at the Government Printing Office, using the present plates, as far as practicable, with such alterations as may be found necessary; the work and plates and all right and title therein and thereto to be in and fully belong to the Government for its exclusive use and benefit.

SEC. 2. That a sufficient number of copies be printed and bound for distribution, and to be distributed to members of Congress for themselves, and for distribution by them, to the Departments, libraries, public officers, and others, the same number to each as heretofore provided by Congress for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the same number to the editor as to a member of Congress, and such additional copies on the order of the Secretary of State as may be necessary from time to time to supply deficiencies and offices newly created, and for keeping for sale in the same manner and like terms as the Revised Statutes are required to be kept for sale. For preparing and editing said supplement, including the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress, and the indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete the same, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $6,000.

SEC. 3. That the publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained, but shall not change nor alter any existing law, nor preclude reference to nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act passed by Congress.

Mr. OATES. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and is for the continuation of the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does it carry an appropriation?

Mr. OATES. It does; but I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is proper for the Chair to say to the House that this is not strictly within the rule for business during the morning hour, and would, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, it is a measure in which every one is interested, and I presume no one will object to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought it its duty to inform the House.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what is the pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. The pending proposition is the third reading of the Senate bill 567, providing for continuing the publication of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary request me to ask for a change of reference of the bill (H. R. 313) to prohibit the formation of interstate trusts and trade conspiracies, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. That should be made at another time. The Chair would suggest immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ROGERS. I had some little doubt about that question, and expressed it to the chairman.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I also had some doubt.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will present it to-morrow at the proper hour.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The other day the Chair omitted to call the select committees, and thinks now they ought to be called if the mistake puts them at any disadvantage.

The Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States was called.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be passed without prejudice.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

The Committee on Banking and Currency was called.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Banking and Currency be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee on Commerce was called.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Commerce desire to present certain bills, and I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OCONEE.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7933) to amend section 4 of "An act authorizing the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River at or near Dublin, in said county and State," approved June 18, 1888.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of "An act to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River at or near Dublin, in said county and State," approved June 18, 1888, which reads as follows: "That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the time this act takes effect, and be completed within four years after its commencement, then this act shall be void," be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to read as follows: "That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within three years from the 1st day of January, 1891, and be completed within four years after its commencement, then this act shall be void."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

LINE-CARRYING PROJECTILES.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8239) to amend section 4488, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, as amended by Chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4406, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, as amended by Chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: By adding to the said amended section the following words: "Provided, That so much of the foregoing provisions as relates to line-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them shall not be construed as applicable to steamers plying exclusively upon any of the lakes, bays, or sounds of the United States."

SEC. 2. That this act take effect from the date of its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this bill explained.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report read or else a statement of the object of the bill.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill I will say that the act of the Fiftieth Congress upon this subject requires all steamers to carry, in addition to life-preservers and life-boats, certain life-saving appliances for the throwing on shore of life-lines, so called. It is proposed by this act to exempt from the operation of that law steamers which navigate solely the inland waters of the United States, while leaving the law in full force in its application to ocean vessels. In further explanation of the reason for this proposed legislation—and gentlemen will remember that it was brought up incidentally on Saturday last when the time for the taking effect of the law was extended for one year—in further explanation I will say that upon the passage of the law requiring these appliances to be carried on steamers certain life-line-carrying instruments were greatly increased in price. The requirement of the law is, as I conceive, an eminently proper one in relation to vessels navigating the ocean or along other coasts where there are life-patrols; but upon bays and sounds, and in regions where there are no such patrols, the law simply entails an expense upon the vessels, a large number of which are small, and at the same time is of no practical benefit for the saving of life.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not possible to frame legislation which will provide some method to be used by steamers for getting a line on shore without subjecting them to the extortion of any particular inventor or manufacturer.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. In response to that I will say that upon a large portion of the mileage of the shores of the inland waters there would be no one to receive the line if it were thrown ashore. The provisions of the law require the appliances that are used to be approved by the officials of the Treasury Department. Three such appliances have been approved by the Department, the Hunt gun, the Lisle gun, and the Cunningham rocket, and it would not be a compliance with the law to use any other methods. In fact, to use any instruments except those approved by the Department would entail a fine of $1,000 upon the vessel, as well as a forfeiture of its license.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What amendment does your committee propose to the law?

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. The proposed amendment is to relieve vessels on the inland waters, but not ocean vessels, from the requirement that they shall carry these life-line-throwing appliances, the belief being that, in the shallower depths in which they run, the other provisions of law providing for life-preservers, life-boats, and life-rafts afford ample security.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to hear from some of the gentlemen on the Lake shores upon this point. There is a very large commerce on the Great Lakes.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. There have been numerous requests from the lake-shore region directly in the line of this proposed legislation. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] was before the committee as representing the lake interests, and also ex-Senator Conger, representing the same interests, asking the enactment of this very legislation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But did not those gentlemen represent rather the steamboat interests than the interests of the people to be benefited by these life-saving appliances?

Mr. BREWER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Senate bill which we passed here the other day did not relate to this subject and was not somewhat similar to this bill.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. That bill suspended for one year the operation of the law of last Congress as to all steamers, both ocean-going and on inland waters. This bill proposes to fix the law definitely upon the expiration of that extension of time.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman state whether the extraordinary advance in the price of these rockets and other appliances after they had been approved by the Treasury Department was not one of the reasons which suggested this proposed repeal.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. It is one of the very important reasons.

Mr. BREWER. Does this bill propose to substitute anything in the place of the requirement of the existing law?

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. It does not.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS IOWA RIVER.

Mr. BAKER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWENEY], that he may call up two bills.

Mr. SWENEY. On behalf of the committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 8296) to allow the erection of bridges across the Iowa River at and below Wapello, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the laws of Iowa, any person, corporation, or association may erect and maintain railroad or wagon and foot-passenger bridges or railroad and wagon and foot-passenger bridges across and over the Iowa River, within the State of Iowa, between the mouth of said river and the town of Wapello, in Louisa County, Iowa, and at said town of Wapello; and in said bridge or bridges no draw shall be required.

Sec. 2. That the right to modify, alter, or amend this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to inquire whether there is any navigation on this river where these bridges are to be constructed?

Mr. SWENEY. There is not, practically, any navigation there, and has not been for nearly thirty years. The report of the committee includes a letter on this subject from the Army engineer. This portion of this river, embracing 21 miles, all in one county, is not, and for many years has not been, navigable except occasionally when there was very high water. This measure is desired by all the people living along the river.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS, FIFTH DISTRICT.

Mr. SWENEY. I now call up the bill (H. R. 278) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended as follows: Strike out the word "Galena," in said paragraph 3, and insert the word "Dubuque."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the nature of this bill is not indicated by the proposed amendment. I hope the bill itself will be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWENEY], who has charge of the bill, can explain it.

Mr. SWENEY. The report of the committee gives an explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I waive my request.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has very pertinently asked for an explanation of this bill. I will explain it. It is a bill to take two public offices from a town on the east side of the Mississippi River, in my district, and transfer them across the river to a town in the district of my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]—the town where he resides. Two inspectors, one of hulls and one of boilers, are now at Galena, in public offices built at great expense, where they have been for many years, where they are well accommodated, as are the public. This proposition is to take them across the river to Dubuque, where the public building is now overcrowded, as I learn from a Dubuque paper which has been handed me, which says of the United States Government building there:

The building is not adequate to the needs of the Government offices here—

This is a report of the statement made at a meeting of the board of trade—and the assistant superintendent of public buildings is now under orders to come to Dubuque and report on the needs of the Government here.

It was suggested at this meeting that the Government might be induced to build a $500,000 custom-house if the county would buy the old building and proper representations were made.

Supervising Inspector Sloan was at the town of Galena recently, since this bill was brought to the House, and I have a telegram—there has not been time for much communication—that he then declared that he preferred that the offices should remain at Galena. I will give the language that was communicated to me by the mayor's telegram:

Supervising Inspector John D. Sloan was here yesterday, and he is earnest in his statement that the public is as well served by the officers being in Galena as they could possibly be in Dubuque.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Illinois will allow me to ask as to the location of Galena with reference to the river—

Mr. HITT. About three miles and a half distant from the Mississippi River.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And whether it is entirely convenient in all stages of water for large steam-boats to go to Galena.

Mr. HITT. I will explain the facilities of the inspectors. Galena, formerly an active port, is also a railway station; there are three railways giving quick communication with every place up and down the river. The inspectors uniformly go to the boats and they go by rail.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman caught correctly the question I asked, which was this: Is Galena so situated that in all stages of water the boats to be inspected can go to Galena?

Mr. HITT. They can not go there ordinarily.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not necessary they should.

Mr. HITT. But the inspectors go from their offices to the boats.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then, as I understand, matters are so fixed that the inspectors can go down to the boats by rail. Now, if these offices be removed to Dubuque, would the inspectors still have to go by rail?

Mr. HITT. They would.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Could they not then go by street car?

Mr. HITT. The case is not as the gentleman thinks. A boat is inspected generally where it is owned. The headquarters of a boat is its place of ownership. They are inspected whenever and wherever they are ready. There are more owned at La Crosse than at Dubuque. They are owned at Davenport, at Clinton, and at points all along the river; and the inspectors, being summoned by telegram or note, go to the boats whenever they are required to be inspected. I know that Captain Scott, the late inspector, now deceased, who at one time, for family reasons, lived at Dubuque, did not generally inspect boats there; he was going to different points on the river all the while.

Now, the steam-boat men have been canvassed for the purpose of securing petitions on this subject. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] stated the other day that he had been seven years working at this matter. He has, no doubt, done it well. We all know how the petition business, when conducted by men of great ability, as the gentleman from Iowa undoubtedly is, backed, too, as he is by many friends who have local interest and influence in Dubuque, can induce the presentation of a great number of names.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. I made no such statement; but I said that the shipping interests of the Mississippi River, the owners of the shipping interests of that river, had for eight years been knocking at the doors of Congress to have these offices, not the officers (for one of them has been at Dubuque any way), taken from Galena, 12 miles by rail from the Mississippi River, and located on the river.

These are the interests which have fought for it. I have simply tried to present their wishes.

Mr. HITT. You will have an opportunity.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to correct you.

Mr. HITT. You will have an opportunity to state your case. Boatmen of the Mississippi undoubtedly, at Dubuque with local interests, would be unanimous. They would be as enthusiastically unanimous to get that as a public building or anything else.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. They are unanimous from St. Paul to Keokuk—not at Dubuque alone.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa must not interrupt without the gentleman's consent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I supposed the gentleman gave his graceful tacit assent.

Mr. HOPKINS. He dared not refuse you, you went at him so fiercely.

The SPEAKER. It would be difficult for the gentleman, under the circumstances, to do anything else than assent. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITT. I gave way to the gentleman when he first rose, supposing he would ask, as he usually does, some pointed question. He only answered the question which had arisen in his own mind. He will have a chance to state his views further on.

The boating interest at any place desires local advantage, which is natural. Every gentleman knows that who has a public-building question brought to his attention. These buildings or offices at Galena, which were erected for the purpose of public business, have served that public business well. The Government has expended there over $70,000. Do you propose vacating them in order to facilitate this project of bringing on a $500,000 building, a great structure to be erected at Dubuque? Undoubtedly that is a popular scheme at Dubuque. This Dubuque paper says: "The office is of no particular benefit to Galena, but would be a big thing for Dubuque."

River men are divided on this question by local influence. From a carefully made statement before me in a Galena paper, the Gazette, it appears that "exclusive of roustabouts, there are three times as many steam-boat men live in Galena as in Dubuque." It is an ancient seat of commerce, a strong old town, and the owners of these boats are there yet, and steam-boat men of all kinds are there in great numbers.

It is not on the immediate bank of the Mississippi River; the stream that passes through Galena is at present obstructed and the harbor impaired, but it is the place where this public business has been done so satisfactorily that, when I inquired at the Treasury if there were complaints of the fact that the offices were at Galena or the inspectors had not been prompt and faithful and convenient, I could find none. I have given you the latest word of the officer of the Government who has charge of that duty on the ground.

This matter was suddenly brought before the House for consideration a short time ago, and was, at my request, referred back to the committee, which of course adhered to its original decision. I asked for further time, which the House was courteous enough to give me, that I might present my constituents' side properly in the committee, but as was expected the committee adhered to its decision, as committees usually do.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, this House will not change two public offices from the place where they have been for a lifetime, where they have served the convenience of commerce, where they have been at the call of steam-boats, and have never failed. I know of no complaint of their failing to be present when their duty required them for inspection. Railroads take them quickly up and down the river, for the river is lined on both sides with convenient railroad stations, and inspectors meet boats at whatever point is required. I trust the House will reject the bill.

Mr. SWENEY. I wish to make an explanation. I had no opportunity to make it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take any time of the House unnecessarily—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to rise for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. HATCH. Then I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to yield to me for a moment or two.

Mr. SWENEY. I will yield to the gentleman for a few minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I do not propose to take any part in the personal controversy between the two distinguished gentlemen who represent these districts upon opposite sides of the Mississippi River. I have the highest feeling of regard for both of them, outside of their politics. But I want to state to the House what I know of the facts of this case, as coming from that class of citizens most directly interested in the change suggested by this bill.

I was up the Mississippi River on two or three occasions last spring, as late as August, and had occasion to confer with steam-boat men with whom I came in contact, either on the steam-boats or in connection with them, at different points on the river, and found that all with whom I conversed were most earnestly in favor of this transfer and gave their reasons for it. Many of the large shippers, large lumbermen, and those interested in the carrying trade of the river talked to me from day to day and most earnestly requested, when this measure came up for consideration in Congress, that I would support it, and they gave me their reasons in favor of it. I did not see a single steam-boat man connected with any of the lines on the Upper Mississippi River who was not seriously and earnestly urging it, and without taking any part in the personal feeling between these gentlemen on this question I hope the House will vote for the bill in the interest of the steam-boat men and in the interest of the carrying trade of the Upper Mississippi River.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman live on the west side of the Mississippi River?

Mr. HATCH. He does, and is proud of it.

Mr. HOPKINS. And these offices are to be transferred from the east to the west side if the bill passes?

Mr. HATCH. They are. But I will state to the gentleman that I do not even live in the inspection district and have no more interest, except as a citizen of the Mississippi Valley, than any other man living in that whole region of country. I live in the St. Louis inspection district; but am very proud that I am on the west side of the river.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, the east side are proud in the same manner.

Mr. SWENEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the House Committee on Commerce with the recommendation that it should be passed by the House; but upon the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] it was referred back to the committee in order that he might have a hearing before the committee should act finally upon it. That hearing was had and the committee have reported the bill again and recommend its passage, without any minority report, there being only one vote in the committee, I believe, against it, the member from Illinois.

Galena used to be a city of considerable commercial importance, but it has long ceased to be such, and the 6 miles of bayous leading from the Mississippi River to Galena have long since filled up entirely or almost entirely with mud, and navigation has ceased.

A project is before Congress at the present time for the appropriation of $190,000 for the purpose of opening up a channel of 6 miles for navigation from the river to Galena.

This bill proposes to transfer the office of inspector of hulls and boilers from a town 6 miles from the Mississippi River to a town located upon the river, though it is on the west side. That is all the bill proposes.

The Supervising Inspector-General of Hulls and Boilers as long ago as 1881 recommended urgently that this change should be made, and there is no reason why this legislation should longer be delayed or this office should longer be located at Galena. The committee believe the bill should be adopted for these and other reasons, which are fully stated in the report; and now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the House has been placed in possession of all the facts by the discussion, and is sufficiently informed to act upon the matter, and I therefore move the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3891) making an appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. BREWER. I desire that the bill should be read by paragraphs, but I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the bill should be read at length.

Mr. BREWER. Then let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present to the House as briefly as possible the reasons which have induced the Committee on Appropriations to present this bill, and to ask its consideration. For fifteen years and more those at the head of the Executive Department of the Government have been calling the attention of Congress and the country to the defenseless condition of our seacoast and urging that steps be taken to put the same in a reasonable state of defense. Let me call your attention to what has been said upon this point by the later Presidents as well as by their Secretaries of War.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENTS HARRISON, CLEVELAND, ARTHUR, AND HAYES, AND SECRETARIES OF WAR PROCTOR, ENDICOTT, AND LINCOLN AS TO SEACOAST DEFENSES.

[President Harrison, in annual message, first session Fifty-first Congress, 1889.]

Judged by modern standards, we are practically without coast defenses. Many of the structures we have would enhance rather than diminish the perils of their garrisons if subjected to the fire of improved guns; and very few are so located as to give full effect to the greater range of such guns as we are now making for coast-defense uses. This general subject has had consideration in Congress for some years, and the appropriation for the construction of large rifled guns, made one year ago, was, I am sure, the expression of a purpose to provide suitable works in which these guns might be mounted. An appropriation now made for that purpose would not advance the completion of the works beyond our ability to supply them with fairly effective guns.

The security of our coast cities against foreign attack should not rest altogether in the friendly disposition of other nations. There should be a second line wholly in our own keeping. I very urgently recommend an appropriation at this session for the construction of such works in our most exposed harbors.

[President Cleveland, in annual message, second session Forty-ninth Congress, 1886.]

The defenseless condition of our seacoast and lake frontier is perfectly palpable; the examinations made must convince us all that certain of our cities named in the report of the board should be fortified, and that work on the most important of these fortifications should be commenced at once; the work has been thoroughly considered and laid out in the Secretary of War reports, but all is delayed in default of Congressional action.

The absolute necessity, judged by all standards of prudence and foresight, of our preparation for an effectual resistance against the armored ships and steel guns and mortars of modern construction which may threaten the cities on our coasts is so apparent that I hope effective steps will be taken in that direction immediately.

The valuable and suggestive treatment of this question by the Secretary of War is earnestly commended to the consideration of the Congress.

[President Arthur, in annual message, second session Forty-eighth Congress, 1884.]

The Secretary of War submits the report of the Chief of Engineers as to the practicability of protecting our important cities on the seaboard by fortifications and other defenses able to repel modern methods of attack. The time has now come when such defenses can be prepared with confidence that they will not prove abortive; and, when the possible result of delay in making such preparation is seriously considered, delay seems inexcusable. For the most important cities—those whose destruction or capture would be a national humiliation—adequate defenses, inclusive of guns, may be made by the gradual expenditure of $50,000,000, a sum much less than a victorious enemy could levy as a contribution. An appropriation of about one-tenth of that amount is asked to begin the work, and I concur with the Secretary of War in urging that it be granted.

The War Department is proceeding with the conversion of 10-inch smooth-bore guns into 8-inch rifles, by lining the former with tubes of forged steel or of coiled wrought-iron. Fifty guns will be thus converted within the year. This, however, does not obviate the necessity of providing means for the construction of guns of the highest power, both for the purposes of coast defense and for the armament of war vessels.

The report of the gun foundry board, appointed April 2, 1883, in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1883, was transmitted to Congress in a special message of February 18, 1884. In my message of March 26, 1884, I called attention to the recommendation of the board that the Government should encourage the production at private steel works of the required material for heavy cannon, and that two Government factories, one for the Army and one for the Navy, should be established for the fabrication of guns from such material. No action having been taken, the board was subsequently reconvened to determine more fully the plans and estimates necessary for carrying out its recommendation. It has received information which indicates that there are responsible steel manufacturers in this country who, although not provided at present with the necessary plant, are willing to construct the same and to make bids for contracts with the Government for the supply of the requisite material for the heaviest guns adapted to modern warfare, if a guaranteed order of sufficient magnitude, accompanied by a positive appropriation extending over a series of years, shall be made by Congress. All doubts as to the feasibility of the plan being thus removed, I renew my recommendation that such action be taken by Congress as will enable the Government to construct its own ordnance upon its own territory, and so to provide the armaments demanded by considerations of national safety and honor.

[President Hayes, in annual message last session, Forty-sixth Congress, 1890.]

Special attention is asked to the report of the Chief of Engineers upon the condition of our national defenses. From a personal inspection of many of the fortifications referred to, the Secretary is able to emphasize the recommendations made, and to state that their incomplete and defenseless condition is discreditable to the country. While other nations have been increasing their means for carrying on offensive warfare and attacking maritime cities, we have been dormant in preparations for defense. Nothing of importance has been done toward strengthening and finishing our casemated works since our late civil war, during which the great guns of modern warfare and the heavy armor of modern fortifications and ships came into use among the nations, and our earthworks, left by a sudden failure of appropriations some years since, in all stages of incompleteness, are now being rapidly destroyed by the elements.

COAST DEFENSE.

I assume that the exposed condition of our seacoast requires no proof, nor the necessity of defending it any argument. If there is an apparent sense of security among our people it is born not of ignorance, but of thoughtlessness. Although our position and the traditions of our national diplomacy tend to the maintenance of peace, a defenseless condition will ever invite attack. The actual value of the property thus exposed to a public enemy, although many times the cost of amply protecting it, bears but little proportion to the magnitude of the material interests of the whole nation equally endangered thereby. It is not a local question. Not only is the national honor alike dear to all, but a hostile shell in the streets of New York strikes the prairies as well; their corn and wheat share in the loss. Still the greater burden will fall upon the States contiguous to the seaboard in the immediate maintenance of the militia required to man the defenses in case of danger.

Celerity promises to be an essential element in any warfare of the future. We have shown our ability to equip and place in the field with rapidity large numbers of men, and could undoubtedly do so again. The defenses and the armament, however, necessary for withstanding the attacks of modern guns cannot be extemporized. We must substantially have them before the necessity arises. Their creation is not a matter of hours and days, but of months and years. Hence I deem it quite as self-evident that if we are to have such works at all they should be begun earnestly and systematically at once.

I submit as a basis to start from that no time is to be lost in placing the Capital of the country, the commercial metropolis on the Atlantic seaboard, and at least one port on the Pacific in the best possible state of defense. How rapidly the work shall be carried on until it embraces every important vulnerable point from the St. John's to the Rio Grande and the ports of the Pacific is the only question. In my view progress can not be too rapid. The major-general commanding has given in detail the requirements in armament and men for the Atlantic and the Gulf coast, and General Miles has devoted special attention to the defenses of the Pacific and made an excellent report thereon.

Not only does this subject demand attention now, but fortunately our general prosperity points to the present as the auspicious time for pressing the work. I trust, therefore, that Congress will make a liberal appropriation for this purpose. We are making excellent progress with our Navy, but it has no safe base for repairs and supplies or harbor of refuge in case of accident or disaster. It is impossible to overestimate the services it will render in encouraging and protecting our commerce. But however important it may be to carry our flag to foreign ports, to defend it in our own is imperative.

[W. C. Endicott, Secretary of War, annual report for the fiscal year 1898.]

The attention of Congress is again invited to the defenseless condition of our seacoast and lakefrontiers. The last appropriation for the permanent defenses of the country was made in 1875, and has long since been exhausted. The importance of immediate and liberal action looking to the effective defense of our principal seaports has been fully set forth in previous reports, especially in that of November 30, 1886. It would appear now more important than ever that such action should be taken at the second session of the present Congress, in view of the fact that the last session gave appropriations for the construction of heavy ordnance. Without heavy platforms, strong armored protection, and other permanent emplacements, these guns and mortars when finished will be of comparatively little use.

The building of modern gun and mortar batteries requires longer periods of time than the construction of the armament. It would appear the part of wisdom that the preparation of these two important components of a well equipped defense should proceed simultaneously. For the beginning of the construction of such defenses an appropriation of $2,840,000 is asked for.

For the preservation and repair of the existing works, many of which are still of great value for secondary defense or as important parts of the contemplated new primary defense, no funds have been available since the appropriation of March 3, 1885. The consequent rapid and extensive deterioration is fully set forth in the report of the Chief of Engineers. For the preservation and repair of existing works $200,000 is requested.

[Robert T. Lincoln, Secretary of War, annual report for the fiscal year 1884.]

The Chief of Engineers presents in his annual report a review of the modern requirements for the defense of our important seacoast cities, and in his comprehensive but brief discussion shows not only the urgent necessity of beginning the defensive works which can not be improvised, but their small cost in comparison with our national resources. Steel forts and turrets to resist guns which can send a projectile weighing a ton through 60 feet of sand, and which must themselves have like guns, with steam machinery to load and manipulate them, can not be built in the short time which would be given us by an enemy for preparation after the cessation of diplomatic intercourse; and, as is said by the Chief of Engineers, "the contribution which could be levied from New York alone would probably pay four or five fold the cost of all the fortifications of the important harbors of the country." I trust that the earnest attention of Congress may be invited to this subject, and that adequate appropriations may be made to carry out the views of the Chief of Engineers.

The estimates upon which the bill is based will be found in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1891 (pages 165-167), and aggregate $8,488,998, of which sum there is recommended $4,521,678, being $3,967,320 less than the estimates, $3,288,084 more than the amount appropriated by the act making appropriations for fortifications, etc., passed at the last session of Congress, and $599,678 more than was appropriated by the act passed at the first session of that Congress.

From 1875 to 1886, both inclusive, the average annual appropriations for fortification purposes were only $463,500, and there were no specific appropriations made for fortification purposes for the years 1887 and 1888. The appropriations made for the years 1875 to 1886, inclusive, were made principally for the purpose of keeping our old forts in repair, and in changing our old smooth-bore heavy guns by the insertion of a steel rifled tube into the bore thereof. Under an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, a board called the "gun foundry board" was created to fully consider the question of ordnance, the manner of its production, and what steps should be taken by the Government touching the manufacture of heavy guns. The report of this board was transmitted to Congress by the President on February 18, 1884. The board visited all the principal heavy-gun factories in England, France, and Germany, as well as those in Russia and other countries, and its report contained much valuable information touching the subject-matter of its investigation. This board substantially recommended that policy which was afterward adopted by Congress; that is, that the forgings should be produced at private works by contract, while the finishing and assembling of the guns should be done by the Government at its own works. During the first session of the Fiftieth Congress there was a determined effort put forth looking towards carrying out the recommendation of President Cleveland and his immediate predecessors.

Under the act of Congress of September 22, 1888, Congress appropriated for fortifications and coast defenses $3,922,000, and of this amount $1,500,000 was for rough steel forgings for 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch guns, and $250,000 was for 12-inch breech-loading mortars, and $700,000 for the construction of a portion of the Watervliet arsenal, and for suitable machinery, tools, and fixtures for the assembling and finishing of such 8, 10, and 12 inch steel guns. Under such act of appropriation for the furnishing rough steel forgings, a contract was entered into with the Bethlehem Iron Company, at South Bethlehem, Pa., on January 31, 1889, for the production of twenty-three sets for 8-inch guns, twenty-four sets for 10-inch guns, and fifteen sets for 12-inch guns, and such other additional forgings as the Government should require under such appropriation, at the prices stated.

It is estimated that the sum of $1,500,000 thus appropriated will pay for the number of steel forgings mentioned and perhaps one set of 10-inch forgings extra, and that such rough steel forgings will be furnished as follows:

	8-inch guns.	10-inch guns.	12-inch guns.

The entire number, sixty-two sets, will thus be delivered in about five years from date of contract, January, 1889.

Several of the 8-inch forgings have been delivered, and one 8-inch gun has been completed at the Watervliet arsenal, and tested to a certain extent, as stated in letter which I here append.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington D. C., March 26, 1890.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 20th instant, in relation to the first steel gun turned out at Watervliet arsenal, I have the honor to state as follows: An 8-inch gun was completed at the Watervliet arsenal during the latter part of last year. The steel of which this gun is made is entirely of American manufacture and was obtained from the Midvale Steel Works, Nicetown, Philadelphia, Pa. The weight of the gun is about 14 tons and the length of bore about 32 calibers.

The gun is now at Sandy Hook and has been fired some twenty rounds, with charges, after the fifth round, of from 113 to 140 pounds in weight and a projectile of 300 pounds weight. The best result obtained was with a charge of 140 pounds of German brown prismatic powder. The velocity with a 300-pound shot was 1,957 feet, and the pressure about 18 tons per square inch. The muzzle energy was 7,965 foot-tons, which is the highest power, so far as known, that has been developed from any gun of 8 inches caliber. The gun is in perfectly sound condition and further firings will be made to work up a suitable powder of American manufacture.

Very respectfully,

S. V. BENÉT,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. M. L. BREWER,
Chairman Subcommittee on Fortifications Bill,
House of Representatives.

In accordance with the act of appropriation of September 22, 1888, the ordnance board proceeded to construct the north wing of the arsenal and to let the contract for the necessary machinery to put therein. The building on the north wing and central part has been nearly completed, but much of the heavy machinery has not yet been finished. Part of the machinery it will take nearly four years to complete from the time the contract was let.

As I have stated, $700,000 was appropriated for the construction of the north wing and for the machinery to put therein, and it will require $165,000 more to complete the payment for such machinery, and this sum we have recommended in this bill. When this portion of the building shall be fully supplied with the requisite machinery, so that it may be run to its full capacity, it will have an annual output of twenty-four guns, twelve 8-inch, seven 10-inch, and five 12-inch.

In 1883 Congress created a board known as the "board of fortification or other defenses," which was composed of officers of the Army and the Navy and certain civilians, and this board, after full investigation, submitted its report to Congress January 23, 1886, giving specific recommendations and detailed estimates touching the defenses and armaments required. It named twenty-seven ports in order of urgency requiring fortification or other defenses, of which number, eleven points were specified as most urgently requiring the same: New York, San Francisco, Boston, Lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Portland, and Rhode Island ports. To complete the fortifications needed at these ports it will require about 434 of the steel guns and 552 of the mortars. For the twenty-seven ports urgently in need of defense it is estimated that it will require 571 steel guns and 742 of the breech-loading mortars. To complete the guns required for the fortifying of the eleven named ports it will take, with the present or completed capacity of the Watervliet arsenal (not including the south wing), twenty-one years, and to supply the necessary guns for the twenty-seven ports mentioned it would take about twenty-eight years. Should the south wing of Watervliet arsenal be completed and the machinery put in, as this bill provides for, the total capacity of the arsenal would be annually about 46 guns, as follows: Twelve 8-inch, fourteen 10-inch, and twenty 12-inch. With this output annually, it would take about thirteen years to produce the steel guns for the eleven ports named, and fifteen years to furnish the steel guns for the twenty-seven ports mentioned, after the factory was in condition to run at its full capacity. It will require to complete the building for the south wing $248,743, and to purchase and supply the requisite machinery therefor $780,000, or a total of $1,028,743. Fully believing that the Watervliet arsenal should be completed so as to produce the greatest number of guns mentioned, annually, we have put in this bill the amount required for the construction of the building and the putting in the requisite machinery. It will require from sixteen to eighteen months to complete the building of the south wing, while to construct the heavy machinery entire it will require nearly four years from the time the contracts shall be made. This appropriation is most urgently asked for by the Secretary of War, and by the Ordnance Board, and the Chief of Ordnance, and I feel fully convinced that good business policy, as well as the welfare and safety of our country, demands it. After mature deliberation it has been thought best not to enter upon the production of guns above 12-inch caliber for the present. The utility and durability as well as the effectiveness of such guns are very much a matter of conjecture or doubt. The south wing of the Watervliet arsenal, when completed, will be large enough to finish or assemble 16-inch guns by enlarging the machinery therein.

By the act of September 22, 1888, Congress appropriated $250,000 for the procuring of 12-inch breech-loading mortars, hooped with steel, and under said act a contract was entered into with the Builders' Iron Foundry, of Providence, for the rough turned and bored cast-iron bodies for such mortars, and with the Midvale Steel Company for the trunnion hoops and the breech mechanism therefor. Contract was also made with the Builders' Iron Foundry, of Providence, for the finishing and assembling of such mortars. The total cost of such mortars under the contracts mentioned will be $7,970 each, and the $250,000 appropriated will pay for thirty mortars when completed. We have recommended the appropriation of $250,000 in this bill for the further production of such mortars, and we estimate the same will complete thirty more. These mortars are said to be very effective weapons in coast defense. Some of them have been completed and one has been very thoroughly tested by the Ordnance Board. They are made of cast-iron, hooped with steel; weight, 14.25 tons; caliber, 12 inches; length, 10.75 feet; length of bore, 9 feet; weight of powder charge, 80 pounds; weight of projectile, 630 pounds; initial velocity, 1,152 feet per second; range at maximum elevation, 6 miles.

But if we provide for the construction of guns we must necessarily prepare for the placing of the same by the construction of batteries, forts, etc. Previous to the late war our seacoast was in a fair state of defense, when we consider the weight and effective power of the guns of that time. Our fortifications were then armed with the smooth-bore cast-iron gun, with less than one-half the range of the guns of today. Our forts were located with reference to the shortness of the range of the enemies' guns as well as those of our own. To-day the location of many of our forts, as well as the guns with which they are armed, makes them almost useless for defensive purposes. Take the forts about the harbor of New York. Castle William and other forts on Governor's Island are entirely useless for defensive purposes. This is so with regard to forts near other cities. The line of defense about New York must now be out about Sandy Hook, and the guns we are now providing for must be placed in forts and batteries at Sandy Hook, Coney Island, and at the Narrows. The armor-clad ships of war of England, France, and other countries, armed with the 8, 10, and 12 inch steel guns, can safely rest at anchor 12 miles from Castle Garden and plant their missiles of death and destruction at the subtreasury in New York.

Many of the inner forts about our seacoast cities are now armed or being armed by such cast-iron guns as have been lined with rifled steel tubes, and such guns for the present will answer a good purpose, as the range will not generally be very great and their power of penetration at short range makes them quite effective. They are said to have a range of some 6 miles, with a penetrating power of some 6 or 8 inches. It is expected that there will be completed and ready for placing the following high-power, breech-loading steel guns previous to January 1, 1892: One 12-inch rifle, one 10-inch, and four 8-inch, and also thirty-six of the 12-inch steel-hooped mortars. And it is for these that we must provide places. It is expected these guns and mortars will be placed as follows: At New York, one 12-inch gun and eight mortars at Sandy Hook; at Coney Island, eight mortars; at Staten Island, one 8-inch gun on disappearing carriage; at Fort Schuyler, four mortars, and at Willet's Point, one 8-inch gun on disappearing carriage. At San Francisco, one 10-inch gun on disappearing carriage on bluff above Fort Point, one 8-inch gun on disappearing carriage at Alcatraz Island, eight mortars on bluffs west of city. At Boston, one 8-inch gun on disappearing carriage at Fort Warren and eight mortars at Grover's Cliff. The estimated cost for placing these guns and mortars and for the construction of batteries, etc., is $1,221,000; and this amount we have provided for in this bill. The sites for the mortar batteries at Coney Island, Grover's Cliff, and at San Francisco are not owned by the Government, and provision must be made for the purchase of the same. There are also many other places where it will be necessary to purchase sites for batteries as guns and mortars are completed before the same can be placed. The Secretary of War and the Chief Engineer of the Army are very desirous that provision shall be made for the purchase of such sites, and they believe the same can be purchased or procured at an early day at much better terms than later. We therefore have placed $500,000, the amount asked for this purpose, in this bill, and have given the Secretary the power to procure the sites needed by gift, purchase, or condemnation. If we are to proceed in placing our seaports in a state of defense, this appropriation is absolutely necessary. It will be the policy of the Department to place the guns and mortars, as completed, in such places and at such points as will make them the most serviceable and useful, and I have no doubt that with our torpedo system the ports may be fairly protected with less guns and mortars than are estimated by the War Department to put them in a perfect state of defense.

Mr. Chairman, there are other items of appropriation in the bill, but the necessity for these will readily present itself to all, but if explanation should be desired it can be given under the five-minute rule. In reporting this bill and in considering the items mentioned therein we have sought to give liberal sums where the same is to be used for the accomplishing of some object which will take a long time to bring about, like the production of heavy machinery, but where the object can be completed within a short time and is not absolutely needed we have reduced the amounts that have been asked for somewhat. The subcommittee, as well as the whole Committee on Appropriations, have given the matters referred to in the bill much and careful consideration. We have had the Secretary of War and the Chief Engineer of the Army, and representatives of the Ordnance Bureau, as well as the board of ordnance, before the subcommittee, and from these persons and from all other available sources we have gathered such information as possible. We do not claim the bill to be perfect, but feel that it represents the best judgment of the committee. We have felt at all times desirous of keeping the amount appropriated down to the lowest reasonable amount, and yet we have felt that such sum should be appropriated as would reasonably advance the object in view and as could be economically and judiciously expended. We know there are some of our people, and perhaps some members of this House, who feel that we need no forts, fortifications, or coast defenses; that we need no heavy guns or armored ships; that money spent in seacoast defenses and armored ships is wasted. They argue that we are as a nation at peace with all the world and are likely to remain so; that our country and coast is isolated and a long distance from other lands and other nations; that we have had no foreign wars for many years, and that we are able to settle our international difficulties without bloodshed.

Mr. Chairman, no one can hope for lasting peace more than myself. I am a man of peace, and I firmly believe that the policy adopted by our country and Great Britain in the settlement of the Alabama claims and the fishery disputes was a most wise and humane policy and one which redounds to the honor and credit of both lands, but so long as human nature is what it is, so long as men permit their better judgments to be overcome by their angry passions, so long will there at times be wars between different nations of the earth. When national honor or national existence is at stake, when the territory of one nation is sought to be overrun or taken by another, a resort to arms seems perfectly justifiable and is likely to take place.

There are members on this floor who have undoubtedly kept their buildings insured for twenty years or more, yet they did not expect a fire. Their building was isolated, they will tell you, and perhaps constructed of material not liable to readily ignite, but they kept the same insured because a fire might occur. The unfortunate victims of the Johnstown flood knew of the existence of the dam above them. The same had been there for years. But the great majority of the people in that fated city felt perfectly safe, and when the alarm was sounded they would not believe the dam had given away, and refused to flee from danger. Common prudence and national honor and national safety dictate that we exercise wisdom by placing our seacoast in a reasonable state of defense. Without this, should war come, who can tell the injury that will be inflicted upon our large seacoast cities? Hundreds of millions of property and many lives could be destroyed by the heavy ordnance carried by immense ships of war. It is true that a majority of the members do not represent any portion of our seacoast or the cities lying along such seacoast. The lives of our constituencies may not be endangered by the guns on these ships; the property of our constituents may not be destroyed, but this great nation is, thank God, but one body politic. You can not injure or destroy one portion without weakening the whole, any more than you can take from the physical man a limb without injuring and weakening his whole system. Should the ships or guns of a foreign power be permitted to destroy the cities of New York, Boston, New Orleans, or San Francisco, every American citizen would hang his patriotic head in shame. If we love our country we can not take any chance by refusing to protect it. This measure has no party politics in it. There was no division on party lines in the committee, and it is hoped there will be none here. It is a measure founded on patriotism. No part of the money appropriated goes to pay for partisan service. The works will be superintended and the money handled by Army officials, and the money appropriated will not only aid in maintaining our national defense, but will give employment to many of our laboring people, who, as in the past, will ever stand ready to defend national unity, national life, and national honor.

Again it will be said by some that we should not at the present time start out to place our seacoast in a defensive state; that we should not expend large sums of money in the construction of heavy guns, because of the great improvements made in ordnance, in projectiles, powder, etc. For fifteen years and more this argument has been used. It succeeded in staying all efforts for the construction of the Navy until quite recently. It has for years placed the Government in a state of "innocuous desuetude," so far as the protection of our seacoast is concerned. If this argument be good now and has been in the past, why will it not be good for all time to come? It is true the inventive genius of the world has been very great for the past fifty years, but is this genius likely to be manifested less in the future? We have no reason to suppose so, and therefore if we wait until the human mind shall cease to work out new ideas and produce new machinery or improve the old, we shall never have any seacoast defenses or protection for our seaboard cities. Such a course would not be in harmony with our conduct in other business affairs of life. We did not in our cities decline to expend large sums of money to put in gas to light our streets because some one might have had a faint notion that the time would come when they might be lighted by electricity. The farmer, thirty years ago, did not refuse to buy the reaper and mower because it was not in its highest state of perfection.

This same suggestion might be properly applied to all the productions of man. We should as business men utilize, in the accomplishing of our desires, in the construction of our guns and our war-ships, and in the fortifying of our seacoast, and in the protection of our cities, the best means and instruments which have been devised, and not fold our hands in quietness waiting for the highest state of perfection. The nation or individual who acts upon any other theory must in time regret it. Shall we, Mr. Chairman, use those instruments which God, through the genius of man, has given us to protect and defend our seacoast, our cities, and our people, or shall we fold our hands in quiet slumber and say there is time enough to act when no further improvements can be made in the instruments or means which we are to use? We here have the responsibility, and I, for one, am ready to assume it in the line of action, rather than in the line of inaction.

The following tables, furnished by the Ordnance Bureau, contain interesting as well as valuable information touching the cost of heavy guns, their weight, range, effectiveness, etc.

* Owing to the higher requirements which must now be fulfilled by forged and tempered steel armor-piercing projectiles, the prices given above are greater than those in tables previously published. It is thought that steel projectiles can be manufactured for the service at an average cost of 50 cents a pound when the industry is fully established.

NOTE.—No seacoast carriages for high-power steel guns have been manufactured in this country, and no estimates of cost can be furnished until the approved types have been definitely settled upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the procurement of land, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications and coast defenses, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and in the expenditure of this sum or any part thereof the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings, for the acquisition, by condemnation, of any land, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications and coast defenses, such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, That when the owner of such land or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which in the opinion of the Secretary of War shall be reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States donations of lands or rights pertaining thereto required for the above-mentioned purposes: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize an expenditure, or to involve the Government in any contract or contracts for the future payment of money, in excess of the sum of $500,000 herein appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section just read appropriating $500,000 for the purchase of sites for fortifications.

There is no intimation in the bill where this money is to be expended, or how it is to be expended. I do not object to it especially on that account. I object to the measure because there seems to be no necessity for it. There seems to be no reasons why half a million dollars, or any other sum, should be appropriated for such a purpose. I object to it because, manifestly, it is the initiative step for the appropriation of vast sums of money. I say all our past experience has demonstrated that it would not result in any public benefit in matters of public defense when the hour of peril really comes. Therefore I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BREWER. I hope the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail. I have some information which I can present, after which I apprehend the gentleman will not even press his motion. We are making appropriations here for the purpose of placing certain guns which will be ready to be placed previous to the 1st of January, 1892. In three of the places where batteries are to be located the Government does not own the property; hence it will be absolutely necessary that provision shall be made for the purchase of the site. I hold in my hand a letter from the Chief Engineer of the War Department which I ask to have read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1890.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, requesting me to inform you by letter as to the necessity of the appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of sites for fortifications, being an item included in the pending fortification bill.

In reply I have to state that the introduction of long-range, high-power guns into modern naval armaments has rendered it necessary to occupy with guns and rifled mortars the outlying headlands and points adjacent to our harbors, to the end that the naval vessels of the enemy may be kept beyond bombarding range of our cities. A number of the new positions required are not owned by the United States and must be acquired, and the sum named, as far as it will go, will undoubtedly be needed for such sites in and about Boston, New York, San Francisco, Washington, and Hampton Roads.

For the defenses of New York City at the eastern and southern entrances to its harbor, sites will have to be obtained for ten gun batteries and six mortar batteries.

For the defenses of Boston, for six gun batteries and eight mortar batteries.

For San Francisco, for one gun battery and two mortar batteries.

For Hampton Roads, for one mortar battery, and for the defense of Washington, D. C., for two gun batteries.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.

Hon. MARK S. BREWER,
Chairman of Subcommittee on Fortifications,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say briefly that this comes to us in the estimates in Executive Document 98. We have had before our committee the Secretary of War, the Chief Engineer of the Army, and we have also consulted with a part at least of the ordnance board. All agree that it is absolutely necessary that this appropriation shall be made if we undertake to proceed as we have started out in fortifying our seacoast in order to protect our cities thereon.

I think I need not take any further time in discussing the matter, for I apprehend that my friend from Indiana will now see that it is absolutely necessary that there should be an appropriation made for the purchase of sites.

Mr. HOLMAN. A word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

Of course the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] is correct upon the theory that we are entering upon an extensive system of fortifications. If there was any necessity for entering on such a system the bill itself would seem to indicate a grand system of fortifications. The fortification bill has for many years past borne an appropriation of from a million to two millions of dollars mainly to keep up the forts as ornaments. This bill, I believe, is larger than any known in our history for fortifications, at least in the future expenditure it contemplates. The estimates for 1891 are $8,488,991, while this bill carries, including half a million for the purchase of sites, $4,521,678, while the law of the last session involved a little over $1,200,000.

There seems to be reasonably good ground why arsenals should be kept up and carried on as necessary establishments for the construction of arms to meet any possible emergency; that seems to be a matter of reasonable prudence; and of course there is no objection to appropriations for that purpose. I think that a comparatively small amount of money, $200,000 or $300,000 a year, would be reasonable. If the appropriations are kept within one million or two million dollars for all such purposes, including the torpedo system, there would be no reasonable ground of complaint. But when we enter upon so large an expenditure, present and prospective, as this bill contemplates for these objects, I think it is time to stop and consider the matter.

It is obvious, from the experience we have had and are having now, that whatever we shall need in the hour of danger for coast defense in coming years, if ever we shall need to make such a defense, will be found entirely available in our torpedo system, which is from year to year being rapidly developed, the efficiency of which for the purposes of defense is now recognized, I believe, by naval and military authorities in all nations. That will be our manner of defense. Fortifications have not been found to be effective in matters of national defense. We expended hundreds of thousands of dollars prior to the late war in fortifying the Lower Mississippi River, and yet when the hour of trial came it was found that even wooden steam-ships could pass with safety right under the guns of those forts without any peril. Considering the extent of our coast upon both oceans, this system of fortifications would seem to be impracticable, if not wholly unnecessary.

Gentlemen overlook in legislation of this character the present position of our country amongst the nations, its geographical position, with the great natural barriers on all sides which afford us absolute protection, our resources considered. We have now reached that point of national greatness where there seems to be no reason for anxiety on the part of our people or on the part of Congress to enter upon an extensive system of fortifications at the expense of our industries. We have heretofore relied on the spirit and strong arms of our people in the hour of emergency, even when we were a feeble power.

We did so in the war of 1812, and also in the war with Mexico, and likewise in the late war. The people of this country were then found sufficient for the occasion. The arms which had been accumulated in former years at great expense at the opening of the late war were turned over to the junk-shops—arms which had cost millions of dollars having been found to be valueless for real war.

The real fortifications, which were found to be of value, were those which were improvised and thrown up on the spur of the hour. These extensive fortifications proposed will furnish no protection. We are protected by our geographical position and by the fact that we have now reached a point of national greatness which affords absolute safety. Our legislation for our Army and Navy looks as if we were doubtful of our resources and power, when actually we could put in a real emergency a force of 7,500,000 men in the field with every possible facility for their employment in aggressive war or defense. We are not justified in taxing our people countless millions of dollars for arms, for fortifications, and ships of war in this period of assured peace.

Even if we were a feeble power as to numbers we would not be justified in doing this, but, occupying our present position, giving law to the nations, with resources such as we possess, acting always justly to all nations, it seems to me absolutely unreasonable and unjust to the industries of the people of the country to be expending vast sums of money through such agencies as these.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For steel field guns of 3.2-inch caliber, $25,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order upon lines 18 and 19, on page 4, the paragraph just read.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman that if there are any other similar provisions in the bill upon which he desires to make the point of order he had better address himself to all of them at once.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I made the point of order at this time in order that it might not be passed over. I desire to apply the same point of order to line 25, on the same page, and to lines 1 and 2, on page 5, and also to so much of lines 14 and 15, on page 5, as relates to these field guns.

Mr. BREWER. I suggest to my colleague that he withhold his points of order until we have passed the items, and then let them be considered all together.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am entirely willing to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be considered as reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

For breech-loading rifled seacoast mortars, cast-iron, hooped with steel, of 12-inch caliber, $250,000.

For sights and implements for guns and for fuses, $2,000.

For metallic carriages for field-gun batteries, $143,135.

For alteration of existing carriages for 10-inch and 15-inch smooth-bore guns to adapt them to present service conditions, $100,000.

For carriages for breech-loading rifled mortars of 12-inch caliber, procured under the fortification act of September 22, 1888, $225,000.

For powder for proving seacoast mortars of 12-inch caliber, procured under the fortification act of September 22, 1888, and for testing projectiles, $10,000.

For steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, $12,000, and for cast-iron projectiles for field, siege, and seacoast guns, $24,500 for issues to the service; in all, $36,500.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point that I make is that the three items I have indicated are improperly inserted in this bill, without jurisdiction in the committee reporting it. We had this discussion yesterday on the Army appropriation bill, and it is not my desire or intention to detain the Committee of the Whole at the present time by going in extenso over the argument that was then had. These same items, word for word and dollar for dollar, were carried in the Army appropriation bill. They are, first, for steel field-guns, 3.2 caliber, $25,000; for metallic carriages for field-gun batteries, $143,135, and for steel shell or shrapnel for field guns, $12,000, making a total of $180,135.

The question that I raise is simply this, whether or no this committee has properly taken jurisdiction of these items or whether they should be carried in the bill for the support of the military establishment. The question is not entirely new. As is known to the Chair, up to the Forty-ninth Congress the appropriation bills came from one committee, all of them, I believe, save the river and harbor bill and possibly another bill. There was no distinction between the jurisdiction which reported the Army appropriation bill and that which reported the so called fortification bill. In the Forty-ninth Congress a redistribution of appropriations was made and the Military Committee became an appropriation committee, and by the rule of the House (which remains the same to-day as it was then so far as this point is concerned), in subdivision 12, it was provided that—

Subjects relating . . . to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy—should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Under the rules as they then existed, subjects pertaining to the appropriation of the revenue for fortifications went to the Committee on Appropriations. The rule has been amended at the present session by adding the words "and coast defenses," so that now that committee have jurisdiction of fortifications and coast defenses. As I said in arguing this same question yesterday, the question is a single one and a simple one. It is this: Do these light field batteries, their carriages, and the fixed ammunition therefor, belong to the subject of fortifications and coast defenses or do they belong to the military establishment and the public defense as it is generally understood?

The chairman of the Committee of the Whole, when the Army bill was under consideration, ruled, unquestionably correctly as I think, that these were a part of the armament of the military establishment in the accepted sense and should be carried in the Army bill. I do not desire to trouble the House with a reargument of that question, but I wish at the present time to make this point, in order that the committee which I have the honor to represent may not appear to waive the point. We believe that we were right. I have no objections to this appropriation being made; I believe it a proper appropriation; I believe it ought to be made. Up to the last year or two we have had for the armament of our light batteries nothing but the old muzzle-loading guns such as were used during the war; but of late we have commenced to manufacture the new, light, steel breech-loading pieces. Up to this time we have never asked any appropriation for this purpose, because the fifty pieces that have been made so far have been paid for from the sale of obsolete materials. Now, therefore, for the first time this question arises.

In the Forty-ninth Congress we had no fortification bill that came before the House for action—at least, none that passed. I believe that in that Congress the question about these guns was never raised. In the Fiftieth Congress a very much broader question was raised.

A bill providing for the erection of an army gun factory at Watervliet arsenal and for the purchase of steel or steel forgings for heavy guns, as well as for light guns and for seacoast mortars, and many other things, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee, under the order of the House, took jurisdiction of that bill, considered it, and reported it. It was upon the Calendar for a long time, the committee of course not having the privilege of the Appropriations Committee. Finally, in the Senate the substance of that bill was attached to the Army appropriation bill and came back to the House as part of that bill. A point of order was made upon it as part of the Army bill; but before that was decided the fortification bill, carrying substantially the same appropriations, came into the House; and on the 15th of August, 1888, the then chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Townshend, made a point of order against the entire section of the bill carrying the whole matter of armament of seacoast defenses. After a somewhat lengthy discussion, in which I did not participate, being then absent on account of ill-health, the Appropriations Committee at that time retained jurisdiction of the matter of the gun factory and of the armament of seacoast defenses.

In the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, also, a point of order was made upon a paragraph or section carrying the heavy ordnance for seacoast defenses and also some siege guns and heavy field pieces. At that time the decision was in favor of the retention of the items in the fortification bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire at this point whether these specific items, or items practically the same, have not uniformly been carried heretofore in the fortification bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am coming to that. I say this is practically a new question. We have had questions—

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to say that we do not altogether accept that statement as made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose not altogether, from what I heard yesterday.

These items and similar items have been carried in both bills. I read from the remarks of Mr. Townshend, late chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, delivered August 15, 1888, and to be found on page 75-1 of the RECORD of that session. The fortification bill being then under consideration, Mr. Townshend said:

When this bill was under consideration last I had made the point of order which has not yet been disposed of. Since the last discussion upon the point of order I have looked into the precedents of the House and I find that I can show by bills I hold in my hand, which have become law, that the House, in addition to other items, upon the question of jurisdiction, have during the years 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879, and as far back as 1864, placed in the Army appropriation bills appropriations of the nature contained in the Senate amendments to the Army bill.

Now, in the year 1864 a provision is contained in the regular Army appropriation bill for the armament of fortifications, $2,000,000. In the bill for the year 1876 the House placed on the Army bill an appropriation "for the alteration of carriages now in use in seacoast forts, $100,000." In the bill for 1877 a similar appropriation was made. In the bill for 1878 the House, on the Army bill, made an appropriation for the conversion of 10-inch smooth-bore guns into rifle-guns, and for carriages, $50,000. In the bill that became law in 1879 an appropriation for conversion of smooth-bores of $50,000 was placed in the Army bill. I merely allude to these bills that have become law in past years to sustain the position I have taken heretofore upon the question, that it is in order to place these amendments on the Army appropriation bill.

I read this simply for the purpose of showing that items similar to this have heretofore been carried in both these bills. But the item before us to-day is not complex. It carries nothing but light field batteries of 3.2 inches caliber. Now, everybody knows that a 3.2-inch gun is not a fortification gun, not a gun that is ever used in seacoast defenses. Every one who knows anything about military affairs knows that this light field-gun is entirely and solely a field-gun; that there is no use for it in permanent fortifications or in seacoast defenses. Now, if that proposition be true, that this gun is exclusively for use in the field, then it pertains to the military establishment. And bearing upon that question I desire to have read, as I think the present chairman of the Committee of the Whole did not hear it yesterday, the letter of Major-General Schofield, who is not only the head of the Army, but also the head of the board of ordnance and fortifications, having charge of all matters of the fabrication of ordnance at the Army gun factory.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, Washington, D. C., March 3, 1890.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of this date I have the honor to say that the "field guns of 3.2-inch caliber," "metallic carriages for field-gun batteries," and "shell and shrapnel for field guns" are intended for the service of light batteries, of which there are two in each regiment of artillery, which serve with the infantry and cavalry in the field, but not in the fortifications or coast defenses.

It would therefore seem clear that everything relating to these field-gun batteries belongs to the "military establishment and the public defense" in general, rather than to "fortifications and coast defenses." These last belong, not to the now existing military establishment, but to the new fortifications and armament of the seacoasts, which are proposed, and which involve new methods, new materials, and large expenditures of a nature not heretofore for many years included in the appropriations for the military establishment, and hence requiring special care and supervision, both in the appropriations and in the expenditure thereof, while the former, namely, the field gun batteries, are part of the well tried and fully established equipment of the Army, required for its current service, and not involving any question as to cost, of efficiency, or of necessity to the military service.

Very respectfully,

J. M. SCHOFIELD, Major-General Commanding.

Hon. B. M. CUTCHEON,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have here the highest military authority in this country, the General of the Army, the chairman of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, who has charge of the Army gun factory, who has charge of heavy ordnance and fortifications, and who also has charge of the military establishment; and he says it would seem clear that everything relating to these field-gun batteries belongs to the military establishment and the public defense in general, rather than to fortifications and coast defenses. Now, this is a matter of military terminology or military definition; and it would seem that the opinion of the gentleman who stands at the head of the military establishment and also at the head of the board of ordnance and fortifications would be the very highest authority that I can quote to the Chair on this occasion. If his opinion be correct, then beyond all question, under the rules of this House, these appropriations belong where the Committee on Military Affairs placed them, in the bill for the support of the Army, and not in the bill for fortifications and seacoast defenses.

I think I have made myself clear on this question. I have no desire to consume needlessly the time of the House. This is a question of the rules. I know what my friend and colleague who is in charge of this bill will say: that his committee took the estimates as they found them; that they found these items estimated under the head of fortications and other works of defense. That is admitted; the simple question for you to decide, Mr. Chairman, is whether a subordinate officer of the War Department can fix the jurisdiction of committees of this House by the erroneous placing of an estimate under a wrong heading. That is all there is about it.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration, was of the opinion these items belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs. I believe he was right, and I submit the question, so far as I am concerned, to the considerate judgment of the Chair.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]. As to the remarks made by Mr. Townshend, the House will remember I read from the RECORD that Mr. Townshend after having spoken withdrew his point of order, but the point was renewed by the gentleman from Kansas. The Chairman ruled on the point of order as raised by Mr. Townshend, but which had been abandoned by him and subsequently renewed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. CUTCHEON. What was the decision?

Mr. SAYERS. He sustained the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Overruled the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But that point was not this point. That was in regard to a gun factory and the fabrication of seacoast guns. It carried that whole matter, and not merely field guns.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Under that ruling, when all these matters were in one bill much more would the committee have charge of field batteries.

Mr. SAYERS. It will be found by inspection of the RECORD the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] did not apply to the whole bill, but rather to the point of order he previously raised when the bill was before the House, and this was a mere continuation of the discussion.

I will read the opinion so the Chair may understand the point involved.

It is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TURNER] having renewed the point of order, the Chair will state what he understands to be the question that was raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] and subsequently withdrawn by him. As the Chair remembers, the point was this: That the items contained in section 4 of this bill were matters which properly belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs and were within the jurisdiction of that committee, and therefore could not be reported by the Committee on Appropriations in the fortifications bill. The same question was raised when the Army bill was under consideration, and the chairman of the committee at that time, the present occupant of the chair, made a ruling, a portion of which he will ask the Clerk to read as expressing his views upon this question.

The Chairman further said:

The Chair desires to add further, in connection with this ruling, that the bill then under consideration was the Army bill, and the Chair held that the provisions referred to should be reported in the fortifications bill. They have now been reported in that bill, and the Chair is of the opinion that they properly belong in the bill, as they pertain to fortifications, a subject committed expressly by the rules of the House to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In order to fairly understand the application of the ruling, let the paragraph upon which the ruling was made be read.

Mr. SAYERS. While the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] is addressing the Chair I will find the points upon which this decision was made.

Mr. BREWER. It seems almost impossible, Mr. Chairman, to settle the question of jurisdiction on minor items in the bill under consideration. I do not know whether the gentleman filling the chair at the present time was here yesterday during the discussion on the Army bill or not, but these facts were developed and are undisputed, that, when the Committee on Appropriations had charge of the Army bill and the fortification bill also, invariably these or similar items were always placed in the fortification bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the recollection of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No point of order was made, they being from the same committee.

Mr. BREWER. When the rules were amended in the Forty-ninth Congress bills carrying the same or similar items to those which had formerly been in the Army bill passed, by reason of the division, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

My colleague says that no point of order was raised against these items because both bills came from the same committee. Whatever may be the facts in that regard, we do know that points of order have been made many times by my colleague, now the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, as well as by Mr. Townshend, formerly the chairman of that committee, upon items precisely, or very nearly, similar to those now under consideration, and invariably the points of order have been overruled by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole or by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union itself. It is stated by my colleague that such guns have not been produced at the Watervliet arsenal or appropriated for by the committee reporting the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I mean of this precise caliber.

Mr. BREWER. Well, certainly, because there happens to be an inch difference in the caliber it would not change, it seems to me, the principle or affect the merits of the question involved. Now, in the fortifications appropriation bill approved on the 2d of March, 1889, I find the item for the production of 3.6-inch calibers, 5-inch and 7-inch steel field and siege guns.

The CHAIRMAN. To what bill does the gentleman from Michigan refer?

Mr. BREWER. That was the fortifications appropriation bill which was approved on the 2d of March, 1889, in which these appropriations are made.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The last appropriation bill.

Mr. BREWER. Yes, the last bill.

Now, right in this bill, Mr. Chairman, we are asked to appropriate $36,000 more for finishing and assembling these very guns; and, more than that, we are asked to appropriate $14,000 of that which was appropriated in the last appropriation bill, in order to make it available for the next fiscal year. In that bill provision was made for 3.6-inch guns, and in this for 3.2-inch guns, and this question I will state has been ruled upon—

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will my colleague allow an interruption just there?

Mr. BREWER. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The 3.6-inch guns are bound up, however, in the same paragraph with the 5 and 7 inch guns which unquestionably come within the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. BREWER. Yes; and so are the shrapnel bound up with other items of this bill which my friend seeks to throw out on the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; but the amount is carried separately, while in the other it is not carried separately, but is a part of an aggregate sum.

Mr. BREWER. Now, Mr. Chairman, without taking further time of the committee, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the discussion and the ruling on these items or on items similar to the ones now under consideration. When the last fortifications appropriation bill was under consideration the following item was reached:

For steel forgings for not less than eighty-four 3.6-inch field guns, $24,000.

The point of order was made by my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and that question was discussed. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia, overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Please read the decision of the Chair on that occasion.

Mr. BREWER. The Chairman simply overruled the point of order without entering into the reasons for the decision.

But I come to another item of the same bill which was sought to be stricken out on the point of order made by my colleague, and that is for 1,000 steel shrapnel for field guns. Here is also an item for 4,800 projectiles of cast-iron for field guns, all in that appropriation bill.

The point of order was made upon them by my colleague also, and after that had been fully and thoroughly considered and discussed the point of order was overruled. I shall not take the time of the committee, nor is it necessary to go into the full discussion which took place on that occasion; but on yesterday the point of order was made against these same items which had been put in the military appropriation bill; and after the matter had been discussed the Chair overruled the point of order, and that left the items, of course, in the bill.

A motion was made immediately by the gentleman from Illinois to strike them out, and this Committee of the Whole—or rather the Committee of the Whole then considering that bill—by a vote of 91 to 57, I believe it was, struck them out of the bill altogether. And why? Because, Mr. Chairman, they found that they should come up, as it was understood they would come up, in the fortifications bill. Now, in this connection I desire to quote from my colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the language used by him in the discussion yesterday in regard to the question of jurisdiction. He said:

There is a well known principle of equity jurisprudence that where two tribunals may have concurrent jurisdiction of the same subject-matter the one getting the jurisdiction first will hold it, and it may well be that, even if it should be the opinion of the Chair that if the other bill had come in here first containing this appropriation it might properly be retained in that bill, nevertheless it is also properly in this bill, and this is the bill which is first presented for the consideration of the House.

In this language my colleague virtually conceded the fact that either of these committees would have jurisdiction to report the items that are now under consideration. But the House wiped them out of the Army bill, and so they stand; and, if the point of order is to be sustained and the items go out of this bill, then there is no appropriation whatever for the items named. The committee on yesterday decided that the Fortifications Committee had jurisdiction and substantially that the Committee on Military Affairs had not; and now to-day if you reverse that action you give no appropriation at all for these items, and in that condition of the question it seems to me it is useless to take further time of the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. A single word, Mr. Chairman, by way of replication. It is possible that in the remarks just quoted by my friend from Michigan in charge of the pending bill, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs conceded more than the case warranted, because I did not believe then, nor do I now believe, that the guns for the armament of light field batteries, to be used in the field exclusively and with the troops in the field, which are now so used and are never used in permanent fortifications or coast defenses, could properly be carried in the fortification bill.

Mr. BREWER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. BREWER. Does he know of, or has he ever seen, a general appropriation bill coming from the Committee on Military Affairs that carried an appropriation for field guns?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Well, last year we had a large appropriation for pneumatic dynamite guns and every class of armament; but at that time there was no occasion for these particular guns, simply because prior to that time all guns furnished of that caliber were made from the sale of obsolete material.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. COGSWELL (to Mr. CUTCHEON). And still you hope that these items will pass?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, I think the guns ought to be made, and if stricken out of this bill they can be restored in the Army bill in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without entering into a critical examination of the language of the rules as they now exist, as compared with the old rules and practice, it is enough, in the judgment of the Chair, to say that so far as the present occupant of the chair remembers or is advised the practice has been uniform and universal to have items of this character contained and considered in the fortifications bill. This has been the practice ever since the present occupant of the chair has been a member of this House. The Chair thinks precedents so well established ought not to be overturned without serious reasons. These reasons do not exist in the judgment of the Chair, and so the Chair feels disposed to adhere to the precedents followed uniformly in the House, and always in Committee of the Whole until the last legislative day, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. While I have the utmost respect for the opinion of the Chair and while I heap coals of fire on my colleague from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a board to consist of three officers of the Army, who shall inquire into the facilities for producing steel forgings for high-power guns at or near the Pacific coast and in the vicinity of the Rock Island arsenal and the advisability of erecting gun factories for finishing and assembling high-power guns, to be mounted in fortifications, at the Benicia arsenal, in California, and at the Rock Island arsenal.

Said board shall also examine and report as to the capacity, cost of erection, and equipment of each of such gun factories.

For the payment of the necessary expenses of said board, $3,000.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the words "Rock Island arsenal," in line 23, page 7, the following: "and in the vicinity of the Indianapolis arsenal."

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if it is determined to select anywhere in the Mississippi Valley a location for producing steel forgings for high-power guns in my judgment there is no city or locality in any section of the country that will offer equal facilities with the Indianapolis arsenal.

That city is in the great natural-gas belt; and experience has shown that in producing the finer qualities of steel, by reason of the evenness of the heat of natural gas and its cheapness, there is no process by which it can be manufactured so well and so economically as by that fuel. In addition to this natural gas as a fuel, Indianapolis arsenal is located within 50 miles of the great block-coal field of Indiana. That is a coal which produces iron without being reduced to coke. As a distributing point there is no place in the Mississippi Valley that excels Indianapolis, as more than twenty railroads radiate in every direction from that place. The Government owns 70 acres of land there, near the great Belt Railway, and a very short switch will connect it with the entire system of railways centering at that place. The buildings there can be changed and modified, if necessary, for the production of these steel forgings at a very small expense; and it is nearer to the iron out of which the very finest quality of steel is made than Rock Island. For these reasons it seems to me that if the Government proposes to establish a place anywhere in the Mississippi Valley for the manufacture of this class of forgings the committee that goes out for the purpose of selecting that point ought to be called upon to investigate the facilities and advantages of this point as well as the others.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to discuss this provision at any great length. This provision of the bill would probably be subject to a point of order; but the friends of Indianapolis do not desire to make that point, believing that the House, upon a mere statement of the case, would be inclined to do what is perfectly right, proper, and fair. There is a bill pending before the Committee on Military Affairs for the establishment of a gun factory at Indianapolis. No action has yet been taken on that, and it is probably awaiting the recommendation of the Secretary of War. This provision is for the appointment of three Army officers to investigate the arsenal grounds on the Pacific coast and at Rock Island, Ill., and ascertain whether they are proper sites for the location of gun foundries.

The Government owns valuable grounds and buildings at Indianapolis, and that city should not be excluded without a hearing. The arsenal grounds and buildings at Indianapolis are very valuable and can easily be converted into buildings for manufacturing purposes. The central location of Indianapolis, her railroad facilities, her proximity to the natural-gas and block-coal fields give to her an advantage in these particulars over any other city in the West for the location of a gun factory.

I have here a communication addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by Major Comly, now stationed at the arsenal at Indianapolis, an extract from which will give some idea of the importance of that location:

As a centering point of railways, Indianapolis is perhaps as important as any in the country, and for distributing purposes certainly the most important in the West. Its facilities for reaching by direct lines all important points in the West and South—such points as would naturally be used for the concentration of troops in the event of war—are unequalled, and give it very marked advantages as a point of storage for ordnance supplies. The property owned by the Department here is valuable, well located, and finely adapted to the purposes of an arsenal of deposit and repair, and for manufacturing purposes as well, should it at any time in the future become necessary for the Department to so employ it.

All that Indianapolis desires is simply to be included in this investigation. Whatever the commission may report, Indianapolis will, of course, be willing to abide by. If they say that Rock Island is the proper place for the location of this foundry, that is only to the greater advantage of that city. If they say that Indianapolis is a better location for the same, Rock Island ought not to have it. I can see no reason why Indianapolis or any number of cities should be excluded from this investigation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a single observation in reply to the two gentlemen from Indiana [Messrs. CHEADLE and BYNUM]. If gentlemen will notice this bill it carries in round numbers a million dollars for the erection of a south wing of the gun factory and the furnishing of tools at Watervliet, N. Y. There has already been a large amount of money expended in the erecting a center and a north wing there, and providing them with tools for a gun factory. The committee, after consideration, recommend the erection of this south wing, the intention being at this time to utilize the factory already provided at Watervliet and build up the gun factory so that guns can be constructed there in considerable quantities, 8, 10, 12, and even 16 inch guns.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that this bill does not provide for the construction of any 16-inch gun.

Mr. CANNON. I believe it does not, but still there will be sufficient buildings and tools and capacity to admit of their being constructed there hereafter. But I do not care anything about that further than the reference I have made to it. The Committee on Appropriations, after investigation, were of the opinion that for the purposes of the Government at this time the factory at Watervliet was sufficient, at least during the present experimental stage. But the Government also owns an arsenal and a factory in California, at Benicia, a very desirable place perhaps for a gun factory, 3,000 miles away. The Government also owns on the Mississippi River, at Rock Island, a magnificent island and a great arsenal, which has already cost in round numbers thirteen or fourteen millions, with many shops, with railroad transportation, with the great river which leads to the Gulf.

It is thought by many people connected with the Army, and by many who are not so connected, that Benicia, on the Pacific coast, and Rock Island, where the Government already has this great establishment, ought, in the early future, to be utilized for gun factories as well as for other purposes. I do not know whether they ought to be so utilized or not; but there are these great establishments, and there is the location, and the committee thought proper, with all the representations that were made to it and with all the information it had, to authorize the President to appoint these three Army officers, "who shall inquire into the facilities for producing steel forgings for high-power guns at or near the Pacific, and in the vicinity of Rock Island arsenal, and the advisability of erecting a gun factory for finishing," etc. The committee have brought in this amendment in good faith, for the reasons I have stated. Now, if it is to be amended by inserting Indianapolis, where the Government does own some ground, to be sure, but where there are no buildings of any value—

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman is mistaken as to the buildings.

Mr. CANNON. If it is to be amended in that way, then with greater propriety you might insert Chicago, which is rapidly becoming the great center for the production of steel and iron; you might insert Cairo; you might insert St. Louis, and I see my good-natured friend across the way [Mr. TAFT] who, I have no doubt, would be glad to have Kansas City inserted; but by such amendments the purpose of the amendment reported by the committee would be entirely changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. BYNUM. I move to strike out the last word.

I desire simply to say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that we are not insisting upon anything here. We have not been heard before the Committee on Appropriations, and no friend of Indiana was on that committee, while Illinois and California were both represented. We were not called before the committee to present the claims of Indianapolis. All that we ask now is that we may be heard, so that when this commission goes out it will investigate the advantages of Indiana as well as of these other points.

Mr. CANNON. But why should not the advantages of other cities be investigated as well?

Mr. BYNUM. I think that would be perfectly proper. In locating a navy-yard we have never pursued the policy of limiting the persons authorized to select a site to any particular points, but they have been sent out to scan the whole coast and select the best point; and I think it would be entirely proper to let this commission go out without any instructions at all and let them select the most favorable location. I would be willing to let them go out to investigate all the leading points, St. Louis, Kansas City, Louisville, Indianapolis, Rock Island. I think that would be entirely proper and fair; but as no other city is making a contest here we have been satisfied to present the claims of our own city, leaving it to other gentlemen to present theirs.

Mr. CANNON. In justice to the committee reporting this amendment, it is proper to remind gentlemen that the Government already owns the Rock Island arsenal, has already spent $13,000,000 there, and has its post there and its shops.

Mr. BYNUM. Then it is a bad place to sink any more money, if it has already cost $13,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. It is far better to utilize the situation and the plant that we have there than it would be to select a new place where the Government has never spent a dollar. But, Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not require the expenditure to be made; it simply provides for investigation and a report.

Mr. BYNUM. That is the very reason we are insisting on this amendment. On the Indianapolis grounds there is a large warehouse, large enough for this manufacture. It would only be necessary to improve it and put in the machinery.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to strike out the last word. I simply want to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that if Rock Island possesses so many special advantages for this factory he ought not to oppose the amendment I have offered, because, if the facilities there are so superior to those of Indianapolis, I am sure that a committee of competent officers, selected, as they will be, by the President, will find in favor of Rock Island; but, if the Government of the United States proposes to go into the business of producing these steel forgings, then I ask that the advantages, if any, which Indianapolis possesses may be considered by the committee to be selected for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon that question.

I affirm—and no man can deny the proposition—that the experience of the past few years has shown that in the production of the finer qualities of steel there is no fuel known that will compare with gas. I trust therefore that this amendment will prevail.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move a further amendment, which is necessary to complete that just voted upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "arsenal," in line 2, page 8, the words "or at the Indianapolis arsenal."

Mr. BYNUM. This amendment simply completes the amendment previously adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, without taking further time, I desire to submit certain communications addressed me by the Chief of Ordnance, and also a clipping from a newspaper of recognized authority in the matter of ordnance. They show the cost attending the manufacture of heavy ordnance, ammunition, and firing.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiries of the 23d instant, I have the honor to submit the following tables:

The column, "life of gun," indicates the estimated number of rounds before the gun requires relining. After it is relined it acquires a new lease of life.

No seacoast carriages for high-power steel guns have been manufactured in this country, and no estimates of cost can be furnished until the approved types have been definitely settled upon; 20-inch and 16-inch guns if constructed would be mounted in turrets. The estimated cost of a turret for two 16-inch guns is given by the Board on Fortifications or other Defenses in their report as at least $700,000.

There is no means of determining the amount of deterioration in dollars and cents of the gun from one firing.

No rifled gun of steel or any other metal, of a greater caliber than 18 inches, exists, and none are projected so far as known.

The other data called for are printed in appendices to Notes on Estimates for Armament of Fortifications, which will be sent to you early next week.

Respectfully,

S. V. BENÉT,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

HON. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,

Member of Subcommittee on Fortifications,
House of Representatives.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th instant, I have the honor to state as follows: In estimating the number of rounds which would constitute the life of seacoast guns, I supposed each round to be fired with the battering charge of powder used in actual warfare. When use is made of the reduced charges, employed in ordinary practice firing, a considerably greater number of rounds can be fired before the gun needs relining. The estimated cost of relining seacoast guns is as follows:

8-inch	$2,400
10-inch	3,500
12-inch	4,500
14-inch	6,000
16-inch	8,000
20-inch	12,000

After relining, the guns, it is thought, will be good for at least 100 rounds with battering charges, after which they can be relined a second and a third time. On account of the relatively small charges used and the consequently greatly diminished erosive effect of the powder, the life of mortars will probably greatly exceed the conservative estimate of 500 rounds given in my previous letter, and it is thought that they will not require relining. The carriages to be used for the 10-inch, 12-inch, and 14-inch guns are of three kinds: disappearing, barbette, and casemate. The cost of an Elswick 10-inch hydropneumatic disappearing carriage is given at $17,500. No disappearing carriage has ever been made for a rifled gun of greater caliber than 10 inches. It is proposed to mount some of our 12-inch and 14-inch guns on gun-lift disappearing carriages, which are merely barbette carriages raised and lowered by gun-lifts, which are properly part of the fortifications and should be included in their cost.

The price of a 10-inch barbette carriage at the Creusot (French) works is known to be about $14,000, and for 12-inch and 14-inch carriages the price would probably be about $17,500 and $23,000, respectively. Casemate carriages are the most expensive of all, and the intention is to use them for 12-inch guns only. Estimates for a 12-inch carriage of this kind will shortly be procured from abroad. The cost will probably not be less than $35,000. As to 12-inch seacoast mortar carriages, the English firm of Easton & Anderson will contract for them in quantities at $6,000 apiece, while Whitworth holds his Canet 12-inch mortar carriages at $10,000 apiece when made in quantities. The above carriages manufactured in this country would cost 50 per cent. more for some types and calibers, and for others perhaps 75 per cent. more. Their endurance, when properly constructed, may be practically considered as unlimited.

Perhaps a better idea of the probable prices of gun carriages will be obtained from the following table, though it must be remembered that the data at hand are so meager that the estimates of cost can not be called even approximate:

Cost of seacoast carriages of American manufacture.

Caliber of guns.	Disappearing.	Barbette.	Casemate.
10-inch	$27,000	$20,000 to 25,000
12-inch	25,000 to 30,000	25,000 to 30,000	$45,000
14-inch	35,000 to 40,000	35,000 to 40,000
Without gun-lift.
12-inch	35,000 to 40,000	35,000 to 40,000

Twelve-inch mortar carriages, $12,000 to $15,000, according to type.

The delivery of steel for forgings procured from the Bethlehem Iron Company, under the fortifications act of September 22, 1883, will be as follows:

Date.	8-inch guns, sets.	10-inch guns, sets.	12-inch guns, sets.
May 1, 1890.....	1
May 1, 1891.....	18	1
July 1, 1891.....	4
August 1, 1891.....			1
May 1, 1892.....		12
August 1, 1892.....			6
April 1, 1893.....		11
December 1, 1893.....			8
Total.....	23	24	15

The deliveries will be completed by December 1, 1893. The progress to be expected in finishing and assembling of the guns at Watervliet arsenal will be as follows:

Date.	8-inch.	10-inch.	12-inch.	Remarks.
December 1, 1891.....	3			Provided the additional sum of $165,000 estimated for is appropriated.
December 1, 1892.....	9	3	1
December 1, 1893.....	17	5	3
December 1, 1894.....	23	12	8
December 1, 1895.....		24	15

If the south wing is erected all can be completed in 1894; otherwise the twenty-three 8-inch, twenty-four 10-inch, and fifteen 12-inch guns will be completed by December 1, 1895.

The Department has met with unexpected delays in procuring the machine tools for the new gun factory, which will reduce the output of finished guns for the first few years materially. The deliveries of all the large gun lathes will not be completed until 1894; the production of these large tools in this country is very slow work. But it emphasizes the importance of making immediately available the appropriations for completing the gun factory and procuring the additional machinery asked for in the annual estimates of the Department. It will require at least a year to erect the south wing of the gun factory. As respects its equipment the small machines could be procured within a year, but for the large lathes from three to four years would be required.

The prompt passage of the fortifications bill with the proviso that all the items of appropriation touching the completion and equipment of the gun factory shall be made immediately available would materially assist in procuring necessary manufacturing facilities with as little delay as possible, and I earnestly recommend such action on the part of Congress.

As regards a further appropriation for steel forgings, say $1,500,000, I think it would be wise to make such an appropriation. It might result in the development of a second steel-making establishment in our country capable of producing the forgings for large guns. Such a result is quite probable and certainly very desirable, not only for economic reasons as respects the cost of steel guns, but for procuring the armament required for coast defense at a more rapid rate. Under present conditions the armament of the coast promises to be a very slow and lengthy operation. Several manufacturers should be engaged in the production of the steel and larger facilities should be provided for assembling and finishing guns. If the forgings should be delivered more rapidly than they can be worked up by the Department, part of the work could be given out at contract to private manufacturers. This whole question will be more fully discussed in a memorandum now being prepared for your committee.

Very respectfully,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. J. D. SAYERS,
House of Representatives.

LIFE OF HEAVY GUNS.

It is stated that a 110-ton Armstrong gun has bent during test, says the Engineer, from which we take the following particulars regarding the life of heavy guns: It appears that the 110-ton gun—16½ inches—will fire 95 ordinary rounds, after which the gun is unfit for service. The 67-ton gun, 13½ inches, will fire 127 rounds, and the 45-ton gun, 12 inches, will fire 150 rounds, after which these guns are absolutely unfit for service. The cost of the 110-ton gun is £16,500, the 67-ton gun, £10,900, and the 45-ton gun, £5,300. Thus the cost of the 110-ton gun alone will be for each discharge of shot £174, for the 67-ton gun £86, and for the 45-ton gun £43. The cost of a single round for material alone for the 110-ton gun is as follows:

1,800 pounds of projectile.....	80	0	0
Silk for cartridge.....	3	0	0
Deterioration of gun (life of gun taken at 95 rounds).....	174	0	0

Total net cost of each round..... 327 0 0

For the 67-ton gun:

	£	s.	d.
520 pounds of powder.....	40	10	0
1,250 pounds of projectile.....	55	10	0
Deterioration of gun (life of gun taken at 127 rounds).....	86	0	0

Total net cost of each round..... 184 0 0

For the 45-ton gun:

	£	s.	d.
295 pounds of powder.....	23	0	0
Deterioration of gun (life of gun taken at 150 rounds).....	43	0	0

Total net cost of each round..... 98 0 0

The 67-ton gun would penetrate 27 inches of wrought-iron at 1,000 yards, and the 45-ton gun would penetrate 20 inches of wrought-iron at the same distance.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all members may have leave to print remarks on this bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. BREWER. I move now that the committee rise and report this bill favorably to the House.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that the gentleman modify his motion so as to provide that the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation. I wish to call up another bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BREWER. Very well; I modify my motion as suggested by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

Mr. CANNON. I desire now to call up the bill (S. 2284) for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park.

The Clerk having completed the first reading of the bill—

Mr. CANNON. I now ask that the bill be read by paragraphs or sections for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. No general debate being desired, the bill will now be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park, to be expended under the direction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the following sums of money:

The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations to the pending paragraph were read, as follows:

Strike out "there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert "the one half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

At the end of the paragraph strike out the words "the following sums of money" and insert the words "and to be drawn on their requisition and disbursed by the disbursing officer for said institution."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the amendments which have just been read, and which are recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, explain themselves. Their effect is to provide that one-half the money appropriated by the bill for the improvement of this park shall come from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States. They further provide that the money shall be drawn on requisition of the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and disbursed by the disbursing officer for that institution.

Mr. SPINOLA. Which park does this refer to?

Mr. CANNON. The Zoological Park.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the shelter of animals, $15,000.

For shelter-barns, cages, fences, and inclosures, and other provisions for the custody of animals, $9,000.

For repairs to the Holt mansion, to make the same suitable for occupancy, and for office furniture, $2,000.

For the creation of artificial ponds and other provisions for aquatic animals, $2,000.

For water supply, sewerage, and drainage, $7,000.

For roads, walks, and bridges, $15,000.

For miscellaneous supplies, materials, and sundry incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $5,000.

For current expenses, including the maintenance of collections, food supplies, salaries of all necessary employes, and the acquisition and transportation of specimens, $37,000.

SEC. 2. That the National Zoological Park is hereby placed under the direction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, who are authorized to transfer to it any living specimens, whether of animals or plants, now or hereafter in their charge, to accept gifts for the park at their discretion, in the name of the United States, to make exchanges of specimens, and to administer the said Zoological Park for the advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was read, as follows:

After the words "United States," in the sixth line of section 2, insert "and of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill recommended the adoption of the amendment just read. Since the presentation of the report I have arrived at the opinion (not speaking for the committee) that the amendment should not be adopted. It is urged, and with some force, as it seems to me, by parties who represent the Smithsonian Institution, that gifts of animals and other valuable donations to the Zoological Park would probably be made more readily, if received in the name of the United States than if accepted in the name of the United States and of the District of Columbia. As this property was bought by the joint revenues of the United States and of the District and is to be conducted and maintained by their joint contributions, there can be no doubt that any gifts which may be made will inure to the benefit of the park, while, by rejecting the amendment, we may relieve the Smithsonian Institution from some embarrassment in this matter. Therefore, while submitting the amendment by direction of the committee, I express my individual opinion that it is advisable it should not be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to express my concurrence in the view of the gentleman from Illinois that this amendment should not be adopted. The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That the heads of Executive Departments of the Government are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be rendered all necessary and practicable aid to the said Regent in the acquisition of collections for the Zoological Park.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire only to say that I vote for this bill in its present shape because I think a bill for the maintenance of this park ought to pass; but I believe that before the park is two years old Congress will conclude that a national park ought not to be made a District park. The committee has amended the bill so as to make it local and narrow. But, rather than have no park, I am in favor of this bill. I hope to have an opportunity, perhaps at the next session, to vote in favor of making this a national park in accordance with the title of this bill. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. PAYSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 2284) for the organization, maintenance, and improvement of the National Zoological Park and the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The House took up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with amendments.

The amendments were read.

Mr. BREWER. I move the amendments be concurred in.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BREWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (S. 2284) for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park.

The amendments were read and agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read a third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HATCH demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 62, noes 33.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point no quorum has voted, as I regard this bill as such an outrage upon the tax-payers of the country—

The SPEAKER. This is not open to debate.

Mr. HATCH. The previous question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows this is not open to debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 66, not voting 146; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage, without amendment, of a bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889.

It further announced the passage of a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 389) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 136) for the relief of sufferers in the Mississippi Valley.

It further announced that the Senate still further insisted on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on its part.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 8900) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to reserve the points of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. All the points of order will be reserved.

NATIONAL BANKING.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House further than to ask unanimous consent to print a brief explanatory statement of the provisions of the bill (H. R. 8897) proposing a national banking system, which I have to-day introduced in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, to illustrate the working of banks to-day under the existing law, I have had prepared the following statement to accompany the draught of the bill I present to establish a national banking code. What is said of the banks named is true of banks the country over, and each bank can figure out for itself the results in its own case should the code proposed be adopted:

Number of banks, the amount of their capital, bonds deposited to secure circulation, circulation outstanding, net deposits, and reserve held of the national banks having $100,000 capital or less in the States of Missouri, Minnesota, Georgia, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, as shown by their reports of condition at the close of business on December 11, 1889.

States.	No. of banks.	Capital.	Bonds.	Circulation.	Net deposits.	Reserve held.
Missouri.....	44	$2,975,235	$797,730	$668,435	$5,175,418	$1,663,193
Minnesota.....	40	2,645,000	762,300	682,100	5,294,656	1,283,410
Georgia.....	19	1,310,500	505,500	443,190	2,642,015	1,310,128
Tennessee.....	31	2,260,000	667,750	589,100	3,469,092	914,954
Pennsylvania.....	166	13,059,660	5,722,800	5,001,615	37,328,668	10,435,819
Massachusetts.....	53	4,902,500	1,353,000	1,650,867	9,766,023	2,722,492
Total.....	353	27,152,895	10,309,100	9,085,307	63,665,879	18,314,996

The bonds owned by these banks of the par value of $10,309,100 would cost a premium to-day at 24 per cent. per annum, or $2,474,184.

It will be seen that they were entitled to receive circulating notes to the amount of $242,883 more than they have taken. They are entitled to receive 90 per cent. of their par value in circulating notes, or $9,278,190; but no banking business can be safely done without a redemption fund for its notes and a reserve fund also.

The note-redemption fund required by the Government is 5 per cent. on their circulation, or $463,909.50, which deducted from their circulating notes leaves available to them only $8,814,280.50. It comes to this, then, that the banks are obliged to pay for that amount of currency notes, at 24 per cent. premium on their United States bonds, their price in the market to-day, $12,783,284.

The banks get interest on the par value of the $10,309,-

100 bonds held by them, at 4 per cent..... $412,364.00
Interest on $8,814,280.50 circulation, at 6 per cent --- 528,856.83

Total possible income on bonds and currency notes. --- 941,220.83

The banks lose on $12,783,284, price of bonds, at 6 per cent..... $766,997.04

Tax of 1 per cent. per annum on its currency notes, $9,278,190..... 92,781.90

Yearly loss on premium paid..... *236,149.00

Redemption charges..... 9,510.14 + 1,105,438.68

Annual net loss to all banks named..... 164,217.25

That is to say, that notwithstanding the Government pays to these banks 4 per cent. per annum upon the bonds it compels the banks to buy in order to secure $9,278,190 in promissory currency notes to circulate as money, the banks still lose, on a basis of a 6 per cent. rate of interest, 1½ cents on every dollar of currency notes they get from the Government, which an individual banker would save, or over 6 mills per cent. per annum on their total capital.

The banks throughout the country are now calling for a 2 per cent. fifty-year bond, upon which to secure circulation. Their currency account would then be as follows:

$10,309,100 of bonds, at 2 per cent..... $206,182.00
$8,814,280.50 currency notes, at 6 per cent..... 528,856.83

Total possible income on bonds and currency notes 735,038.83

$10,309,100 cost of bonds, at 6 per cent..... $618,546.00

Tax of 1 per cent. on $9,278,190 currency notes 92,781.90

Redemption charges..... 9,510.14

720,838.04

Yearly gain on circulating notes..... 14,200.79

But by continuing the present system, using either the 4 per cent. at their price or the 2 per cent. bond, if one were issued, the principle of sound banking is violated. It is wasteful beyond the thought of persons who have not critically examined the system, or rather the want of system, of the United States.

If currency notes are made to cost more than their normal price in the end it comes out of the people. Banking is as necessary in the conduct of the business of the country as is the means of transportation. If railroads are made to cost more than is necessary, the people are compelled to pay higher freight charges and are also hindered from putting their capital into railroads, to their great loss. So if the loaning of the capital put into banks is hindered by the circulating notes of banks called money, which are proper and necessary to the banks in loaning the capital of the banks, being made to cost the bank an exorbitant price, the people having capital to loan are hindered from putting their capital into banking and the people borrowing the capital of the bank are made to pay a high price for the capital they borrow.

Instead of the banks named losing by the present system, over a proper system of issuing currency bank notes on their 4 per cent. bonds, only $164,217.25 they really lose about $1,229,765.39, or at the rate of about 4½ per cent. on their capital, in an unwise system of providing currency notes for the use of these banks. This is an utter waste, and comes out of the people by a system of banking more costly than that of any other christian country.

By the system which is embodied in the proposed banking code which I herewith present the banks named would be entitled to receive currency notes, practically as safe to the holders of them as those now issued on United States bonds, to the amount of $22,893,745, and the currency-note account, computed as in the other cases, would be as follows:

$22,893,745 of currency notes at 6 per cent..... $1,373,624.70

The banks would lose at the same rate of interest as a 2 per cent. bond on circulation of $4,578,749, bought of the United States Treasurer at 2 per cent..... $91,574.98

Redemption charges..... 23,351.62

114,926.60

Annual saving to the banks and the people..... 1,258,698.10 in banking under the proposed bill.

This is not a sum "given to the banks." It is a sum of which they are now deprived and to which they are justly entitled.

This loss is made up of loss of use, and therefore loss of interest, upon a considerable part of the capital originally paid into the banks by their owners, which they received for their farms, or houses, or merchandise they sold to get the capital to form the bank, and of its depositors, namely:

$18,314,996 in coin or lawful money in their reserve fund at 6 per cent. per annum	$1,098,899.76
Interest on the 5 per cent. note redemption fund in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States of $463,909.50 at 6 per cent.	27,834.57

Total interest on actual capital the banks own that is tied up under the present system	1,126,734.33
---	--------------

There will be, however, a loss to the banks under the code which can only be justified upon the principle that the Government has a right to impose a tax upon them.

This annual loss to the banks will be in the nature of a tax upon the circulation the banks would get under the proposed banking code, of about 4 mills per annum in loss of 2 per cent. annually on the money bought of the United States Treasurer.

This matter is of prime importance to the people, for there is no one thing more necessary to secure to working people their fair share of the products of a country without excessive tribute to middle men than a circulating medium, uniform and unvarying in value. Men in middle life can not realize the great loss that came to producers and consumers in this country from the imperfect monetary system that existed in the United States for fifty years prior to 1863.

Exchanges during that period were as high as 10 per cent. between Chicago and Boston, and this great expense of making money exchanges in exchanging products came out of the consumer, who at the same time is the producer of the country, and went into the pockets of middle men. Exchanges are now made between the most remote parts of the country practically without cost, which is all in the interest of the consumer.

Our present banking system, while the best this country ever saw, is enormously expensive, and it can not continue much longer without some means is devised for continuing its excellences and remedying its defects. The banking bill which I have prepared is intended to furnish the cheapest possible circulating medium for the use of the people, costing them the least possible sum for its use, and that is at the same time safe and enduring.

It proposes to release all the United States bonds now held by the banks so that the United States Government may buy them at the cheapest rate—at their normal and natural price in the market—without any fictitious price being given to them by the requirement that national banks shall hold them to secure their currency notes.

The bill proposes that the banks shall, in place of the bonds, deposit United States notes, coin, or coin certificates for the circulating notes of the bank to the extent of 10 per cent. of its capital for associations having a capital of $250,000 or less, and for those whose capital exceeds $250,000 to the extent of $25,000; that these notes, upon the insolvency or expiration of the charter of the bank, shall be redeemed by the Treasurer of the United States in coin or coin certificates, and confers upon him the right to sell bonds for coin to redeem such notes. Practically the redemption of these notes will never be required.

Secondly. That the bank shall have the right to issue notes to an amount not to exceed its coin or coin-certificate reserve, as determined from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency; that the notes issued redeemable by the bank and not by the Treasurer of the United States shall differ in color and in the affirmation printed upon them from the notes received from and to be redeemed by the United States Treasurer, with provisions for their payment in case of the insolvency of the bank that assure their final payment.

Of the money deposited with the Treasurer for circulation 90 per cent. shall be used for the redemption and destruction of United States notes to that amount, the notes issued under the bill taking their place; that 10 per cent. be set aside in coin or coin certificates for the redemption of the notes of each bank; that all the provisions of law now existing for supervision and control of banks are retained.

The provisions of this bill make the bank equally as secure and the redemption of its circulating promissory notes equally certain with the present system and at the same time save to the people the interest on the lawful money held in the redemption accounts which under any other system is lost to the people. The coin held by the Government outside of the banking system of the country is so much capital held out of practical use, and the interest upon that amount of capital is lost to the country, while coin to the amount necessary to safety, held in the banking system in its reserve account, is represented in the circulating medium of the country, as is the case in every christian country excepting the United States.

In the latter case there is no advantage to the people in the amount of coin held by the Government. In the case of the banks holding it, with the right to issue notes to the same amount, the coin performs two offices: it ministers to the safety of the banking system of the country, which it can not do while in the Treasury of the United States, and also is represented in the currency notes of the banks.

The $621,000,000, more or less, of coin now in the United States Treasury is a certain loss to the people, at 4 per cent. per annum interest, of over $24,000,000 per annum, and this loss is not lessened by issuing certificates that circulate for money among the people, because if these certificates were issued by the banks as bank promissory currency notes, representing coin held by the banks, it makes coin a part of the monetary system of the country and performs the two offices named. When held in the United States Treasury it is no more a part of the monetary system of the country than it would be if it were held in other countries or held by an individual.

If it is said the people of the United States do not lose this $24,000,000 because the Government has certificates for it in circulation, then the banks lose it, and the money gotten out of the banks, in loans by the people, costs the people that much more in interest charged by the banks than they would pay if the banks held this amount of coin as a part of the monetary system of the country and issued notes upon it instead of the Government. The people are, therefore, justified in their complaints of the banking system. A bank owes to the community in which it exists and the country that charters it two offices which it ought not to be released from performing.

The first is to furnish circulating notes to answer for the checks, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., for the common people, and, secondly, to hold a sufficient amount of coin to measure the value of products exchanged in the country by settling balances between the banks with it. No monetary system ought to be allowed to exist that does not do these two things. To furnish a safe deposit for such capital of individuals as they do not at that time need and lend the same to other individuals who do need it at that time is not enough. Finally, no more supervision, control, or burdens should be imposed upon banks than experience has proved, not theory has suggested, is absolutely necessary to their proper safety and service of the people.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO IDAHO BILL.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the amendments which the minority will submit when the bill for the admission of Idaho is presented for consideration.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the amendments will be printed, as requested by the gentleman from Missouri.

There was no objection.

The amendments are as follows:

Amendments proposed by the minority of the Committee on the Territories to the bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission into the Union of the State of Idaho, and for other purposes.

FIRST AMENDMENT.

Strike out sections 1 and 2 and in lieu thereof insert the following sections, and change the numbers of the other sections accordingly:

"SECTION 1. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Idaho, as at present described, may become the State of Idaho, as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 2. That all persons who shall have resided within the limits of said proposed State for sixty days, and are otherwise qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in said Territory; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as, by the laws of said Territory, persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed State, in proportion to the aggregate number of votes in each of said counties for Delegate in Congress, at the election held in said Territory on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1885. One delegate shall be allowed for every 300 votes cast in each county, and one delegate for any fraction of 150 votes cast in each county. That said apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief justice, and the United States attorney of said Territory; and the governor of said Territory shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in June, 1890, which proclamation shall be issued within thirty days after the passage of this act; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territory regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress. All persons resident in said proposed State, who are qualified voters of said Territory, as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act: Provided, That if any elector in said Territory who may offer to register as a voter or to vote at either of said elections shall be challenged on the ground that he is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of Idaho or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who in any manner teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of Idaho prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the Territory, it shall be the duty of one of the judges of the registration or of the election where such elector is challenged to tender him the oath prescribed in section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, known as the anti-polygamy act, with such modification only as is necessary in order to comply with the laws of the Territory of Idaho in respect to his residence therein; and if such elector shall take and subscribe said oath so modified, his vote shall be received and counted at such elections. But if said elector shall swear falsely in taking such oath, he shall, on conviction, be deemed guilty of perjury, and he shall be punished accordingly.

"SEC. 3. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the 4th day of July, 1890, and after organization shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State:

"First, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship;

"Second, that the people inhabiting the said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use; but nothing herein or in the ordinance herein provided for shall preclude the said State from taxing, as other lands are taxed, any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indians or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe;

"Third, that the debts and liabilities of said Territory shall be assumed and paid by the said State; and

"Fourth, that provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control.

"Sec. 4. That, in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection at an election to be held in said Territory on the Tuesday after the first Monday of October, 1890, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of said Territory, who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances; and if the constitution and government of said proposed State are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election; and thereupon the proposed State of Idaho shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation."

SECOND AMENDMENT.

Amend the bill by adding to section 1 the following:

"Provided, That this constitution shall not take effect until the same shall have been submitted to a vote of the people of the Territory of Idaho. That for the purpose of such submission the governor of Idaho shall issue his proclamation calling upon the voters of said Territory to assemble at their respective places for voting on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1890, then and there to cast their ballots for or against the adoption of such constitution; and the said governor may prescribe such form of ballot as shall be used at the said election; and the said election shall be conducted in the manner and by the officers as now provided by the laws of the said Territory; and returns thereof shall be made, and the same shall be canvassed, in the same manner as is required by the laws of the said Territory in case of an election of Delegate to the Congress; and if the majority shall vote in favor of the adoption of the said constitution the governor shall issue his proclamation thereof: Provided, That if any elector in said Territory who may offer to register as a voter or to vote at said election shall be challenged on the ground that he is a bigamist or a polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of Idaho or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who, in any manner, teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of Idaho prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the Territory, it shall be the duty of one of the judges of the registration or of the election where such elector is challenged to tender him the oath prescribed in section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, known as the anti-polygamy act, with such modification only as is necessary in order to comply with the laws of the Territory of Idaho in respect to his residence therein; and if such elector shall take and subscribe said oath so modified, his vote shall be received and counted at such election. But if said elector shall swear falsely in taking such oath, he shall, on conviction, be deemed guilty of perjury, and he shall be punished accordingly."

THIRD AMENDMENT.

Add to section 1 of the bill the following:

"Provided, This act shall not take effect except upon the fundamental condition that within the said State of Idaho there shall be no denial of the right of suffrage, or of the right to hold office, or to serve on juries because of crime, except after conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That the right of suffrage may be denied prior to conviction for a crime committed in connection with a pending election and in violation of the election laws where conviction would be impossible prior to such election; but in case an elector is challenged on account of such crime he may deny under oath that he is guilty thereof; and after taking such oath his vote shall be received; but if he swears falsely in taking such oath he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, he shall be punished accordingly; and upon the further condition that the Legislature of said State shall, by a solemn public act, declare the assent of said State to the said condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States an authenticated copy of said act, upon receipt whereof the President, by proclamation, shall forthwith announce the fact, whereupon said condition shall be held as a part of the organic law of the State, irrevocable without the consent of Congress; and thereupon and without any further proceeding on the part of Congress the admission of said State in the Union shall be considered as complete. Said State Legislature shall be convened by the governor of Idaho within thirty days after he shall take his office, to act upon the conditions submitted herein."

ADMISSION OF IDAHO.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit from the Committee on Rules a substitute for the resolution fixing the time for the consideration of the bill for the admission of Idaho.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday and Thursday next; and that after sixty minutes of the morning hour on those days the House proceed to consider the bill for the admission of Idaho; and that the previous question be considered as ordered at 3 o'clock on Thursday on the bill to its passage, and pending amendments, together with the three amendments proposed by the minority.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the resolution had been adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I demand a division.

Mr. McKINLEY. This resolution was understood to meet the approval of the minority of the committee. It was agreed to as being satisfactory to that minority, and is presented in its present shape for that reason.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. After the statement of the gentleman from Ohio I withdraw the demand for a division.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question? Why is it that these things can not be considered under the general code of rules that we have adopted? I do not say that to interfere with this arrangement, but it does seem to me that we ought to have general rules, and not to take these things up piecemeal under special rules.

Mr. McKINLEY. Speaking for myself, I think that this seems to be the better and the speedier way of admitting States into the Union.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the objection to the usual way? We were told that we were to have rules under which we could operate successfully, and yet you are bringing in a new rule every day or two.

Mr. McKINLEY. The gentleman ought to remember, and he doubtless knows, that under the rules of this House the Committee on Rules have the right to report these special orders at any time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand that the Committee on Rules have that privilege.

Mr. McKINLEY. And we are getting on excellently with the conduct of public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. But you are making a new rule every day.

Mr. McKINLEY. And making a rule to promote the public business every day; just what we ought to do.

Mr. McMILLIN. And that was what the old rules would accomplish.

Mr. McKINLEY. Well, we did not think the old rules good enough and we changed them, and we are getting on very well on the whole under the new system.

The SPEAKER. The demand for a division has been withdrawn.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 42.

So the resolution was agreed to.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the following substitute bill for certain bills named, and to ask that the bill and report may be printed and recommitted to the committee.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8919) to declare a forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAYSON. I also request that the gentlemen from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] have leave to file the views of the minority, to be printed at the same time as the report of the majority.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to file the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be ordered to be printed, with leave to the minority to file their views, and the bill and report will be recommitted.

There was no objection.

SHORT METHOD OF SPELLING.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of Miscellaneous Document No. 76, on the short method of spelling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, for the remainder of the day and for to-morrow.

To Mr. HAYES, for fifteen days, on account of important business.

DEATH OF HON. DAVID WILBER.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce the demise of Hon. David Wilber, of New York. The lamp of his life, which for months has been failing, to-day went out. The time is not here to speak his eulogy. At some future time I shall ask the House to turn aside from its business to pay fitting tribute to his memory. For the present I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has learned with profound regret of the death of Hon. David Wilber, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a special committee of seven members of the House of Representatives and three members of the Senate be appointed to take order for attending his funeral at his residence in the State of New York; and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be payable out of first funds in the contingent fund of the House available therefor.

That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the following members on the special committee just created: Mr. BELDEN, Mr. DE LANO, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. WALLACE of New York, Mr. BYNUM, Mr. TRACEY, and Mr. LEE.

Then (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, in obedience to the order of the Senate sending to that committee the bill (S. 1) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production, to report back the bill within the time mentioned by the Senate in its order with an amendment—one amendment—striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the measure that the committee reports.

I will state that there is one section in the amendment which I think goes further than it ought to do, but for the sake of unity all around I shall be entirely willing to support the measure as it is reported. I ought to say, as I stated to the committee, that owing to a little necessity of health I shall probably not be in town at the time the matter may be properly and fairly taken up, and so some other gentleman of the committee will move it whenever it is convenient to the Senate to consider it.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to hear the bill, as reported, read.

Mr. VEST. I want to state in connection with the report made by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that I agreed to that report, but with the understanding that there was one section of the bill as now reported which I desired amended. In my judgment, it does not go far enough. I wish to state that in justice to myself.

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire if it is the same section the Senator from Vermont says goes too far in some provisions of it, which the Senator from Missouri thinks does not go far enough?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the same provision.

Mr. CULLOM. It is the same section?

Mr. VEST. It is the same section. I think it is numbered 7 in the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Some Senators on the committee have deemed it necessary to state their exact position with reference to the bill and I will state mine.

I regard the bill, so far as it goes, as a very good one, the best I think that can be framed under that particular power of Congress, the power over commerce, which the committee have attempted to frame a bill under. There are one or two powers of Congress which may be exercised, in my judgment, very effectually in the direction of the suppression of these trusts and combinations, which the committee did not see proper to exercise.

I shall support the bill as it has been reported, and if, on consultation with friends who agree with me, it should be deemed the best course, I may then ask the Senate to look to other and additional powers in the way of suppressing these trusts; and I may offer amendments which will look to additions to the bill, not to striking out or amending anything that is in the substitute reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] asks that the substitute be read.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I ask for the reading of the proposed substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

Mr. COKE. I desire to state that I concur with the bill as reported, with the exception that I would prefer one of the sections, the one referred to by the Senator from Missouri, to be in a little different form, and if an amendment placing it in a different shape shall be offered I shall support it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and, pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

SEC. 5. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under section 4 of this act may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpoenas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

SEC. 6. Any property owned under any contract or by any combination or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section 1 of this act, and being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to a foreign country, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

SEC. 7. Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

SEC. 8. That the word "person" or "persons" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ought to say that as this bill was under discussion and had the lead on the Calendar when it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary I shall hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take it up very soon, indeed perhaps as soon as the pending matter of privilege is out of the way.

JOSEPH H. MADDOX.

Mr. SPOONER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date copies of all letters, papers, and reports on file in the War Department bearing upon the loyalty and fidelity of Joseph H. Maddox to the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and bearing in any wise upon his relations to the Southern Confederacy, so called, and also bearing upon the title to and ownership of the tobacco for which said Maddox during his lifetime laid claim, and to which his representatives now lay claim by bill pending in the Senate Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know some reason why that information is called for. That bill has been reported favorably heretofore several times and the committee found that the man was loyal and that the claim ought to be paid, and I should like to know why that information is desired now at this date.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is accurate in his statement that the bill for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox has been several times reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. The bill has been pending for many years. It has been several times favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate; it has been many times reported favorably by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives; it has several times passed the Senate and I think it has several times passed the House of Representatives. Last session it passed both Houses and was vetoed by President Cleveland upon some technical ground. It was reintroduced at this session of Congress, and referred, as usual, to the Committee on Claims. A couple of weeks ago I received an anonymous letter, evidently written by a person of intelligence, in which I was advised that this claimant was a spy for the Confederate Government as well as in the secret service at one time of the United States Government, and informing me that an investigation of the Confederate archives in the War Department would develop the fact.

I explored the archives upon the subject and I found a bundle of papers which had not been examined for ten years, among which were letters signed by Mr. Maddox and in the handwriting of Mr. Maddox, and his handwriting was exceedingly beautiful, dated in Richmond in 1861 and in 1862 and 1863, addressed some of them to Mr. Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, in which he protested his loyalty to the Confederacy and referred to the fact that he had offered to raise at his own expense in Maryland a battalion of mounted men to serve the Confederacy.

There are papers there also which tend to show that at one time he furnished to the Confederate authorities the status of the Union forces at Fortress Monroe. I find also statements, I think one of them over his signature, that he sustained intimate and friendly relations with prominent gentlemen on both sides and was engaged in running the blockade, one communication from the medical department of the Confederacy stating the great need of opium and quinine and brandy and other articles of the kind, and asking him to obtain them within the Federal lines, and his reply, in his own handwriting and over his own signature, that he was in bad odor in the United States by virtue of his services to the Confederacy and he would not dare to be found within our lines, but that in a manner pointed out he could, he thought, secure the accomplishment of the desired end; also a letter from him submitting a plan for the capture of Leonardtown, Md., by the Confederate forces, which he offered to head and to lead.

I also find among the papers, not in the archives, but on the files of the War Department, some very interesting information bearing upon the general question as to his fidelity, and among other things a statement which I do not say shows, but which tends to show, that by a signal dispatch communicated to a signal officer of the Confederate authorities, and referred to as "M," they were advised of the entire plan of the Union forces to mine Petersburg and of the attack which was to follow the explosion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly satisfied with the explanation as far as it has gone.

Mr. SPOONER. The papers are in great number. There is also, if I may conclude the statement which has been called for by the Senator from Missouri, the statement of a Confederate commissary that the tobacco for which this claim was made was in fact Confederate tobacco, and papers from the railway company which transported it from Richmond to the point where the Federal forces captured and destroyed part of it, showing that it was shipped and receipted for as Confederate tobacco.

I have thought that it was due to the situation generally that this information be called for and brought to the Senate in such shape that it might be printed for easy and ready reference hereafter, if it should be thought at any time that the public interests required that it be consulted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am very glad the Senator has presented the resolution. It only confirms what I have suspected, and why I have been opposing this bill for the last eight or ten years, and I want to say now to the Senator that there are one or two other bills pending in this committee. I will name one of them, the bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph H. Shannon, or somebody else as assignee. He was in the Confederate service, but, notwithstanding, the bill has been reported here time and again favorably. I have told the Senator about it and if the bill is ever reported back to the Senate I will prove it in the man's own handwriting. It is due to the committee and the distinguished chairman to say that the bill has not been reported since I presented to him the information I had.

Mr. SPOONER. A number of times I have received suggestions of the same kind from the Senator from Missouri, and I take great pleasure in saying to him that the bill to which he refers, and several others which I need not name, are being very carefully investigated by the committee.

I ought to say, Mr. President, that some of these papers are consistent with the loyalty of this man Maddox to the Federal Government, and might have been so written to protect him if he were within the Confederate lines, but altogether I thought the information ought to be brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to make one statement in regard to this matter, and I think I can do it with entire impartiality, for I have myself when upon the Committee on Claims reported this bill both ways. In the first place, it appears that this gentleman was authorized to make certain purchases of tobacco under an act of Congress in the Confederate lines, but it appeared, however, that he had not complied with all the Treasury regulations, and I reported against the claim on that ground. Then it was made to appear by evidence brought to my attention by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOEMAN], who knew the party, that this man was in the employ of President Lincoln, and that he had manifestly the implied assent of President Lincoln and of the Secretaries of the Treasury under his Administration to the departure from the law. Whether they were authorized to allow any such departure from the law might be doubted; but it was evident, according to the testimony before the committee then, that this man was acting in the employ of the National Government, and was acting in very important and delicate service directed by President Lincoln himself personally. Therefore I thought it was proper to waive those irregularities of the proceeding and to consider the substance of his claim.

Now, it seems to appear that there is some evidence that he also was acting in the employment of the Confederate government. I suppose it is true in fact, where spies, secret officials, are employed by Governments in time of war, that they establish the semblance of such employment with both Governments, and it is often a difficult thing to find out afterwards to which Government they were true. Sometimes they are true to neither; sometimes they are true and loyal to one.

I suppose every Senator remembers Cooper's famous novel of The Spy, where Harvey Birch, who is the chief character of that novel, who was one of the most valuable servants of General Washington during the war, one of the most loyal of men, parted with all his neighbors and everybody except General Washington, and was regarded as the spy of the other side, and that character is taken from an actual personage who dwelt in the neighborhood of Cooper's own county in New York, Westchester County, I think.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this statement. A similar condition of things had been alleged and charged against one of the most famous, able, and, as I believe, most thoroughly loyal generals of our Revolutionary war, General Solomon H. Parsons.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator, before he sits down, that it is undoubtedly true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that a person acting in the capacity of a spy for any government will seek to establish such relations with the opposing government as will effectually deceive that other government; but I suggest that proof which would be absolutely conclusive against the person acting in that capacity, as far as any claim is concerned, would be this: If it could be shown to the satisfaction of the committee or of the Senate that the person, while acting in the capacity of spy, had actually given the Confederate government information as to our forces—

Mr. EDMUNDS. That made him a spy on both sides.

Mr. MITCHELL. That would be conclusive evidence against him, as far as his claim goes.

Mr. SPOONER. I only want to say in addition to what has been said—and I did not intend to discuss this case at all, for this is information to be considered by the committee—that Mr. Stanton (if he ever had faith in the fidelity of this gentleman, Maddox), a very cultivated, and able, and fearless man, must have lost it, for he ordered Maddox's incarceration ultimately in the Old Capitol prison upon the ground that he was not true to the cause of the Union.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution reported by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask to be excused from further service on the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from New Hampshire has made a request.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose the Senator will be excused without objection. If so, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to fill the vacancy thus created.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and to that made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]? The Chair hears none.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3358) for a public building for a marine hospital at Gallipolis, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3359) to compensate the heirs of Joseph Henry; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is accompanied by a very interesting statement by the daughter of Mr. Henry, formerly chairman of the Light-House Board, setting out the savings he had made and the claim for this compensation. I ask that the papers be printed as a document. The bill will be printed of course in the ordinary way, and I ask that the papers accompanying it be printed as a document and referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Finance. As the services performed relate to the Treasury Department, I suppose that will be the proper reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Finance, and the accompanying papers were ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3360) granting an increase of pension to James Shaahan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3361) granting a pension to Edith S. Read; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KENNA (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3362) to regulate, define, establish, and secure the civil, political, and property rights of such American citizens as have intermarried with the Chickasaw Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MOODY introduced a bill (S. 3363) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of South Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3364) for the relief of Robert N. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3365) for the relief of the trustees of Trinity Episcopal Church; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 3366) granting a pension to Sarah J. Alexander; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3367) to incorporate the Columbia Electric Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3368) for the relief of James Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3369) granting a pension to Frank Alcott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3370) granting a pension to Betsey A. Matthews; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. I have also been requested to introduce a bill, and do so with the statement that having read it I do not commit myself to the provisions of the bill nor do I believe in them.

The bill (S. 3371) to invalidate wills made in the District of Columbia under certain conditions was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3372) to amend and to further extend the benefits of an act entitled "An act to provide for allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1867; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3373) for the relief of Patrick Montgomery; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3374) for the purpose of improving, completing, and beautifying a soldiers' cemetery at Parsons, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3375) to increase the pension of Samuel A. Tate; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3376) for the relief of John A. Barton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3377) restoring E. L. May to the Navy retired-list, with the rank of Lieutenant-commander; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2751) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HALE, as follows:

Ordered, That on and after Monday, April 7, 1890, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend by striking out "7" and inserting "14," and after the amendment is read I wish to say a word.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution in line 1, after the word April, by striking out "7" and inserting "14;" so as to read:

Ordered, That on and after Monday, April 14, 1890, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In support of that amendment, Mr. President, I have to say very briefly (because I do not wish to waste the time of the Senate on such matters) that there have been already reported from committees at this session more than eight hundred separate subjects. The highest number on the Calendar to-day is 801 in the regular order, being bills that came from committees, besides a considerable number of affairs that are laid on the table to be taken up, as they can be, on anybody's motion. Some of these numbers are out, of course, because the original numbers, I think, stand, but it is safe to say, I think, that now there are more than seven hundred subjects reported from committees on our Calendar requiring action, and I thought, and I supposed a large majority of the Senate thought, that more useful service in the public interest could be done by endeavoring to get on with very important public measures and devoting one day in the week to the Calendar and by meeting an hour earlier here rather than giving that hour to our committee work to pile up this Calendar. That is the whole reason of my amendment, to try to get along.

Mr. HALE. I introduced the resolution because I thought I perceived that the operation of the 11 o'clock meeting was very embarrassing and inconvenient, and resulting in little good. I for one am not very strenuous whether the time be fixed at next Monday or next Monday a week, but the operation of the 11 o'clock hour of meeting is practically to dissolve the committees. Whether there be upon the Calendar seven or eight hundred or seventeen or eighteen hundred bills already reported by the different committees of the Senate, it is undoubtedly true that the committees of the body were never more busy than to-day, than this week, or next week. I know that I have been obliged to attend five different committee meetings this week since last Sunday. To meet here at 11 takes away not only the opportunity for Senators to attend committee meetings, but also renders it impossible to attend to any departmental business, which Senators know is as much needed as anything else in the course of our duties here.

I introduced the resolution with no desire or disposition to shirk work or responsibility, because I believed (and in conference with many other Senators I found that they agreed with me) that the business of the Senate would, for the present, be better disposed of by returning after this week, having tried the 11 o'clock meeting for one week, to the old hour of 12 o'clock. With these considerations I am entirely willing to leave the matter to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I think a week of this meeting at 11 o'clock will be enough. I do not know how it is with other Senators, but I find myself so burdened with business relating to affairs in the Departments and before committees that I am under constraint to do one of two things, either abandon that or abandon the purpose of coming here at 11 o'clock as a rule. I do not believe that in any event it is helpful. I believe the experience of all members of this body is that after we stay here, say, for six hours or five hours, for some reason which is perhaps personal to the members of the Senate, if not to human beings generally, we find that more or less friction arises, and the question whether to move an adjournment or not is uppermost, and we make several vain attempts to stay, and it finally results in adjourning anyhow after about so much has been done. I do not believe we are going to help that by meeting at 11 o'clock.

I admit that it is better to repent at the eleventh hour than not to repent at all, but I confess I should have been a little more considerate on this point if we had attempted some of this haste in legislation as applicable to the ordinary business of the session three or four months ago. If we had done that, and had taken up the Calendar and other things which have been before us all this time, and which have been measurably neglected and put aside, we should not have been under the necessity of exhibiting now to the country what must appear an eleventh-hour repentance and lacking somewhat in sincerity.

I believe in transacting the public business as rapidly as any one, but that public business is composed of what is to be done here, and what is to be done in committee-rooms, and what is to be done in the Departments, including, of course, the correspondence with which every Senator is confronted, and which must be disposed of in order to meet situation which is just as material to his comfort and to the public service as it is that he should be here.

I am satisfied that the purpose of the Senator from Vermont, and which he does not have altogether alone, will be better accomplished by returning to the old order next Monday. In fact, I should be glad to return to it to-morrow. The proposition never had my consent except under constraint; and, while I should be willing in the last days of the session to conform to the practice which then prevails of putting the Senate under whip and spur, I do not believe it is wise to do it now.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I believe the practice is whenever reports are made from committees to enter them in regular order on the Calendar. There have been 801 such reports made and entered on this Calendar. Noting on page 6 of the Calendar the point reached the last time when the Calendar was under consideration, I find that the Senate has either considered or passed over informally 455 cases, according to number. Of those all have been disposed of except 59. Out of the 455 cases which have been reached by the Senate, all but 59 have been disposed of, leaving the difference between 455 and 801 as the number on the Calendar that have not yet been reached.

It seems to me that this of itself would be a sufficient argument to prove that the Senate ought to meet at 12 o'clock and allow the committees some time to work. It is a fact notorious to Senators who have paid any attention to the matter that it has been practically impossible to get committee meetings this week. A vast quantity of important business is now pending before the committees, and with the lapse of a short time the Senate will go to the Calendar as it at present exists. It seems to me to be absolutely necessary that some time should be allowed to committees, or else, if we do nothing else, the order ought to be made general that all committees may sit during the sessions of the Senate, as the Judiciary Committee does now, and that all committees may have their sessions without regard to the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. A feature of this case was illustrated yesterday. While some of the committees have such pressure of business upon them that they are obliged to ask leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, the members of one of the committees came in yesterday and very properly excused themselves for their absence. I do not say it with any disposition to criticize them, because they were obliged under the pressure of business to sit during the Senate's session. Other committees have a great pressure of business upon them, and I have no doubt if they should ask leave of the Senate to sit during its session it would be granted them. But as soon as that is done it would be impossible to do business here. If any two or three committees should be granted the privilege that one or more of the committees now have, to sit during the Senate's sessions, we could not work here between 11 and 12 o'clock.

It seems to me, therefore, that, for the present at least, until the work of the committees is cleared off more than it is, we had better return to the old method. I will come here, I have no doubt all the members of the Senate will come here, at 11 o'clock just as soon as the business of the committees will justify it.

I do not allude to what transpired here yesterday with any other disposition than to illustrate the necessity of Senators doing either one of two things: either coming here at 11 o'clock and neglecting their committee work or getting leave of the Senate to sit during its sessions and then break up a quorum by doing it. Those two things can not go together.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was one of nine Senators this morning who held a meeting as a special committee on matters of importance where speedy action is important. We deliberately sat, notwithstanding the roll-call, for ten or fifteen minutes after 11. Otherwise our meeting would have been almost lost. Yet we are under reproach for not attending to business and not being here to answer to the roll-call!

Mr. REAGAN. My impression is that we shall facilitate and expedite business by meeting at 12 o'clock rather than at 11. Senators have to look over their mail in the morning; they have to attend to their committee business, dispose of their correspondence, and investigate questions, and to do that and meet at 11 o'clock is calculated to bring members here with their brains fevered and wearied and unfitted for the duties of the day.

It seems to me if we attend to the duties that necessarily devolve upon us, give the proper time for thought and preparation for the disposition of questions which come before us, and sit here from 12 to 5, we shall do more business and do it more satisfactorily than by driving ourselves in such a way that we can not attend to our correspondence properly, and can not visit the Departments and do our duties there, and investigate the subjects which come before us here.

I trust the amendment will not be adopted. I concur with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I have been opposed to meeting at 11 o'clock, and I wish we could make the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] operative from to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I moved the amendment, I may be allowed to say a word in reply.

I affirm with emphasis my belief that the practice of the Senate under the 11 o'clock order since it was made, nearly a week ago, has already saved to the Senate the passage of a great many bills that would otherwise have still been on the Calendar; that it has saved to the Senate more than two days of time on important measures which came up right after the routine business, and that instead of being a loss to the general service of the business we have to do here it has already demonstrated itself to be a great gain.

Now, what is the trouble about meeting at 11 o'clock? The Departments are all open at 9. I notice when I come to the Capitol, passing the houses of two heads of Departments in the shortest way to come here, at 9 o'clock or a little before that they are coming out of their doors and going to their business, to see Senators and Members at 9 o'clock or ten minutes after 9, to carry on their work and attend to their correspondence, and I do not know that they think it a very great hardship to get up in the morning and breakfast at half past 7 or 8 o'clock and go to work.

I have found in the committee that is supposed to be the slowest and laziest of any committee of this body or any other that when under this 11 o'clock rule a meeting is called at half past 9 o'clock, as it was at half past 10 o'clock before, we have no more delay in getting a quorum at half past 9 than we had at half past 10 when the hour of meeting was 12. I have observed in the Senate notwithstanding, whatever the motive may have been, a demand by ambitious and always attentive and industrious Senators for a call of the Senate because 42 Senators were not here, although day after day and week after week, when the hour was 12, as will be the case when it is 12 again, it is just as long after 12 o'clock before a quorum is really in the Chamber as it is now after 11 o'clock, and longer.

I have moved the amendment in accordance with what I thought was a general impression that we might go on for a week longer with this effort to clear up the Calendar and dispose of half a dozen very important public measures that are already reported, and I hope that we may do so without doing ourselves or the public interest any very serious injury.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall vote for the Senator's amendment. I am willing to come here at 11 o'clock another week, but I must respectfully protest against the intimation on the part of the Senator that we should get here earlier and work harder. I insist the record will show that there is not such a hard-working legislative body in the world, and that the average business men in the United States do not work as hard as the Senators in this body.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the system by which legislation is carried on in the two Houses, as we all know, is by preparation in committee, in that way securing attention to the details and responsibilities which belong to legislation that do not attract from important interests in the Senate or in the public. Now, that is a very laborious business. It is proper that there should be some portion of the day adequate for that business. We have some forty-five committees in this body. It is not too much to say that some twenty of that number may be considered as effective and constant committees in the examination of subjects of legislation. The method now proposed is to take out of the time which our custom has assigned for committee service one hour away from every committee of the twenty I have spoken of, and thus check the methods of preparation for the confident and assured action of the united Senate when they come together.

I can not look with complacency upon such an arrangement. For myself I shall be quite satisfied to devote more hours of the day-time to the business of the Senate in session if we could adopt a system, which would be quite convenient to me, to take from 9 to 10 every evening about committees. But that is not our custom, and we are not likely to come to that. Then these preparatory hours of the morning that ought to be, and might usefully be, extended to two hours of session for committees will do much more to facilitate business and establish confidence here after the matter comes from the committees than can be done under the other system. But situated as my colleague and myself are in reference to a great State like that of New York, and so near to the seat of Government, the morning hour before coming here is an occasion when we need to see constituents and need to do proper errands, not connected with office-seeking. Therefore, until you are willing to adopt a system by which committees shall meet in the evening, it is very wrong to take away from these twenty committees a preparatory preparation of legislation from each committee in order to add one hour to the Senate in session.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the enumeration on the Calendar of the Order of Business is somewhat misleading. While it stands now, as the Senator from Vermont says, at 801, as a matter of fact there are but 380 bills on the Calendar. So somewhere between four hundred and five hundred have already been disposed of at this session.

With regard to the particular question under consideration, I shall endeavor to accommodate myself to the order of the Senate, whether it be to meet at 11 or at 12, or, as the British Parliament does, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. But the great majority of our work is done in committees. Senators will observe that in the majority of cases bills that have been matured in committee and reached the Calendar very seldom excite much debate unless they are subjects in which the public is specially interested.

I believe that it would be wise to fix the hour of meeting at 12 o'clock, but at the same time, like others who have spoken, I am entirely willing to have the order as now standing continued for a week, because there are two or three measures of very great importance that ought to be disposed of and which I shall hope within that time may be reached and considered. Among them are the bill this morning reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, known as the anti-trust bill, the railroad forfeiture bill, the question of privilege concerning the admission of the Senators from Montana, and perhaps the silver question. It seems to me that while the weather is agreeable, the temperature mild and moderate, and before the summer solstice appears, we ought to improve the shining hours and get rid of these important measures now on the Calendar. I therefore cordially concur with the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, that until these matured measures of great consequence now upon the Calendar are considered we ought to meet at 11 o'clock and dispense with further committee meetings.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to state, in response to my colleague and for the benefit of the Senate, that there are to-day about 3,000 bills in committees. The number of Senate bills is about 3,500, and 400 or 500 have come over from the other House, making about 4,000, of which 800 or 1,000 have been disposed of so far as the committees are concerned. Now, as I happen to know, there are many bills of very great importance pending in committee. I do not believe that meeting at 11 o'clock is going to dispense with the consideration of all those measures and others, but I think we shall make more progress, not only for the time being, but for all the work of this session, by meeting at the accustomed hour of 12 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. EVARTS. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of the resolution it is proposed to strike out the figure "7" and insert the figure "14," so as to read: Resolved, That on and after Monday, April 14, 1890, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If he were present I should vote "yea," but, especially as this seems to be in some sense a political question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 29; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HALE, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday, April 7, 1890, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock meridian, until otherwise ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. HOAR. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the motion I am about to make. I move to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will not press that motion this morning, but let it wait until to-morrow morning. I shall make no objection to his renewing it to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Then I give notice that I shall call up to-morrow morning at this time the motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 1332) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1738) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Missouri River, in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, in the State of Nebraska;

A bill (S. 2026) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.;

A bill (S. 2323) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Pendleton, Desha County, Arkansas; and

A bill (S. 2324) to authorize the building of a bridge across White River, Arkansas, by the Mississippi and Little Rock Railway Company.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1873) authorizing the Brazos Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas; and

A bill (S. 2284) for the organization, improvement, and maintenance of the National Zoological Park.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 380) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers," approved January 8, 1889;

A bill (H. R. 5729) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 7164) to amend and continue in force "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City and Watertown Railway Company," approved August 6, 1888;

A bill (H. R. 7985) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada," approved June 19, 1878;

A bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus, and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended in sinking wells or the construction of irrigation works; and the work done under this appropriation shall be completed and a report of the same made within the appropriation, and nothing herein shall commit the Government to any plan of irrigation or the construction of works therefor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
D. B. HENDERSON,
J. G. CANNON,
W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REGISTRY OF BARGES.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3131) for the registry or enrollment of the barges Herdis and Agostinoc. It is a matter of great consequence to a gentleman engaged in transporting fertilizers or phosphate rock. It will not take a minute to dispose of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call up the Montana case at this time, according to notice, but I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina if his bill involves no debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3131) for the registry or enrollment of the barges Herdis and Agostinoc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 8, to strike out the word "Agostinoc" and insert "Agostino C."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the chairman of the Committee on Commerce inform us why these vessels do not fall within the general law, and, if they do not, why they ought to be brought into an American registry? I dare say he can do it in a moment.

Mr. FRYE. Because in the general law which provides for issuing a register to wrecked vessels barges are not included. There is another law which includes canal-boats, barges, etc., entirely within the inland waters and lakes. These two barges do not happen to come under that provision of law, simply because they sail between Charleston and Savannah.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it is entirely within the spirit of the general law?

Mr. FRYE. It is entirely within the spirit of the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "A bill for the registry or enrollment of the barges Herdis and Agostino C."

SENATORS FROM MONTANA.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the Montana Senatorial contest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Report No. 538, by Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it will be more agreeable to the Senate not to have these two long reports read in full from the desk. I can state the substance of the majority report. I think I can make a clear and compact statement of it in fifteen minutes, if the Senate will kindly give me their attention for that time, which will put them in possession of the points in the case as I understand them and will save a good deal of time and labor. If the Chief Clerk will read the first resolution reported from the committee I will proceed to make that statement, if no Senator calls for the reading of the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this case involves the title to two seats in this body of persons claiming to be elected from the new State of Montana.

There is no difference whatever that I have heard between the case of the two claimants, Mr. Sanders and Mr. Power on one side and the two claimants, Mr. Clark and Mr. Maginnis, on the other. The question between those two sets of persons depends wholly upon the point whether five Republicans or five Democrats were authorized to sit in the house of representatives of Montana, to take part in the organization of that body, and vote for Senators. There was a valid organization of the senate. Two bodies met, each claiming to be the true house. There was no choice of the United States Senators by any concurrent vote and at the time and in the manner fixed by the Constitution and laws of the United States. One-half exactly of the senate of Montana met in a joint convention with one of these bodies and everything necessary to elect a Senator, if they had the right to do it, took place, and the other half met in a joint convention with the other body.

The question is, therefore, which of those two joint conventions contained the members of a lawful house? That question is settled by determining which of the two groups or sets of five had the right to act as representatives for the State of Montana from the county of Silver Bow, and that question in its turn depends ultimately in one of its aspects on transactions at precinct No. 34 in that county. I can state, I think, the propositions on which the majority report rests very briefly for the satisfaction of the Senate.

In the first place, each of these two bodies of five persons claimed to have lawful credentials. One had credentials from a Territorial board consisting of the chief-justice and two other Territorial officers, and the other set had credentials from a county clerk. The question is, which of those two were the lawful credentials?

There was necessary for a quorum in Montana the presence of twenty-nine persons. In one of these houses there were twenty-five persons unquestionably elected and unquestionably having lawful credentials. In the other house there were twenty-four persons unquestionably elected. Adding to those twenty-five the five disputed persons, one of the bodies would have thirty. Adding in the other body to the twenty-four the five persons, that body would have twenty-nine—enough in each instance to make a quorum.

The first question therefore is who had lawful credentials which entitled them to sit and vote in the house of representatives of the State of Montana until the house itself by its constitutional judgment had determined favorably or adversely to their title to the seat.

Then the second question in the case is this: Whether, supposing one of these bodies was made up of twenty-five persons lawfully and unquestionably entitled to sit in it and of five persons who had lawful credentials, and the other was made up of twenty-four or twenty-five persons who unquestionably had a title to sit in it and five persons who had not lawful credentials, but are now found by the Senate to have been really elected by the people—which of those two bodies is entitled to be treated by it in determining this question as the lawful and constitutional house.

The third question in the case is the final question, which of these two sets of five persons were lawfully and actually elected by the people, without regard to the technicalities or to the credentials, but upon the substance of the election as we have the evidence before us.

The majority of the committee are of opinion that the five men that sat in what is known as the Iron Hall, or Republican house, who claimed to be elected as Republican members from the county of Silver Bow, had the lawful credentials and that they were entitled to sit in the representative chamber of the State of Montana when the house of representatives organized and to retain those seats, as they did retain them, acting in all respects as lawful representatives until there had been a judgment of the house itself to the contrary, which it is not claimed ever happened.

In the next place, the majority of the committee are of opinion that, if this body of persons had the lawful and constitutional certificates of their election, that title is a good title against all the world, governing their associates in that body, governing the senate, governing everybody who has a lawful duty to determine who are lawfully elected representatives until there be an adjudication of the house itself to the contrary, and that nobody can be heard to say and that no authority can be permitted to inquire into or determine the actual facts of the election as against that title. That is the second proposition.

The third proposition is that, upon the merits of the election itself, the five claimants in the Iron Hall, or Republican legislature, from the county of Silver Bow were truly and lawfully elected. I wish to say, speaking for myself and speaking for my associates who have joined in this report, that, as I believe, not desiring to be inmodest and with entire deference to the opinion of the gentlemen who differ from me, this case seems to me to be absolutely impregnable on all three of these propositions, and there has not been presented for my determination, either in the Senate or in the other House, since I have been in public life, what, when properly understood, seems to me to be a clearer case for the decision of the Senate or the House.

Now, the question about the lawful credentials is just this: The statute, the enabling act, authorized the constitutional convention of Montana to provide for taking the sense of the people upon the adoption or rejection of the constitution and for the election of the State officers at the same time, for which the convention which proposed the constitution should provide. The convention exercised that authority by an ordinance known as the election ordinance, ordinance No. 2, which accompanied the constitution itself; and that ordinance provided that—

The votes cast at said election for the adoption or rejection of said constitution shall be canvassed by the canvassing boards of the respective counties not later than fifteen days after said election, or sooner if the returns from all of the precincts shall have been received, and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory of Montana for canvassing the votes at general elections in said Territory, and the returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who, with the governor and the chief-justice of the Territory, or any two of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers, who shall meet at the office of the secretary of the Territory on or before the thirtieth day after the election and canvass the votes so cast and declare the result.

That is the method providing for ascertaining the result as to the constitution itself. Then the seventh section of the ordinance provides:

That on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, there shall be elected by the qualified electors of Montana a governor, a lieutenant-governor, a secretary of state, an attorney-general, a State treasurer, a State auditor, a State superintendent of public instruction, one chief-justice and two associate justices of the supreme court, a judge for each of the judicial districts established by this constitution, a clerk of the supreme court, and a clerk of the district court in and for each county of the State, and the members of the Legislative Assembly provided for in this constitution.

Seventh. There shall be elected at the same time one Representative in the Fifty-first Congress of the United States.

Eighth. The votes for the above officers shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law, and returns shall be made to the secretary of the Territory and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, except as to clerk of the district court.

The clerk of the district court was a district officer, confined either to one county or to two or more counties, and he was a local officer. With that exception, the law expressly provided that the votes for all these officers and for the Legislative Assembly shall be returned to and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, which is this State board. Then it goes on to say that "there shall also be elected at the same time the following county and township officers, and the votes for these officers shall be returned and canvassed as now provided by law." That old Territorial law provided that the votes for these county officers should be canvassed by a county board and the result certified by the county clerk. There were no other officers in the Territory elected by the people. All the officers were appointed either by the governor or by the President of the United States. Many of the offices enumerated in this first section did not exist at all in the Territory. The only general Territorial election was for a Delegate in Congress, in regard to which there was a special mode of canvass by Territorial officials provided by a special law for that purpose.

Now, then, our friends on the other side think that because this statute says that the votes shall be returned and canvassed as provided by law there is to be a canvass and a declaration of the result by the county board, and a certificate given, although the ordinance contains the express provision that after that canvass the votes shall be further returned to the secretary of state and canvassed like the votes for the constitution.

That proposition seems to us entirely inadmissible.

But it is said the statute does not say that when this State or Territorial board have canvassed the votes for the entire Territory they shall declare the result and give a certificate of it. But we understand that that duty and obligation are involved in the obligation to make the canvass.

Now, let us see what is the alternative and to what result the proposition made by our learned friends on the other side must bring them. In the first place, if they say that the method of declaring and certifying the result provided by the old Territorial law is the one still in force, you have not any provision for either certifying the result or declaring the result or giving certificates in regard to all of these officers, who were only created by the constitution for the first time, because the Territorial law never applied to them. In the next place, in creating the Legislature for the State of Montana there was the old body of the house of representatives corresponding to this like body in the Territorial legislation, and there was an entirely new and legal and constitutional creation of the senate, the only thing at all resembling which was a legislative council, which had certain functions like that of the executive council in States where they have them, and certain other functions of a legislative character. But it does not now exist.

When you have a statute which declares that the vote shall be cast for a legislative assembly and canvassed as required by law, if the votes are to be canvassed and the result declared for members of the house by the old district officers alone, not by the State officers, you have got the extraordinary result that, while precisely the same phrase is used, Legislative Assembly, including both houses, you have one method of declaring the result and giving the certificate provided as to the house of representatives and no method at all provided as to the senate. The old law never applied to it and the phraseology of the new law, according to our friends on the other side, does not reach it.

Then you have got this further result, which seems to me practically an absurdity. If these votes are to be canvassed by this State board and the result of that canvass declared and certificates given by the county board, it follows that an inferior officer, who has no connection with the State board whatever, who has no access even to what they do except such access as may be the right of all citizens in general, is to certify the result of this State body of canvassers. These clerks reside and perform their duties at a distance from the seat of government. I am told by good authority that one of them has his office at a distance of 460 miles from the seat of government in that Territory. There is no provision made for his compensation, for his travel; there is no express enactment that he shall perform this duty; and yet our learned friends on the other side are inevitably driven to this position: that in the face of that express provision that this canvass shall take place—that is, that votes for the constitution are to be canvassed, which is the case with representatives to the General Assembly—these clerks are expected to travel 460 miles to inspect the documentary evidence of a canvass which is kept in a State office at the capital, and which, of course, can not be sent away from it, ascertain the result, and give the certificate to the members elected. To my humble apprehension that proposition is clearly and manifestly preposterous.

Then we come to the next step. Suppose, now, we have a Legislative Assembly of whom enough to make a constitutional quorum have lawful certificates from the lawful canvassing board, as these men from the State canvassers. Are they entitled, under the uniform parliamentary and constitutional practice of this country, to take their seats in that body, organize it, and hold those seats until, acting on each case one by one, the body itself has adjudged against their title there to remain? Nobody is hardy enough to question that proposition as a general rule. I suppose nobody on the other side will doubt it for a moment.

It is too well established in parliamentary processes in this country to be doubted now. But it is said that that doctrine does not apply to the case where there happen to be two bodies, each claiming to be the lawful body, and that in that case if it takes thirty to make a quorum and you have got twenty-five, lawfully elected, with lawful credentials, acting with five men who have gotten credentials, but whose election is disputed, and another body of twenty-five men, lawfully elected and with lawful credentials, acting with five men who have not got any credentials, but who claim that they were really elected, any other party who is to deal with these rival claims (including the Senate of the United States, who are to determine the question of the validity of the election) may in that case go behind the credentials and go behind every technicality or paper title or certificate to the fact and truth of the election itself; and for that proposition the authority of a report made by Mr. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I think, at the time, at any rate a member of it, is cited.

That proposition I wish respectfully to deny; but I desire to say in denying it that a political advantage would ensue to the party to which I belong from its adoption, an immediate political advantage which would go very far beyond, in its attractiveness, if those were the things which attracted us here, anything which could happen by seating two Republican Senators from the State of Montana. If you gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber tell us and will establish as the constitutional law of this country that whenever, for the past fourteen years, a Republican minority has met in the House of Representatives, that minority had in the original organization of that House the lawful right to send for the men who we believe were honestly elected, but had not got the credentials of their States, to make up the body, and then it was the duty of the President and the Senate to recognize them, it is something that had not dawned on our understanding hitherto and may possibly be a useful hint or rule for our guidance in what may happen in the future.

If it be true that ever, in any State, South or North, East or West, the party in the minority who have credentials may get the men who they think were lawfully elected, and have not got them, to make a quorum and then organize and legislate and elect Senators, and it is the duty of this Senate to seat them, I think you will agree that somebody here has exercised a most remarkable abstinence from exercising a constitutional power for the last twenty years. There has not been a Congress for fourteen years, with one or two exceptions, where there was a House of Representatives, in regard to which a large portion of this country and a large majority of this body have not conscientiously believed, whether right or wrong, that there ought to have been added enough to make a majority and to organize a House of men elected, but without credentials. There has not been a time for the last twenty years when there has not been a large number of the people of this country—I am not saying whether right or wrong in that belief—who have not honestly and conscientiously believed that there were Senators sitting in this body whose title to their seats would not have stood against this proposition which is now suggested, if I understand it correctly, on the part of the minority.

This is a much larger question than the question of the seats of the two gentlemen entitled to sit from the State of Montana. I have always believed and have always acted upon that belief, and shall continue to act upon it until the authority of the Senate or the authority at least of some great constitutional lawyers who have seats here—and there are such on the other side of this Chamber and on the other side of this committee—shall declare the contrary, that it is impossible to conduct a free constitutional and legislative government on any other theory than that there must be somebody, from the necessity of the case, who ascertains the result of an election and certifies to that result, and that when that is done, right or wrong, honest or dishonest, as that may be, that certificate clothes the person who receives it with the lawful and rightful authority to exercise the function of a legislator subject only to one judgment, and that is the judgment of the house itself where he undertakes to claim a seat.

How can it be that a Republican minority two years ago or four years ago in the House of Representatives in Washington might have gathered to itself contestants from Democratic districts where they had credentials or that a Democratic minority this winter might have done the same thing in regard to its Republican opponents and undertaken to organize a House, and in that case have put upon the Senate the duty of inquiring into every contested-election case in this country?

If that duty were to be put upon the Senate in determining what body it would recognize and act with, a like duty of course would be imposed upon the President of the United States in the exercise of his constitutional functions, and possibly a third duty upon the courts, and unless it happened that all three of those bodies came to the same conclusion in regard to the debated and disputed and doubted facts of a contested election in a State for Representative in Congress, the whole constitutional legislative function of this country is to be thrown into disorder.

Mr. Carpenter made a report in the Alabama case, where a condition of things like that took place, in which he affirmed that doctrine, it is said, and the majority of the Committee on Elections of course must have assented to his report, though he signs it alone. But in the first place that doctrine is not heard of or suggested in the debate in the Senate on that Alabama case, which was conducted by Mr. Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana, on the part of the then majority in this body, but Mr. Carpenter in his report puts the doctrine expressly on the assertion that the true and valid election of the Republicans in the State of Alabama was conceded.

Mr. MORGAN. That was not true.

Mr. HOAR. That is what he says.

Mr. MORGAN. That was not true. I deny that it was true.

Mr. HOAR. That is what he said. You do not deny that is true, for there it is in the book, and that is enough for my purpose.

Mr. VANCE. The minority report denies it also. I should like to know who made that concession.

Mr. HOAR. I should, too.

Mr. MORGAN. It was not made.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know who made it, but the only man who is found affirming this doctrine anywhere puts the doctrine expressly on the fact that it is conceded, and makes his distinction between that and the contrary doctrine, which he admits is true everywhere else, upon the fact that that is conceded.

Now, whether Mr. Carpenter or whether the Senate of the United States, in that angry and heated time immediately after the war, committed a political act upon which they could not stand in logic or in law, I am not obliged now to discuss. Mr. Halbert E. Paine, the author of the book on contested elections, long ago, some years ago, before the question had come up again, declared in reference to that report of Mr. Carpenter that, if he were seeking to say something in defense of a totally untenable position, that might possibly be as well as anything else he could say, and that was all there was of it.

Mr. GRAY. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to make this statement under much interruption, because I am trying to bring it to a close as soon as I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HOAR. I yield.

Mr. GRAY. Only a moment, and I trust it will not interfere with the Senator. I am interested in the statement just made by the Senator from Massachusetts that Senator Morton, an exceedingly able man, in the debate that occurred in the Senate upon the report of this committee in the Spencer and Sykes case, did not put any stress upon the position taken by Mr. Carpenter, and argued the case not upon that ground, but avoided that position. I did not so understand, and I would ask the Senator what interpretation he puts upon this language used by Mr. Morton when he says:

Here are two rival bodies, each claiming to be the Legislature, and the question for us to determine is now, not which appeared at first to have the legal right, but which in point of fact was the true Legislature of Alabama, which body had the quorum of men who were actually elected? Upon that question there is no sort of difficulty at all.

Mr. HOAR. If that sentence conveys to anybody the fact that Mr. Morton is affirming Mr. Carpenter's view I do not so understand it. If it is, it is the only thing that I think will be found. Mr. Morton put it upon the ground that they were to throw everything to the winds and in this revolutionary condition of things undertaking to overthrow by the forms of law the will of the people, that the Senate should interpose with its authority and find out what the people of Alabama wanted in regard to the Senator, without any regard to lawful or constitutional methods. That is the substance of that speech of Mr. Morton.

Now let me go back or I shall forget what I was saying when I rose.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I would not have interrupted him but that I was interested in the statement.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand that Mr. Carpenter, whether he could rightfully or wrongfully maintain the distinction, stood as well as he could on that distinction alone. Whether it was true in fact or whether it was well founded in law I have nothing to say. We have our own duty at this time; and that was when he was dealing with a case where this fact was conceded, and that if it had not been conceded the law would have been otherwise. If that report of Mr. Carpenter were put upon any other ground, I wish to say for myself, and I think my associates on the committee agree with me, that I dissent from it utterly and absolutely, and I understand the constitution and law to be as I have stated.

Then comes the third proposition. But I do not think that it can be maintained upon the evidence before the committee that the five Democrats from the county of Silver Bow were duly and lawfully elected on the facts or on the merits, but I think on the other hand it is perfectly clear and indisputable to any reasonable apprehension, to any impartial man, that their five competitors were elected. That all depends upon the question whether in truth and in fact the votes which were cast at precinct No. 34, with one exception, which I will state presently, were as reported by the election officers there. That precinct was a precinct in the neighborhood of and including a railroad camp; that precinct was composed very largely of persons employed in the construction of a new railroad. There has not a single mark been brought to our attention in the conduct of that election which indicates to my mind an honest and free election.

The election was held under the Australian ballot system, which had been established there some time before, but the law before the establishment of that ballot system was one which very carefully provided for the security and honesty of elections. It provided for five judges in precincts where there were over 100 votes cast—I think those were the limits—five judges of election and two clerks. They were to have two poll-books and on those poll-books they were required by law to set down in their order the numbers of the voters as they cast their votes. Then at the end of the balloting the two poll-books were to be compared, and if they did not agree the error in one or the other was to be corrected until they did agree. Then the number of voters was to be compared with the number of ballots, and if the number of ballots exceeded the number of voters, enough were to be thrown out of the ballot-box by a very familiar process to reduce and remove the excess.

Now, what happened at that election? In the first place there were not five judges; there were only three. That I concede, taken alone, would be an indication perhaps of a mistake in the officials which ought not to defeat the true will of the people. In the second place, the duty is imposed upon the clerks of the election of carefully scrutinizing the poll-books, making the register, and identifying the voters as they come, and no single duty of either of those clerks was performed by the clerks. They were two illiterate men, and one judge of the election testifies that he did most of the duty which the law imposed upon the clerks. There was no sworn officer therefore who did the clerical duty at that election at all, and, instead of having seven sworn officers to inspect that election, there were but three.

But let that all go. That is not of the essence of the people's will, and perhaps the people were not to blame for that. These persons who were to be voted in regular order and put upon the poll-book in that order turned out to have voted in alphabetical order, the five election officers noting them first, and then they go on in regular alphabetical order from A to Y, and Robert Youngberg was the last voter; and that great safeguard and security by which if a man personates another he can be identified by the man who voted next before and the man who voted next after, so that the election officers would have known about what time he cast his vote, was washed away.

It is said that this also was an honest mistake, that they took the registry list which had been furnished them alphabetically and checked the men as they voted, and that undoubtedly if they disregarded this important provision of the law it was a mistake of the election officers, which ought not to deprive the voters of their due and rightful share in the election. But that does not seem to me to hold water, for they had a copy of the register; and all these facts were furnished by the Democratic contestants. We have not assumed a single fact except what appears from the papers put in by Messrs. Maginnis and Clark and the Democratic judge who tried the title of one or the other of the district officers to his office.

We had, as I said, the register before us, and it is very manifest that this is not a copy of the poll-list; for, in the first place, in the register the christian name follows the surname, and in the poll-list the christian name comes first. In some names in the registry the initials only of the christian names are given, while in the same names in the poll-list the christian names are given in full and in some cases the names are spelled differently or the spelling would require a different pronunciation. This pretended poll-list is a list of somebody who got up that fraudulent election and furnished these men for the purpose of some railroad official who was voting the whole of them. It seems to me that it is an absolute fraud, showing that this is a manufactured, concocted, and pretended election, and not a real one, which it is impossible to mistake by any impartial mind.

But let us go a little further. There are 171 Democratic votes and 3 Republican votes, varying once or twice so that there are 4 for one and 170 for another, and 172 for one and 2 for another, and here was a hotly contested election in the State of Montana, and the election in that county of Silver Bow was so close that a change of 60 votes the one way or the other would have defeated the candidate declared elected or elected the candidate declared defeated—generally an average of 60 or 70 votes—and yet it is found in this one precinct, newly settled, a place where men of all nationalities and gathering from all parts of the Union had come together, that the remarkable and miraculous result is that the votes were divided between the two parties there, when it is so even over all the rest of the Territory and over all the rest of that county, in the proportion of 171 to 3.

Beyond that and another badge of fraud, there was no political division in regard to the constitution of Montana. The Republicans and the Democrats alike were supporting and favoring the adoption of that constitution, and yet substantially the same division in regard to the constitution that existed between the two parties is found in that report.

I remember once going up to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bristow, and meeting a Massachusetts official who had been charged with various delinquencies, and he explained them one after another by some accidents that happened to him; he had been misled and had meant all right. After that interview was over Mr. Bristow came down to the Capitol and said I to him: "What do you think of that fellow?" "Well," said he, "he reminded me of a justice of the peace in Kentucky. A man had been brought before him for stealing cow-bells. He had stolen five or six cow-bells, and he said he never stole them from the cows, but he was out in the pasture and the cows had scratched them off and he had picked them up. 'Well,' said the justice, 'you might possibly have picked up one of those cow-bells in that way; but when it comes to six, I rather think you have stolen them all.'"

Now, when you take up these badges of fraudulent elections, any one of which may possibly be reconciled with honesty, and put them all together, I think the gentlemen who had charge of running that side of that election there stole it all.

But there is another suggestion which is not reconcilable with anything else, and that is apparent upon this fact, that enough of those men who voted the Democratic ticket in the county of Silver Bow were not legal voters, and that appears on the findings of this Democratic judge himself, as to change the majority. The Revised Statutes of the United States, section 1860—

Mr. VANCE. The Senator does not mean to say that the judge acknowledged that those votes were illegal?

Mr. HOAR. No; I say that the judge finds the fact.

Mr. VANCE. From which you infer?

Mr. HOAR. I am going to read to see how it strikes the Senators. The statute of the United States in regard to suffrage in the Territories is this. This is section 1860 of the Revised Statutes:

At all subsequent elections, however, in any Territory hereafter organized by Congress, as well as at all elections in Territories already organized, the qualification of voters and of holding office shall be such as may be prescribed by the Legislative Assembly of each Territory; subject, nevertheless, to the following restrictions on the power of the Legislative Assembly, namely:

First, the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years and by those above that age who have declared on oath before a competent court of record their intentions to become such and have taken an oath to support the Constitution and Government of the United States.

In other words, there is an emphatic and express enactment that it shall not be within the legislative power of any Territory to confer the right of suffrage upon any person who has not taken two oaths: first, the oath that he intends to become a citizen of the United States and, second, the oath to support its Constitution and Government, thereby renouncing all other allegiance.

That latter oath it is not pretended was taken by the aliens who voted at precinct 34 and at precinct 26 in the county of Silver Bow, and that is so found by the judge expressly to whose decision I have already referred. He says that as the law of Montana expressly declares.

All male citizens of the United States . . . who shall have declared their intention of becoming citizens, and who, under existing laws of the United States, may ultimately become citizens thereof, shall be deemed electors of this Territory.

And the Territorial law did not put in this qualification of the act of Congress, although the act of Congress says that it shall be a limitation on the power of the Territory itself, that it shall not admit anybody who has not taken this other oath. The judge says it was not necessary for these men to take that other oath, because the enabling act says that persons who are qualified electors may vote for State officers, and he thinks they meant qualified electors according to the Territorial statute, and not qualified electors according to the existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. Of the United States law?

Mr. HOAR. Of the United States law. Now, let me repeat it. The honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] asks a question about that. The United States law says that the Territorial Legislature may prescribe who shall be qualified electors, subject to the restriction that they shall not let anybody in who has not taken an oath to support the Constitution and Government of the United States. The Territorial law of Montana did not put in that restriction. Undoubtedly it was an accident, but it is not there. It did say that all persons who have declared their intention to become citizens may vote in this Territory.

Then the enabling act says the constitutional convention may provide for the choice of State officers. The constitutional convention says the qualified electors of the Territory shall vote at this election. Now, this judge says that he thinks when they said that they meant the men who were described in the Territorial statute, without regard to the restriction of the act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, that they had forsworn their allegiance?

Mr. HOAR. They meant that the man who had forsworn his foreign allegiance and taken this oath could vote, although Congress in express words had provided that no Territorial Legislature whatever should do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Was that confined to Silver Bow County?

Mr. HOAR. I will state the facts about that; I do not know; there is no evidence on that point. It appears from this judge's own finding, which I have given, that at precinct 34 and at precinct 26 a certain number of men voted who, he said, it was not necessary should take this oath, and in the statement which he makes there is no claim that they had taken it. I do not suppose it is pretended by anybody that they had taken the oath I speak of.

Now, giving all these numbers in these precincts to the Republicans to make up the entire Republican vote in both precincts, you have got enough of them left who must have voted the Democratic ticket to change the result. If we subtract those from the Democratic ticket you let in every one of the Republicans.

Although I make the statement as full as I can in the majority report, I think the minority report must have been written before that was read. Our friends on the other side seem to think that our notion is that these aliens did not properly take the oath of their declaration of intention. The oath they did take was before the clerk, or the clerk's deputy, away from the court-house. The provision of the law on that is this—it is in the statute I have read—that these people who took the oath to support the Constitution—I mean their preliminary declaration—must take it before some court. Afterward a practice grew up, which, I think, is authorized by statute, that for purposes of naturalization it might be taken before the clerk or a deputy away from the court.

Now, it is a very grave question, although that oath might have been taken away from the court for the purpose of naturalization, whether where the statute speaking of the qualification of voters says it must have been taken before the court that would do; but it being a question, we did not care to raise it and debate it here as a doubtful question, because this other thing seems to my humble understanding—I do not think it is very lawyer-like, or very statesmanlike, or very Senatorial to be too confident in your own judgment—but it does seem to my mind that this other proposition is absolutely clear and indisputable.

I do not see any method of getting rid of it, and therefore it is not necessary to talk about the question whether these declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States might have been taken before the clerk or his deputy away from the court. The substantial and decisive point is that no Territorial Legislature could clothe an alien with the right to vote unless he had taken the oath to support the Constitution and laws of the United States, and therefore when the constitutional convention of Montana declared that the qualified electors should elect State officers it did not mean, although the judge of that district said he thinks it did, persons who had been enumerated in an old statute of Montana that omitted this recitation, but it meant the persons who were qualified according to the sovereign dominant authority of the prevailing law, a law necessary on all principles of decent, orderly government in this country.

In order that the gentlemen on the other side may see that I am not overstating what the position of this judge is, let me read it the way the judge states it:

Counsel for contestant seems to think that the court was perhaps misled in making its ruling; that the oath provided by the laws of the United States relating to suffrage in the Territories to be taken by an alien, in addition to his declaration, to make him a qualified elector did not apply at the election held the 1st day of October, 1889. The court reiterates the opinion that Congress having delegated to the constitutional convention of Montana the right to provide for said election, and had prescribed the qualifications of voters thereat, that when such convention provided by ordinance for said election and "that the persons who are then qualified electors, under the laws of this Territory, shall be qualified to vote at said election"—

That is not the phrase. The phrase is "qualified electors." I will read it from the ordinance declaring it in a moment—

it referred to the qualifications prescribed by the Territorial Legislature, and not to those prescribed by any laws of the United States relating to the Territory.

The little phrase on which the judge hangs under the law of the Territory is not really in the ordinance, but if it were I suppose that no law of that Territory could be made by a Territorial Legislature contrary to an act of Congress which expressly declared that the Territorial Legislature could not make that law. Now let me read the phrase in the ordinance:

Sixth. That on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, there shall be elected by the qualified electors of Montana a governor, a lieutenant-governor, and a secretary of state—

And the other officers I have mentioned—and the members of the Legislative Assembly provided for in this constitution.

In the preceding provision about the election the second section is:

Second. At said election the constitution framed and adopted by this convention shall be submitted to the people of the Territory for their ratification or rejection, and all persons who are then qualified electors under the laws of this Territory shall be qualified to vote for the ratification or rejection thereof.

That is what the judge quotes. I do not think it makes any earthly difference in the meaning, but the provision as to the election of a Territorial Legislature simply says, "The qualified electors of the Territory."

Mr. BUTLER. What does the enabling act say?

Mr. HOAR. The enabling act says:

That the constitutional convention may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the Legislature and Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress.

Now, Mr. President, I believe I have stated the salient points in this case. There has been another suggestion made by a gentleman of the committee, a very interesting one, but one which, whether accepted or not, indicates a careful and thoughtful and a philosophic view of the question, which, perhaps, I ought to say a word about, although it does not appear, I think, in the minority report with any great emphasis at any rate, if at all, and I do not know how far it is relied upon, but I should like to say a word upon it.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will allow me, as I understand the suggestion made in committee, that suggestion was not first made by a member of the minority, but by a member of the majority.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it. I have seen that stated publicly in the newspapers, but I do not understand that any member of the majority of the committee ever made that suggestion, certainly not in my hearing. I suppose the member of the committee to whom the Senator refers will answer that question for himself if the Senator sees proper to put it to him. But the proposition is this: It is said that this matter ought to be sent back to the people of Montana and the election treated as a nullity because the Constitution of the United States requires this function of appointing Senators to be performed by the Legislature of the State, and that the term "Legislature" implies a law-making power, a body assembled, an organization that does not simply mean a number of men who might put themselves into the position where they would exercise the authority and be invested and clothed with this function, but it means a body actually capable at the time of the election or appointment of the Senator of making a law, and that when either house, or the governor who assents to the making of laws, or at any rate who must receive laws or have them submitted to him before they can be enacted, refuses to recognize either body claiming to be a legislative assembly, however lawful that body may be, that at once puts out of joint the legislative machinery, and you have not got any longer a body or authority with the present capacity of law-making. They have had it once before and they resume it hereafter, but so long as that condition of things exists there is not a Legislature in the constitutional sense, and that so far as the senate of Montana refused to recognize either of these bodies as the true house of representatives, the senate being evenly divided politically, and so long as the governor of Montana refused to recognize this particular body which took part in this election at that time, it follows that there was not any Legislature.

I do not think that suggestion, however astute or interesting it may be, will bear very full examination. It is an absolute overthrow of the law-making power of this country, national or State, at the will of either of the three persons or bodies which ordinarily take part in it. The Constitution of the United States says that if we pass a law and present it to the President he must either sign it or return it with his objections for our reconsideration, or it will become a law at a certain time. This theory says that by simply refusing to recognize us as a legislative body—what a marvelous suggestion to President Johnson that would have been—he may at once put an end to the entire legislative function and authority here, and so that either body may put an end to the other.

It would overthrow very easily and simply the arrangement which the act of Congress for the election of Senators has provided, because it was the very purpose of the act of Congress, whose constitutionality has been accepted without any considerable dissent, that no legislative body a majority of whom may happen to prefer that their State should go unrepresented here rather than have it represented by a person whom they do not approve shall have the power of putting an end to the appointing or elective function of the State Legislature by its refusal to go on with it.

We found that this function of electing a Senator, just like the function of counting the votes for President according to the opinion of many of us, was to be performed by an assembly or tribunal consisting of two persons, of an even number, and who might, if they acted in the ordinary way, be found to have no majority either way, so that the function could not be performed. The act of Congress declared that in that case should be done what has been done in nearly every State of the Union in regard to the matter of the election of certain of its officers, and which the Legislature elected, that they should be elected on joint ballot, and for the purpose of that election or appointment the two bodies should be merged in one. Accordingly it is declared, not that the senate shall meet the house in the case of a failure to elect by a concurrent vote, but that the members of the two bodies shall meet in joint assembly. The question what constitutes a quorum of that joint assembly is another question that it is not necessary to deal with here.

But the act of Congress is express that the functions of appointment shall be discharged by an assembly, not consisting of the two houses of the State Legislature, but of the members of the two houses of the State Legislature. I do not think it is necessary to pursue this suggestion into its practical consequences any further.

So, Mr. President, I maintain that the State of Montana had a lawfully organized senate and a lawfully organized house, and that the members of those two bodies met and duly elected Mr. Sanders and Mr. Power as provided by law and in the exercise, the due and proper and orderly exercise, of their constitutional and lawful functions. I maintain that the house of representatives of Montana which took part in that appointment contained within it men enough to make a quorum and more who had the lawful credentials and certificates of their election, and thereby were clothed with the authority and the title to take part in that election and to exercise the functions of members of that house in all respects until a lawful and constitutional judgment of the house itself deprived them of that title; that in truth and in fact the persons so elected and having those credentials and certificates constituted as against all the world the lawful members of that house.

Neither the Senate nor any other body, nor the House itself, can go behind that into the facts of the election; but going behind it and taking the facts of the election as they are furnished us by the contestants here the result is the same; so that in electing these gentlemen this house of representatives exercised an authority with which they had been not only technically and lawfully clothed, but with which they had been clothed by the true and honest choice of the people who were their constituents.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Constitution enjoins that the Senate "shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and by that clause it confers upon this body a judicial power which I think all will admit should be exercised judicially. In approaching the discussion of the case that is now before the Senate to be thus judicially determined I should be very glad if even party nomenclature could be banished. So far as that shall be resorted to by me, it will only be because it is part of the history of the case and arises out of the facts which are necessary to be considered in arriving at a correct determination of this matter. I should be glad, too, if I could see these seats filled by their lawful occupants when this discussion is going on, not of course as a personal compliment to myself, because I should have been equally glad to see them filled when the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] presented his side of the case on behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but because this question is as important as any that can come before this body, and it is impossible that it should be determined satisfactorily or in the mode that the Constitution contemplates it should be determined unless we have the benefit of every individual judgment upon it. It is just as important that we should have this individual judgment of each Senator as that a case presented to the Supreme Court of the United States should be determined after due consideration by each member of that court.

Approaching the question in this temper, I trust that I shall say nothing in the remarks which I shall submit, and which I shall endeavor to make as brief as is consistent with the somewhat complicated nature of the facts, that will be inconsistent with the attitude which it seems to me ought to be assumed by each Senator in considering a case of this kind.

The Senator from Massachusetts, in behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections—strangely enough, because we all know how careful he is in the study of all questions committed to him by this body—seems to have not read, or if he has read has not comprehended, the position taken by the minority of that committee and which they have presented in a minority report to this body. There is not from beginning to end of that report a syllable, so far as I know, to justify the statement that the minority in considering this case placed itself or sought to place this case upon the principles enunciated in the report made by Senator Carpenter in the Sykes and Spencer case.

So far as this argument goes, I may say for the minority of the committee that we accept as a postulate the proposition laid down by the Senator from Massachusetts, and do not differ at all, in considering this case, from him in the position that we should seek here in the first place to discover the lawful body clothed with legislative power who have chosen a Senator, and that to determine whether it be such lawful body we shall be bound in the first instance by the fact that such body is composed of members who hold credentials from an officer or board clothed with authority in the premises to make such credentials. So, then, the attention of the Senate, so far as I am at present concerned with the question, will be called away from what occurred at this little precinct 34 far up in the Rocky Mountains, and I shall endeavor to present to the Senate for its consideration questions that concern the technical composition of this Legislature which has presented here as its choice as United States Senators those estimable gentlemen, Messrs. Power and Sanders, and I shall endeavor to show, to the satisfaction of every reasonable mind, while I occupy the floor, that there is not a shadow of legal authority or authority founded in any just or safe precedent of this body for the resolution reported by the committee, that these gentlemen are entitled to seats in this body.

I need not detain the Senate by reciting what the Senator from Massachusetts has already stated in regard to the composition of this so-called Legislature and the facts and circumstances that surround that so-called election. It will suffice if I call the attention of the Senate again to the single fact that in considering this question we are met at the outset with this condition of things: that in the capital city of Helena, in the State of Montana, there were two bodies sitting, each claiming to be the lawful Legislature of that State, one composed of a senate legally organized, and whose lawfulness and right to sit are questioned nowhere, and a so-called house of representatives consisting of thirty members, twenty-five of whom are admitted to have been entitled to sit as such and five of whom are disputed as to their title, and sitting in what is called the Iron Hall house of representatives, and another body composed of this same senate, and twenty-nine persons claiming to be elected as a house of representatives, and, if elected, constituting a quorum of the house of representatives, but composed of twenty-four gentlemen whose seats are questioned by nobody and not in dispute, and five others whose seats are in dispute. That is the situation that we find when we are invited to leave this Chamber and make our inquisition in the capital city of Helena in order to ascertain whether any body that can properly be called a Legislature in the sense of the Constitution of the United States is there sitting, and has armed these gentlemen, Messrs. Sanders and Power, with credentials that we can or should regard.

The first matter which we must determine is this: Inasmuch as neither of these competing houses of assembly had a quorum of members whose seats were uncontested and admitted on all hands, inasmuch as neither had a quorum of those elected to the Legislature without counting in one or the other of these two sets of five members from Silver Bow County whose lawful election is disputed, there could not be, in the nature of the case, a determination of this question by that highest judicial authority in the premises, to wit, the house of representatives itself, which by the constitution of Montana, in conformity to most other State constitutions, is made the judge of the elections and returns of its own members. That, then, would have been the first and highest authority in the premises and would have been conclusive upon this body. But for the reason I have stated it was impossible to find such a judicial determination of that question. I think all will admit—and it requires no special authority to enforce the proposition—that no man ought to sit as a judge in his own cause, and no legislative body in the world would determine the right to seat the members whose seats are contested where it was necessary, to make a quorum, that those contested members should be counted.

If authority were required for a proposition so elementary as that and one so consonant with the genius of American institutions, I would ask leave to read a single sentence from McCrary, who has given us a very valuable work on elections and collected a great deal of interesting matter in a very philosophical and impartial manner. At section 340 Judge McCrary says:

On the trial of a contested election before a board or legislative body, the members returned as elected are not competent to vote upon the question of the validity of their own election. The rule grows out of the doctrine that no man should have a voice in deciding his own case.

I therefore may pass that point as one that will be conceded on all hands, that neither of these competing houses made any judicial decision as to the right of the five members from Silver Bow County to sit, and, further, that neither of them was competent to make such a decision. That being so, what occurs?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator understand that when there are five or any number of members whose seats are contested on the same question none of them can vote in the others' case?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. HOAR. That is not my understanding of the law.

Mr. GRAY. We can not make even a commencement. The first man must be voted upon, and if all are elected to represent the same constituency, it seems to me that there is a unity as to those five, or whatever the number may be, which would equally prevent any one of them from participating in such a judicial determination. I am quite clear in my own mind, and I submit it with all respect to other gentlemen, that this proposition is true to the extent that I have stated it. Nevertheless, in this case no such judicial determination ever has been made as to the right of these five men, or attempted to be made, so far as there is any evidence before the Senate or before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

What must happen if we are to pursue further our judicial inquisition, as certainly we must in order to satisfy ourselves in some way as to which of these two competing houses was in fact and lawfully to be considered the house of representatives of the State of Montana? We must manifestly go outside the doors of either house; we should have stopped there if we could have had such judicial determination as I have referred to; but we must leave the doors of both of those competing houses and must pursue this judicial inquiry, which we are now compelled by the Constitution of the United States to pursue, outside the doors of either, and we must ask for ourselves the very question put by the Senator from Massachusetts with absolute accuracy, I think, as applied to the situation, which of those two sets or groups of five members from Silver Bow County had in their lawful possession the credentials or the certificates, or the finding or deliverance, of any officer or board clothed by law with the power to make such? That is our inquiry.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts for the purposes of this case—in fact, I agree with him absolutely in regard to this case or others—that that is our first duty; but I think I may speak certainly for all the members of the minority of this committee that for the purposes of this case and under the facts and the circumstances that surround us here that is our first duty.

Mr. President, I should like Senators who have not examined this question to go with me while we make this inquisition, while we ask this question, and wait for the reply: Who has the lawful certificate or credential or finding of an officer or board upon whom by law the duty has been devolved to make such? And I think that we shall find that certainly the five members who sat in that house, called the Iron Hall house, and who participated in the choice of Messrs. Sanders and Power as United States Senators, did not have such credentials, and did not have such a certificate from any board or officer clothed with the power under the circumstances to make such.

It is a fact that under the enabling act passed a year ago, which authorized a convention to be held in the State of Montana for the purpose of forming a constitution, it was also declared that that convention might provide by ordinance for the election of all State officers necessary to thoroughly equip a State government, including representatives in a legislative assembly, and that that convention, sitting under authority of that enabling act, did, by an ordinance called ordinance No. 2, provide:

First, That an election shall be held throughout the Territory of Montana on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, for the ratification or rejection of the constitution framed and adopted by this convention.

Second, At said election the constitution framed and adopted by this convention shall be submitted to the people of the Territory for their ratification or rejection, and all persons who are then qualified electors under the laws of this Territory shall be qualified to vote for the ratification or rejection thereof.

Third, Said elections shall be held at the several polling places and precincts throughout the Territory appointed for the holding of elections under the laws of the Territory, and shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory regulating elections. The boards of county commissioners of the several counties of the Territory shall appoint judges and clerks of such election in each of said polling places and precincts in the same manner as is now required by law for the appointment of judges and clerks of general elections in the Territory.

Then it goes on to provide, as the Senator from Massachusetts has already observed, but which for my purpose it will be necessary for me to ask the attention of the Senate to again, in section 5:

Fifth, The votes cast at said election for the adoption or rejection of said constitution shall be canvassed by the canvassing boards of the respective counties not later than fifteen days after said election, or sooner if the returns from all of the precincts shall have been received, and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory of Montana for canvassing the votes at general elections in said Territory, and the returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who, with the governor and the chief-justice of the Territory, or any two of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers, who shall meet at the office of the secretary of the Territory on or before the thirtieth day after the election and canvass the votes so cast and declare the result.

Ah, Mr. President, here we have, I must admit, a canvassing board created by lawful authority and invested with power of canvassing the returns of votes coming up from the canvassing boards of the counties on the question of ratification or rejection of the Constitution. Undoubtedly that is so and they are invested with the power to canvass the votes so cast and declare the result. Now, in the eighth section—not pausing to read the intervening sections—it is provided that—

The votes for the above officers—

That is, certain State officers above enumerated, and which include a member of the House of Representatives—shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law, and returns shall be made to the secretary of the Territory and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, except as to clerk of the district court.

Omitting, I observe in passing, the words "to declare the result," upon which I shall not now comment. I admit that here we have constituted by competent legal authority a canvassing board clothed with the power of doing what? Of canvassing the returns from the county canvassing boards as to the election of members of the house of representatives of Montana. We are told that we must inquire and look for the finding or certificate of some such board, and I agree with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, in so far that I proceed side by side with him to this point, and find with him that here is a board upon which by law has been devolved a duty of making a canvass of the returns from the counties; but our inquiry must not stop there. It is not every act of such a board, even, that can have the conclusive effect upon us of deciding the question unless we are satisfied that that act is within the scope of authority legally conferred upon that board. Surely no Senator will take issue with me upon a proposition so plain as that. If I shall show that there has been no such act of such a board within the scope of its authority to make, no finding of such a board which it was authorized to declare in regard to the election of the five members from Silver Bow County who sat in the house of representatives which joined in the election of Messrs. Sanders and Power, then I must challenge that Senator's conscience and his judicial instinct to declare with me that there is no support for the proposition that we have a Legislature legally and technically constituted which has returned to us the election of Messrs. Sanders and Power as Senators of the United States from Montana.

Is it necessary that I should argue this question, so plainly and so obviously true, that where you are called upon to inquire for the finding or the certificate or the deliverance of an officer or a board clothed with authority to make such you should also inquire whether any given finding or certificate or deliverance was in pursuance of that very power which has been called to our attention? The Senator from Massachusetts says here is the finding of the board. We say to him respectfully that is true; but what is that finding? Here is the credential from the three gentlemen mentioned in this ordinance, the governor, the secretary of state, and the chief-justice. We say that is true; but what is that credential? Certainly he must answer satisfactorily that question before we can go hand in hand with him a step further and declare that we are concluded by that finding. What is that certification, what is that finding, what is that act of this board that must be, if it be within the scope of its authority, conclusive upon us in the determination of the question now before us? Surely we are not to close our eyes and ears at the bidding of the Senator from Massachusetts and fail to scrutinize this supposed credential, this supposed finding, this alleged credential, that is to work results so important as to determine the question as to who shall occupy seats in this body.

Then if we must inquire, let us do so fearlessly, and first ask the question, what was it that this board was authorized to do? You can not object to that. You must ask and answer that question before you are justified in proceeding another step in this judicial inquiry. And we find by referring to the ordinance that they were authorized to canvass what? Votes? No. Poll lists? No; but returns from the canvassing boards of the counties, canvasses made under authority of the law of the Territory.

That was the very thing which they were authorized to canvass, and we must, if we do our duty and regard as sacred this high judicial function that we are now endeavoring to perform, require a strict adherence to that duty as prescribed by law. We can not go outside of that so much as a hair's breadth, for outside of it their acts are no more binding upon us than the acts of any three gentlemen, respectable or otherwise, who choose to get together and say that a certain thing has been done or announce a certain result as being a lawful result.

That being the thing required by law for them to do, that being the authority with which they were clothed, surely I shall meet with no dissent when I say the next inquiry must be, what did they do in conformity or pretended conformity to this authority which I have recited? We do not have to look far for that. We have the evidence of those gentlemen themselves as to just what they did, and in this case there is no Senator here, I know, that will for an instant say that as to what they did we are bound by what they say they did. If there be any such I should have to abandon the argument; I could not argue a proposition so plain as that.

What did they say they did? Did they say that they, Mr. Chief Justice, Mr. Governor, and Mr. Secretary of the Territory, have canvassed the returns from Silver Bow and find that so and so, naming them, were elected? No, they did not. If they had found that the situation would have been a very different one; but we find in this deliverance, which is the only evidence in this case as to what was done by that board, that they not only did not canvass the returns from Silver Bow County, but that they did not have those returns before them when they put their names to that deliverance or finding.

What are we to do in a case like that? Admit that when they did a lawful act in pursuance of a lawful authority it would be conclusive upon us as showing us the five members who had the prima facie right to sit in that house? Surely that admission will not carry us to the extent of saying that we are bound by anything they choose to do, whether within or without the scope of their authority, and that for the purposes of this case they were more absolute in their powers than a czar or the most absolute monarch who ever sat upon a throne. That is not in conformity to the genius of republican institutions, of liberty regulated by law.

I will go as far as any Senator in paying the respect of my homage to all those legal forms and technical proceedings by which self-government has achieved its triumphs in this country of ours, and made liberty regulated by law on this continent the envy of the whole world, but I do not propose to stand uncovered before shams and mockeries, before those who pose masked in the forms of law and at the same time are trampling under foot all lawful authority and all orderly legal procedure.

This Territorial board of canvass, armed with the power to do those things which I have mentioned, undertakes to do something entirely different from those things which it lawfully by the letter of the statute may do.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to interrupt the Senator to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose that it is not a matter in dispute between the minority and majority of the committee that the canvassing board constituted under the ordinance of Montana had no judicial power, but only ministerial powers to look into the returns lawfully before them and to perform the arithmetical duty of adding them up and ascertaining the result of the vote.

Mr. GRAY. I do not suppose there will be any dispute about that. I shall have a word to say about it in a moment.

I was saying when interrupted that the thing this board was authorized to do was to canvass the returns made by the canvassing boards of the several counties as to the elections held therein, and I was about to say just at this point and in the line of the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi very aptly that that thing which they were authorized to do was undeniably a ministerial duty; that there was no judicial function attaching to that duty.

Mr. HOAR. Will it disturb the Senator before he passes to that point to put to him a question with reference to the other? If it does I will not do it.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will interrupt me less in a moment when I get through with this point.

The duty is undeniably a ministerial one, and not a judicial one. As the Senator from Mississippi has said, it was to count up, to aggregate as a matter of arithmetic, the returns from the counties. Although I do not understand that the majority of the committee have contended that any other than a ministerial duty was devolved upon this board, it will be important in passing to call attention to the perfectly well settled doctrine upon that respect in this country.

I will not detain the Senate with reading, for it has been embodied in the report of the minority, in regard to the settled American doctrine that canvassing boards, unless expressly clothed with judicial power by statute, have none but ministerial duties to perform. Several authorities have been cited in the report of the minority, and the current of decision in State and Federal courts, from the beginning down to very recent times and to the very last decision, all run in one direction and all speak one voice on the subject. That is, then, the settled American doctrine.

It is also well known by every lawyer in this body that even a judicial tribunal that is clothed with limited jurisdiction, a court of statutory jurisdiction, must, before its judgments can be regarded and have the force and effect that belong to a judgment of a court, show by its record in a given case that the particular matter in which they were concerned was within its jurisdiction. Either the parties or the subject-matter or both must appear affirmatively in the record to have been within the jurisdiction of such court. And even in regard to a court of general jurisdiction, if it shall appear on the record that the matter or thing or parties were without its jurisdiction, then its judgment in that case is a nullity and entitled to no regard whatever. A fortiori, in regard to a merely ministerial board or officer who has no judicial function whatever to perform must it affirmatively appear when they call upon us to be bound by its or his act or deliverance that the special matter which gives them jurisdiction was properly before them, that the thing they undertook to do was within the scope of their legal authority. I need say no more upon the points that are so absolutely elementary as these and understood by every lawyer.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Where does the Senator find the authority for this body to inquire whether the board of canvassers exercised or attempted to exercise judicial power or the right in any manner to question their acts?

Mr. GRAY. I have not asked this body to inquire whether the Territorial board of canvassers exercised or attempted to exercise judicial power. I have said that they were clothed with no judicial power whatever, and that is true. But I have been trying to show, and if I have not my argument so far is a failure, that we must necessarily ask, what was this board constituted by law to do? What is the thing which it is authorized by law to do? This necessarily follows when the Senator points to this board and says that its finding in the premises is conclusive. We are bound as judges to look at the law of its creation. We must go with our eyes open and not shut, with our ears open and not closed, and act as intelligent human beings, and say what is the thing that you are authorized by law to do and which when done is to be conclusive and binding on us? It must be conceded, I think; I can not argue with any one who would dispute it; it is too elementary. Then must we not ask what was the act that you have done and compare the act with the legal authority? That is what I am proceeding to do now. I hope the Senator will not—

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me just now. I do not object to an interruption, but let me get through with this point, and then I shall very gladly answer to the best of my ability.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not seem disposed to answer my question.

Mr. GRAY. I can not answer the question uno flatu. I must answer it in the course of my argument, if I am able to answer it at all. I do not think the Senator has done me the honor to listen to the first part of my argument on this question. Perhaps, however, I am more at fault than I think myself to be.

Mr. President, having asked first what the legal authority of this board is and then what it has done in pretended conformity to that legal authority, let us examine the evidence. That evidence, as I said awhile ago, is none other than what they say themselves, which is upon the face of the record. We are examining the jurisdiction of this court, if court it were, by what we find upon the face of the record itself. Here is what we find:

TERRITORY OF MONTANA,
County of Lewis and Clarke, ss:—

Mr. MORGAN. On what page does the Senator read?

Mr. GRAY. On page 129. It is a very formal document, indeed:

TERRITORY OF MONTANA,
County of Lewis and Clarke, ss:—

We, Benjamin F. White, governor, Henry N. Blake, chief justice, and Louis

A. Walker, secretary of the Territory of Montana, the duly appointed and authorized canvassing board designated in the act of Congress approved February 22, A. D. 1889, providing for the admission of Montana as a State in the Union, and also under and by authority of ordinance No. 2, passed and enacted by the constitutional convention of the said Territory, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and correct abstract of the votes cast in said Territory at the election held on the first Tuesday in October, A. D. 1889, as appears by the duly certified returns from the counties named, and as counted and canvassed by us this the 4th day of November, A. D. 1889.

Mr. President, I assume (for I do not want to discuss this case otherwise than with the most absolute candor) that if this board had stopped there and that in this list to which they refer we had found Silver Bow County as one of the counties canvassed, we would have been concluded by their finding. But they did not stop there, and we have no right to stop there, for they afterwards and immediately proceeded to separate and segregate Silver Bow County from the counties before named, and we have no right in the face of their action in that respect to include it. They say:

And we further certify that, having duly convened as such canvassing board on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1889, the same having been the thirtieth day after the close of said election, and having received no duly certified returns from the county of Silver Bow in said Territory, we duly appointed and commissioned Benjamin Webster a special messenger to proceed forthwith to the said Silver Bow County and to demand and receive from the county clerk of said county a properly certified copy of the abstract of the votes cast in said county at said election as canvassed and declared by the proper canvassing board.

Mr. President, what are we to do with a declaration of that kind? First, they had no properly certified returns from Silver Bow County, and then, as if to clinch that statement of fact, they tell us that they sent a messenger for those returns which confessedly were not before them. Why did they send a messenger down to Silver Bow County, if by any construction we could say that those returns were before them? They said they had none and they sent a messenger for them.

That the said messenger, Benjamin Webster, duly appointed as aforesaid, did proceed to the said Silver Bow County, and did demand of the county clerk of said county the duly certified copy of said abstract of votes as aforesaid, and thereafter returned to Helena and made his sworn return that the demand for said abstract was by the said county clerk refused.

Where is this board now? By its own deliverance, by its own statement made in the most solemn and formal manner that at the time they canvassed the returns from all the other counties named in the list preceding, they had no returns from Silver Bow County and sent a messenger after them, who returned and made his sworn report that he could not obtain them. Talk about a board like that canvassing and certifying as to the election of five members of this General Assembly from Silver Bow County, the returns of which, by its own statement, were not before them! I shall be glad to hear the Senator from Colorado in his own time answer that part of this argument.

Being therefore—

This board proceeds to say. They were in a very communicative mood. They were very anxious to give the reasons for their decision, always a dangerous thing to do for an unequipped judge. If they had only decided and had not given us their reasons, they would have done better for themselves; as Lord Mansfield, I believe, advised a judge in one of the colonies, to give his decision, but to avoid giving reasons, and he could get along pretty well. They have given their reasons and have made their statements, which state them out of court; for they go on:

Being therefore—

Now, listen, Senators—

Being therefore without any proper copy of the abstract of votes cast in Silver Bow County and having exhausted the authority given by the statute in endeavoring to obtain the same, it now becomes our duty—to ascertain and declare the same from the best sources of information obtainable.

Says this board—

Is there a Senator within the sound of my voice who will rise in this Chamber and say on his responsibility as a Senator that this board was clothed with any authority whatever to canvass the result in Silver Bow County upon any information obtained from any source other than from the returns which were sent to them from the canvassing board of the county according to the provisions of law? They might have certified that, not having such a return, they could not certify that anybody was elected, and that is what under their view of the situation they honestly should have done. But men who were so driven and so whipped by the party lash that they could gain their own consent to make a deliverance like that should also have been whipped at the cart-tail through every county town in the State. I have never seen, in my experience, a usurpation anywhere so bald and flagrant as the one attempted by this so-called Territorial board of canvassers in the State of Montana.

Mr. President, we are pursuing here a judicial inquiry. We are honestly seeking for the legally authorized finding or certificate of some board or officer, in the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, upon whom the law devolved the duty of making such a certificate. Have we found it or him? Have we found such a deliverance or such a certificate? Is there any one who can answer that question in the affirmative?

But the board did not stop there. They were afflicted with a cacœthes scribendi or loquendi, as the case may be, and they went on to say:

We have before us the official certificate of Charles F. Booth, county clerk of Silver Bow County, showing that a certain number of votes were cast for the different candidates in that county in the different precincts thereof, naming each of them and the number received by each candidate in each precinct, and including the thirty-fourth precinct as having voted at said election.

And there it is embodied in print in the report, "including precinct 34." If they were guided by that, then it would be an impossibility as a matter of mere arithmetic to say that the five members in the Iron Hall house of representatives were elected, but on the contrary they would be compelled to say that the five members in the Court-House Legislature were the duly accredited members. But they say:

We also have before us an official notice signed by Mr. Booth as county clerk of said county, stating in effect that the board of canvassers in said county met as such on the 14th day of October, 1889—

Now, this is on the 4th of November they are talking—and did then and there canvass and count the vote of Silver Bow County and declare the result thereof, and that they did not count, but did reject, as false, fraudulent, and void, all of the votes reported as cast and counted in election precinct No. 34, in said county.

Here is another evidence of the design artfully to make a case to suit the ambitions of some people in that State, for it is most disingenuously stated here that this official notice, signed by Mr. Booth as county clerk, was sent along with this abstract of votes, including precinct 34. You can not read that paragraph in that finding without coming to the conclusion, if you rested upon the evidence of that alone, that along with this abstract of votes came this disqualifying statement of Mr. Booth. It is not so. The abstract of votes came to their possession on the very day that they met, the 31st of October, and they have told us that that was not a proper or legal abstract and that they had none before them, although they say they had that. Now they say there is none. Then they tell us that Mr. Booth, the county clerk, sent a communication or a notice that on the 14th of October the county canvassing board had thrown out precinct 34, whereas the fact is that that notice had been sent to them on the 21st of October, ten days prior to their receipt of this abstract of votes to which they allude. There was no possible connection between the two. Mr. Booth, on the 21st of October, was notifying this central board of canvass of the reasons why he had not sent up the returns from the county. Here is what Mr. Booth says, on the 21st of October—

Mr. GEORGE. On what page?

Mr. GRAY. On page 124 of the report, at the bottom of the page. On the 21st of October he writes a communication to this central board of canvass to tell them why the abstracts from Silver Bow County had not yet been sent in. It was not an unnatural thing for him to do, because in the ordinary process that return ought to have been made days before; and he tells them that the county board had eliminated a certain precinct, but that while they were still in session and still engaged in making up that abstract a writ of mandamus had been served upon them, issued by the district court of the county, commanding them to include precinct 34 in the abstract of votes.

Mr. GEORGE. All that was upon the same notice?

Mr. GRAY. All that was upon this letter of the 21st of October. He says:

That by reason of said order from the district court the abstract of votes for said county is incomplete, and by reason of the fact that said abstract of votes is not complete I am unable to forward the copy of such abstract, as is required by law, to the secretary of the Territory, and that I shall be unable to forward such copy until after the 7th day of November, 1889.

And yet with that statement in that very communication which they, I am compelled to say, disingenuously would have us believe came to them with that abstract, and of which they likewise disingenuously state only a part—in that same communication is what I have just read, the information that by reason of the order of the court the work of the canvassing board of Silver Bow County was incomplete, that the abstract was not made up and would not be made up until the 7th of November, 1889. With that information before them these gentlemen gained their own consent to say:

We have before us the official certificate of Charles F. Booth, county clerk of Silver Bow County, showing that a certain number of votes were cast for the different candidates in that county in the different precincts thereof, naming each of them and the number received by each candidate in each precinct, and including the thirty-fourth precinct as having voted at said election. We also have before us an official notice signed by Mr. Booth.

The official notice had come ten days before, and was for the purpose I have stated and contained what I have recited. Now, they go on to say:

No other or further action having been had by the canvassing board of said county—

That is true—

in relation to the canvass of the vote therein, we conclude that the true result as canvassed and declared must be found by eliminating from the list of votes cast, as certified by County Clerk Booth, the vote of precinct 34, which was rejected by said canvassing board, as stated in the certificate of said county clerk, and which shows the true vote of Silver Bow County to be as follows.

That is what they did, and accompanied by the declaration that they had no proper return before them, that there was no abstract from Silver Bow County before them as required by law; and they undertook, upon the best information, as they say, that they could otherwise obtain, to canvass the true result of the vote in that county. You can not decide the title to seats in this august body from a deliverance such as I have recited in the presence of the Senate. For in that very deliverance they have told you that the only thing that the law authorized them to do in the premises, to wit, canvass the returns from the county board of Silver Bow County, they did not do, and could not, for the reasons stated, do.

Mr. President, I submit to the Senate in entire candor whether I have not abundantly and overwhelmingly shown that this board acted without the scope of its authority; that it has stated itself out of court; that no judicial tribunal in the world, and certainly not this Senate acting in its judicial capacity, can for one moment be bound by or consider a finding like this. Suppose they told us that they had canvassed the census returns or reports of the United States as to the population of Montana Territory, suppose they had told us that they had canvassed the tax-lists of Silver Bow County or the license-lists that were published in a county newspaper, are we, as the Senator from Colorado would seem to think, bound by such an act as that? Are we to stultify ourselves by the proposition that whatever they chose to do and called a performance of their duty is to bind us?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator means to ask me, I can tell him what I think about it.

Mr. GRAY. I should be glad to hear the Senator's answer.

Mr. TELLER. I think it is the universal rule of law that when we are not authorized to review the finding of a court we can not know what they have decided; our ears are closed; no information can come to us of a wrong that we can not remedy. If we have no right to review their proceeding, it is immaterial what they did, it is conclusive as to us. That is the ground we have taken in the Senate repeatedly, and that is what I say. They might have proceeded upon a tax-list or anything else. We do not know what they proceeded upon and we have no right to inquire.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if a doctrine so astounding as that uttered by the Senator from Colorado and receiving the high authority of his name is to be considered the law for the Senate, then I would abandon the argument here. I venture the assertion that nowhere, by judicial authority or by finding of either House of Congress, was such a doctrine ever indorsed—

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. GRAY. In one moment—as to say that, when you have appointed an officer or a board to do a particular thing, to perform a ministerial act, you are not to inquire, when he tells you or they tell you that that act has been performed, whether it be the act authorized by law or not. I do not believe that on farther reflection the Senator from Colorado will allow himself to reassert that proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Is this document, Appendix A, from which the Senator has been reading and on which he has been commenting and which is certified by the secretary of state of Montana, the paper which constitutes the credentials of those five men?

Mr. GRAY. That is the only paper.

Mr. GEORGE. The only one?

Mr. GRAY. It is the only one that anywhere by anybody is referred to as the credentials of those five members.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad to be corrected, if I am wrong.

Mr. GEORGE. Then you want to get outside of it and find another.

Mr. TELLER. I must correct the Senator as to the statement of fact. That is not the fact; nobody goes to that. They give a certificate and the Legislature recognizes that certificate.

Mr. GRAY. Where is that certificate?

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference. When the Senator says that my proposition never has been made before, I wish to state that I made it here in the Senate in the Turpie case, and it met the approval then of the Senator from Delaware because it seated a Democrat. My proposition is that things you are not authorized to inquire into you can not review; you must stop; cadit questio. That is the end of the question right there, and every lawyer knows that is the end of the inquiry. You may say that there is fraud in the conduct of the Legislature; you may believe that; but you have no right to pass upon it and predicate a judgment on it, because you have not been authorized to review the proceedings of the legislative body.

Mr. GRAY. Well, Mr. President, I am a poor sort of a country lawyer; but I do know that I am not claiming the right to review the proceedings of a legislative body.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to interpose again. I interrupted the Senator from Delaware to ascertain a fact. I think it is a material fact to know whether this paper, Appendix A, from which the Senator from Delaware has been reading and upon which he has been commenting, constitutes the only credentials of the Silver Bow men who were seated.

Mr. PUGH. The majority report says it. It admits it.

Mr. GRAY. I answer most positively and upon knowledge that there is no other paper or writing of any kind whatever that is pointed to by anybody as a credential except that.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I want to ask the Senator another question right here. Is there any evidence in this record that the Legislature of which what is called the Iron Hall house claimed to be a part ever performed a legislative act, ever passed any law whatever?

Mr. GRAY. None whatever.

Mr. TELLER. I must correct the Senator from Delaware again. There were various communications between the Iron Hall house and the senate of a legislative character.

Mr. GRAY. One-half the senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask, did they ever pass a law?

Mr. TELLER. They did pass an appropriation law.

Mr. GRAY. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Mississippi I will proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. GRAY. I shall be very glad of interruptions of this kind on either side. I hope the Senator from Colorado does not understand me as objecting to any question that is really intended to draw my attention to a point upon which he is interested.

I am informed—I may as well allude to it in passing—that no legislative act has been performed by the Legislature of which this Iron Hall house is a part. That is my information. There have been communications, I believe, running from the senate which was organized to this Iron Hall house, backwards and forwards, but there was no legislative act. They communicated with them as they might have communicated with the common council of the city of Helena, so far as any lawful legislative performance is concerned.

Mr. GEORGE. Then let me ask the Senator one more question. There is no evidence here, then, that there was a body composed of the Iron Hall house and any other body called a senate, which was de facto a legislative body exercising legislative functions.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no; not at all. There was not the slightest evidence, not a scintilla of that kind before the committee. More than that, the governor of the State, who by the constitution of the State of Montana must approve every bill that passes both houses before it can become a law, never has recognized this Iron Hall house of representatives, but has positively and by official declaration refused to so recognize it, and has on the contrary recognized the house of representatives sitting in the court-house at Helena as the lawful and rightful house of representatives of that State.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it disturb the Senator if I ask him a question, not going to his argument at all, but in reference to a matter of fact?

Mr. GRAY. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. It is stated in this certificate of the State board of canvassers—

Mr. PUGH. Not the State board, but the Territorial board.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, the Territorial board; and I merely say that in the way of distinction from the county board—

We have before us the official certificate of Charles F. Booth, county clerk of Silver Bow County, showing that a certain number of votes were cast for the different candidates in that county in the different precincts thereof, naming each of them and the number received by each candidate in each precinct, and including the thirty-fourth precinct as having voted at said election. We also have before us an official notice signed by Mr. Booth as county clerk of said county—showing the result of the canvass.

Were those papers laid before the committee?

Mr. GRAY. Which papers?

Mr. SPOONER. The papers referred to in this official notice.

Mr. GRAY. Yes; here they are, on page 123. In the appendix to the minority report you will find the list or abstract of votes to which he refers; and the Senator will find the letter of Mr. Booth, the county clerk, on page 51 of the case of Messrs. Clark and Maginnis. It is a little out of order, but I may as well, now that I can lay my hands on it, and I was not able to lay my hand on it before, say that that communication, which was sent on the 21st day of October, states:

That while the clerks were engaged in their work, and before the completion of said abstracts—

That is, the abstract made by the county board—

all the members of the canvassing board were served with a writ of mandate from the district court commanding them to make an abstract of the votes cast at said precinct No. 34, or to appear before the court on the 7th day of November, 1899, and show cause why they had not done so; that the canvassing board did not make an abstract of the votes cast at precinct No. 34, as directed by the court, nor have they shown cause why they have not done so; that by reason of said order from the district court the abstract of votes for said county is incomplete, and that by reason of the fact that said abstract of votes is not complete I am unable to forward the copy of such abstract as is required by law to the secretary of the Territory, and that I shall be unable to forward such copy until after the 7th day of November, 1899.

Thus all the evidence in the case conspires to drive home the conclusion that what this board stated in their deliverance on the 4th of November was the truth, to wit, that there was not before them, and could not have been before them, any abstract of the votes of Silver Bow County.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me? When the Senator from Mississippi put a question of fact just now I sent for the document, which I had not before me at that moment, so that I might be able to answer. I think I can suggest to the Senator the fact, if he has no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. In the first place, as to the credentials, the journal of the house of representatives is—

Mr. GRAY. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. HOAR. Page 15 of the statement reported by the Senator from Delaware and myself of the facts made to the committee.

The roll of the members elected and holding certificates of the State canvassing board was called by the auditor, as follows, by counties.

Then on the eighteenth page, being part of the statement which has been rendered, is the following:

And we hereby further certify that the following-named persons, having received a majority of all the votes cast for the respective offices named and hereinafter designated, are, and they are hereby declared to be, duly elected.

Now, if the Senator will allow me to call his attention to the fact, upon this statement which he and I prepared, there is no other evidence existing at this moment in the world of the title of Governor Toole or any other State officer of the State of Montana or of anybody else in the senate or house of representatives except the declaration, leaving out now this claim that the county officers might certify to their representatives, except this very canvass which the Senator says was not only wrong in itself, but which was so wrong that it carries no legal validity or authority to the certainty of its result whatever. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Mississippi to my answer.

Mr. GEORGE. How is that?

Mr. HOAR. I will repeat it. The journal of the house of representatives shows—

Mr. GEORGE. The journal of the Iron Hall house?

Mr. HOAR. The journal of the Iron Hall house shows that the roll of men present and having credentials was called as follows. Then follows this certificate in the journal, the one which the Senator from Delaware has commented upon.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator reading from the report in the Montana case?

Mr. HOAR. I am reading from the report of facts in the Montana case made to the Committee on Privileges and Elections by a subcommittee constituted of the Senator from Delaware and myself.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no copy of that. I have only the report proper.

Mr. HOAR. That is the reason why I read it now. I did not have it before me when the Senator put his question.

Now, I wish to repeat. These credentials were before that body. The body was made up of the men who had them, and there is no other lawful evidence of title of Governor Toole or any other State officer in the State of Montana, omitting now those about which it is questioned whether the county clerk's certificate was not a good one, except this very canvass which the Senator from Delaware says is so illegal that a declaration which followed it by the board who made it has no validity whatever.

In the next place, the Senator from Mississippi put the question whether there were any laws passed by this House, to which I reply, though that is not found in this pamphlet, that I am informed by one of the claimants here that it is a matter of public history that seven different laws were passed by this House, sent to the Senate, and passed by them so far as going through all the steps, except that the presiding officer of that senate refused to certify to them in the presence of the senate, because before he could make his certificate a certain number of senators ran away and left the State. That, of course, all appears in the record.

Mr. GEORGE. So, if the Senator will allow me, no consummated and complete legislative act was ever performed by that legislature.

Mr. HOAR. The act of Congress proceeds—

Mr. GEORGE. Please answer that question.

Mr. HOAR. I understand. Let me say, in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, if I can have the indulgence of the Senator from Delaware, that the act of Congress for the election of Senators proceeds on the very ground, theory, and expectation that the first thing which shall be done by a State Legislature when it meets substantially shall be the election of United States Senators.

It puts first in order the election of United States Senators where there is a vacancy or where they are to be appointed, and the Legislature is required to do it on the second Tuesday after their organization, or perhaps the first.

Mr. MORGAN. On the second Tuesday.

Mr. HOAR. They are required to do it on the second Tuesday, when in the ordinary course of legislative proceedings bills will not be ripe for action. This is to be done before any legislative functions of any importance are exercised.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not care to take up time by discussing the proposition whether any pretended legislation was had or participated in by the Iron Hall house of representatives. I am informed that no legislative act of that kind was performed, but whether it be true or not does not in the slightest affect my argument. Confessedly by the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts this very morning in this very Chamber, the question for us to discuss, and to which I have tried respectfully to address myself, is, which set or group of five members from Silver Bow County had the credentials of a board or officer (I am quoting his exact words, I believe) upon whom the law devolved the duty to make such certificate or credential? That is the question I am discussing. The Senator has admitted by his argument, impliedly if not expressly, that we were not to stay within the doors of either house in order to determine this question, but that we must go outside of it and anywhere for some such board or officer so invested by law with this duty, and then find what has been done by them under that authority of law. I have totally misunderstood the Senator if that is not the position he took in his opening this morning.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to say that I entirely agree with him in that statement. He has stated my opinion much more clearly and distinctly than I could state it myself as to the point of difference between him and me.

Mr. GRAY. I should be very glad—

Mr. HOAR. One sentence only in reply, because that states our point of difference. The point of difference between the Senator and me in this part of the case is exactly this: He thinks that if it appeared that the proceedings of the board in getting at the result of which they make the certificate that the man is elected were incorrect or illegal or otherwise, so that it was not a just and proper canvass, then the value of their certificate is destroyed, so that we may inquire into it and disregard it. I say when that board has certified that A. B. is elected he is clothed with authority to act as a representative until he is unseated by the house who alone are judges of that question. There is the point of difference between us.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Massachusetts has with his usual candor admitted, and I am gratified to hear him admit, that I have not misstated his position; but I must beg leave to state my own, for I submit that the distinguished Senator has not quite apprehended it. It is not that we are authorized as in this judicial inquiry to go behind the certificate or finding of a lawfully constituted board; it is not that bald proposition, but that we must inquire what that finding is before we can pass upon it at all. We must ask ourselves the question, and we must ask that board the question, which is more to the point, what did you do under the authority of this law that created you? for if you did a certain thing we confess we are bound by it. Let us see what you did. Tell us what is the nature and character of this act that is to be conclusive on the Senate of the United States. In answer to that inquiry, the only declaration we have, the only particle of evidence in this case is this finding of the board which I have read, in which they tell us they did not canvass the returns from Silver Bow County; that they did not have those returns before them, and that then they proceeded on the best information they could obtain outside of the certificates to declare the result. I say that the act of no officer or board that was ever created by an English-speaking people or by any State in this Union or by authority of any law ever passed by Congress ever was invested with an authority such as is claimed for this board by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Colorado.

As I was saying, they may tell us in their deliverance, "We have no returns from Silver Bow County, but we have taken the census of the United States and we have canvassed that. We have no proper abstract of votes from that county, but we have taken the tax-lists of the county and we have run over the names on those, and we have satisfied ourselves that so and so was the result." That can not be. It is not in the nature of things. We do not want authority to deny a proposition so monstrous as that.

If they had stopped short, such is the effect of our traditions, such is the result of liberty regulated by law, that if a lawfully constituted board authorized to say a certain thing says it we can not inquire into their motives, we can not say that they were corrupt, we can not inquire what the evidence was upon which they said it; but when they undertake to tell us that they did not do the thing the law required them to do, we should only stultify ourselves by undertaking to make ourselves a party to usurpation so monstrous.

Mr. President, I did not think it necessary and did not intend to trouble the Senate by reading authority from text-book or report in support of a position so manifestly true, so necessarily true as that which I have just stated, but since the colloquy which has taken place between the Senators and myself I will ask the attention of the Senate to a passage from a very painstaking book, and I have no doubt a very good book on elections, written by Mr. Halbert E. Paine, who was the counsel before the committee, and has filed a brief and made an argument in behalf of Messrs. Sanders and Power, a very able argument, too, and who, in his work on elections, at section 626, says what I shall read. I ask the attention of Senators to this, not as binding of course upon the Senate by way of authority, but as coming from a respectable gentleman who has made a book, and I have great respect for any man who has made a book, and as entirely confirming the position I have taken. He says:

A certificate of a board of canvassers, in which they declare that certain candidates were elected, but, at the same time, state facts which disprove their declaration—

I ask Senators to mark the language— and show that such candidates were not elected, is not prima facie evidence of the title of the persons certified to be elected.

That is in his chapter in which he is treating of the prima facie effect of the certificates of canvassing boards and officers upon whom the law devolves the authority to make a certificate, declaring, as I declare and as the minority of this committee declare, that such a finding is prima facie evidence of title; but when they go further, says Mr. Paine, and state facts which disprove their declaration, their certificate is not prima facie evidence of title.

There is a case in 19 Howard's Reports of the Supreme Court (Hart vs. Harvey) that concerned the election of certain trustees in a religious society. There were certain persons authorized by law to hold the election and declare the result. I need not go into the facts of the case, but I call the attention of the Senate to this language of the court in that case:

I have no doubt—

Says the judge—

I have no doubt that the certificate under the hands and seals of the inspectors, that a person has been elected a trustee, is prima facie evidence of his right; and had the certificate given to the defendants contained nothing but the declaration that defendants are elected, I should deem myself bound to so regard it. But it recites the facts upon which they rely as their justification and authority for declaring these parties elected; and these facts most clearly show that the defendants, Harvey and Tompkins, were not elected. When the inspectors admit that 64 votes only were received by them and placed in the box, and that of these the plaintiffs had each 33, it is shown to be legally impossible that the defendants, Harvey and Tompkins, could be legally elected. The certificate destroys itself. While it declares the right, it demonstrates that no such right existed.—19 Howard's Practice Reports (New York), pages 251, 252.

So in this case the canvassers have undertaken to say that no return or abstract of votes from Silver Bow County was before them, and yet they have undertaken to declare a result.

McCrary on Elections, to whom I have already referred (and the Senate will pardon me for citing such elementary authority on a proposition so plain), when speaking of the prima facie character of a certificate from a canvassing board, says:

Yet something may appear upon the face of the certificate itself to destroy or impair its value as prima facie evidence. If, for instance—

I call the attention of Senators to the instance he makes—

If, for instance, the certificate states that the vote of one county out of five had not been canvassed, it seems that this would make it necessary even to the determination of the prima facie case to inquire into what the vote was in the county omitted.

That is precisely what has been done by the board of canvassers in this case. They have told us that they had no returns from Silver Bow County, and therefore, as I shall show presently, it devolves upon the Senate as a judicial duty to inquire what those returns were.

Mr. President, I do not think that I need occupy the time of the Senate longer, after having already trespassed so far upon its patience, by further argument or illustration on this point. I submit to the Senate that in the opinion of the minority of this committee it has been clearly demonstrated by the facts and evidence in this case that there is no finding or deliverance or certificate of any Territorial board in regard to the election of the five members from Silver Bow County that can be or is worthy of being regarded in this case.

The Senator from Massachusetts and I started out from the doors of these two competing houses hand in hand, and in the most friendly and amicable spirit I wanted to inquire with him for the certificate of a board or officer clothed with the legal authority to give one. So far we have been in company. So far as I am concerned I hope the company has not been unpleasant to the Senator from Massachusetts and that I have conducted my part of this inquiry with due decorum and courtesy to him.

I certainly have not been able to find any lawful authority or any legal character that can be attached to this thing that he points me to. He says there is a certificate; but in finding it to be what I have displayed to the Senate to the best of my humble ability, and considering what my duty as a Senator is and what is the duty of every Senator in exercising his judicial function, I must seek elsewhere than this Territorial board for evidence of what was the vote in Silver Bow County, and we must look further for some certificate or finding by competent authority as to what that vote was. We must look for the very thing that this Territorial board say they did not have, and that is a return of the canvassing board of Silver Bow County. Surely that becomes a necessity now. Surely we can not refuse to take this further step in pursuing this judicial inquiry on the part of the Senate of the United States, that having found that this Territorial board had no returns from the county board which it was authorized to canvass, that being demonstrated by their own declaration, we must leave them on one side and seek for the thing itself by our own methods and by such ways as we believe are lawful and justifiable.

We do not have to go very far. Let me, before proceeding further, though—as it seems necessary that I should fortify myself at every step by something like authority—call the attention of the Senate to Paine on Elections, at section 622, to justify the step that we are about to take under the theory which seems a true one to the minority of the committee. Mr. Paine, at section 622, says this, to which I call the attention of the Senate:

Under a statute conferring upon the county canvassers power to determine primarily the result of a county election and upon the State canvassers power to make a final and conclusive determination of such result, the failure of the State canvassers to make a proper determination has the effect to leave that of the county canvassers final and conclusive.

Accepting that as the true doctrine which I had arrived at before I saw that citation from Mr. Paine—but it was very gratifying to me to be supported in this conclusion to which I seem to have been driven in pursuance of that invitation—what was the lawful action of these county canvassers? We have the certificate of the Territorial board that on the 4th of November, 1889, they had taken no action, for they had sent down to them a messenger to get their abstract of votes, and he returned and made a sworn report that none could be obtained.

We have also the report of Mr. Booth, the county clerk, indorsed by this Territorial board of canvassers, that no such abstract had been made on the 31st of October, and none could be made until the 7th of November. We have also the fact that a writ of mandamus had been served upon the members of this board on the 14th or 15th of October, an alternative writ returnable on the 28th of October.

No lawful action of that board of canvassers had been taken, if we are to accept the deliverance of the Territorial board, on the 4th of November, which is the date of that finding by them; but we do find—and it is in the evidence before the Senate, properly certified, questioned by no one, discussed in the committee, but nowhere invalidated as competent evidence—the certified record of a court of competent jurisdiction that it was the duty of this canvassing board to perform this plainly ministerial function and include precinct 34 in their abstract of votes. That mandate was served upon that board, and certain proceedings were had which at last resulted in a peremptory mandate, issuing on the 31st of October in one case and on the 1st of November in another, the judgment delivered awarding the writ on the 31st of October in one case and the 1st of November in another, in which the whole matter of the proceedings of that board was considered by this competent judicial authority and it was declared by them in a judgment which is cited in the report:

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that said motion be sustained—

That is, a motion for a judgment—and that defendants, William M. Jack, William E. Hall, and Caleb E. Irvine, the canvassing board aforesaid, had no power or authority to exclude the votes as shown by the returns from said precinct No. 34, in said county, and that their action therein was illegal and void, and that the returns, including the said precinct, constitute the true and correct result of said election, and that said relators have their peremptory writ of mandate, as prayed for in their petition.

And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that it is the duty of the said clerk of the said county commissioners to issue a certificate to relators, as prayed for in said petition and affidavit, and that a peremptory writ of mandate issue to compel him to issue said certificates, and that said relators recover cost and disbursements in this behalf expended.

That writ was awarded on the 1st of November; the judgment awarding the writ in the other case was on October 31. This Territorial canvassing board, it is interesting to observe, convened on the 31st day of October, the day before, and they sat upon the 4th of November, upon which date they made this deliverance which I have discussed before the Senate. So while they were in session, and the very next day after they convened, this judgment awarding the peremptory writ on the county board was made by this court, whose jurisdiction in the premises no one questions. That writ, for some reason was not served until the 7th of November, but the county clerk swears in an affidavit, which is before the Senate as it was before the committee, that when he sent this communication to the board on the day of their assembling and sent this abstract that he made of the votes, including precinct 34, he attached a copy of this judgment of the court to that paper, and they had this judgment of the court before them, according to the affidavit of Clerk Booth, and it is not denied anywhere.

Mr. GEORGE. The State canvassers had it before them?

Mr. GRAY. The State canvassing board had a certified copy.

Mr. GEORGE. Before they made their certificate?

Mr. GRAY. Before they made their certificate, and it is not denied by any member of that board or anybody on their behalf, so far as I know.

It may be well to pause for one moment in the progress of this argument to comment upon the fact, so patent upon the face of these proceedings, of the indecent haste with which this Territorial board sought to evade the performance of their sworn and lawful duty, to note the fact that by the evidence in this case they became the participants in a conspiracy as base and as black and as unjustifiable (if conspiracy could ever be justifiable) as ever was proved to exist against the liberties and freedom of a people of our race and lineage.

It is an irresistible conclusion which every unbiased and unprejudiced mind must draw from the facts in this case, that this canvassing board called the Territorial board, in order to evade their duty in regard to Silver Bow County and the election of representatives, rendered their judgment on the 4th of November with the knowledge that a court of competent jurisdiction had ordered those returns to be made, and the further fact that within three days after their adjournment, in obedience to the order of the court, that return was made and certified to by that canvassing board, including precinct 34. That is the thing to which we turn as the only and best evidence remaining to us of who were the lawfully elected members from Silver Bow County to the Legislative Assembly of Montana.

Mr. GEORGE. Did the canvassing board obey the order of the court?

Mr. GRAY. They did.

Mr. BUTLER. And made their return?

Mr. GRAY. And made their abstract from the return, and that was duly sent to the secretary of the Territory.

Mr. VANCE. And was duly disregarded.

Mr. GRAY. And, as the Senator from North Carolina says, it was duly disregarded. I know personally none of these gentlemen; I do not suppose that any member of the committee knows any of them personally; but it is my duty here in my place in the Senate to say that conduct such as that appears to be by the evidence in this case deserves and should receive the condemnation of every law-abiding and law-loving citizen in this broad land. There was no excuse for this indecent haste. They could have sat until now, if it was necessary, to perform their duty. There was no necessity that the State of Montana should have been admitted into the Union on the 8th day of November rather than on the 10th or 12th or 20th of November, but so it was. They made their finding on the 4th of November, and that finding has to be brought to the knowledge of the President of the United States in order that in obedience to the enabling act his proclamation can make the admission of the State into the Union complete.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask another question, because I want to get the facts right. I have not studied this record. Does the Senator desire to be understood as saying that before this State or Territorial canvassing board adjourned they had notice of the decree of the court or the judgment of the court directing this thirty-fourth precinct to be counted by the canvassers of that county?

Mr. GRAY. In answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I distinctly say that according to the affidavit of Charles F. Booth he attached to that abstract of the vote of Silver Bow County which he sent to that board on the 31st day of October, the day on which they convened, a certified copy of the judgment of this court ordering that mandamus.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. GRAY. One moment, and I will allow the Senator from Massachusetts to ask me a question. There is the admission of that State or Territorial board that they had before them that abstract. There is no denial anywhere in this record that the certified copy of the judgment was not also a matter within their cognizance.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the Senator also understand that that was the judgment of a local and inferior district court?

Mr. GRAY. Ah!

Mr. HOAR. From whose judgment an appeal was taken and which judgment was rendered absolutely null and void upon that appeal.

Mr. GRAY. I will tell the Senator what I understand. I understand that the judgment was by a court of competent jurisdiction. It was by the district court, authorized by law to sit in and for the county of Silver Bow. No one here or elsewhere, so far as I know, has ever denied that jurisdiction at all, and, it being the mandate of a court of competent jurisdiction, it was bound to be obeyed by the county canvassers, and was entitled to be respected by every law-abiding citizen in that community, including their high mightinesses, the members of the Territorial canvassing board.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. GRAY. Wait one moment, and I will. Part of this indecent conduct will appear to any Senator who will take the trouble to read this record, when he looks at the dilatory motions which were made all through the conduct of that case; but he will find that the appeal of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks was unavailing for any purpose under the laws of Montana, because the laws of that Territory required that an appeal bond, or undertaking, as it is called, should be filed within five days of the notice of appeal, and we find that the notice of appeal was given on the 1st day of November, and the appeal bond was not filed until the 7th.

Mr. GEORGE. Two days too late?

Mr. GRAY. Two days too late. I have not the statutes of Montana here, but I will quote them with sufficient accuracy to satisfy the Senate (and if I am wrong I can easily be corrected by reference to the statute itself), that, where an appeal is taken the provision is that unless an appeal bond is filed within five days of the notice of the appeal, the said appeal shall be unavailing for any purpose whatever. That being the condition of this case, with this mandate of this court of competent jurisdiction lying before them, as in the absence of their denial or countervailing testimony we must agree that it was, what did this board do? They adjourned on the 4th of November, when they might have sat until the 10th, much less might have sat until the 7th, with this communication from C. F. Booth before them, too, upon which they lay so much stress, in which he tells them that this writ could not issue until the 7th of November, and that after the 7th of November he would send them the abstract of votes from that county.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator again, is there no limitation in the statutes of Montana as to the period of time at which this board could hold its sessions?

Mr. GRAY. None at all. It could, so far as the ordinance providing for it was concerned, have sat until the present time, and it should have sat just so long as truth and justice and a regard for the orderly conduct of lawful proceedings required them to sit. That was their duty; and I am in view of that fact and of that plain duty, when we find what their conduct really was, that they stand convicted in the mind of every honorable man of a participation in these sharp practices which the majority of this committee by their report would have this Senate be made a participant in.

Mr. President, party exigency is a thing of terrible strain and great effect, I know; but there are limits even to party pressure and what it can do with honest men. Party exigency and party necessity will take us all sometimes to the verge of the conduct that a citizen of a self-governing republic ought to engage in, but it should never take us beyond that verge. Admitting that that is a potent factor in this as in other cases where politics are involved, the ambition of party leaders in this young State should never have caused them to have so far departed from propriety as to make them hurry this case beyond the law, beyond decency, and beyond the evidence that admittedly was before them. What do we find? Why this haste? Is it so important that these worthy gentlemen, Mr. Power and Mr. Sanders, one of whom I have the pleasure of knowing and against whom I have not a word to say and never heard a word that could in any way impinge upon his high standing as a citizen and a gentleman—is it so important that these gentlemen should occupy seats in this body that this canvassing board might not have waited to see the result of the judgment of this court, a certified copy of which they had before them?

Only three days they would have had to wait, and this anxiety that they express, this perturbation of mind in which they seem to have been by reason of the want of this return of Silver Bow County, would all have been dissipated, and they would have had not only the returns, including precinct 34, before them, but they would have had them there in obedience to a law-directed duty, as interpreted by the judicial department of the State. They ran away from that. This judicial court was not a court that pleased them in its conduct of this suit. Seeking for motives, we must seek those that lie on the surface. It did not please them. The admission of the State of Montana ousted, too, the jurisdiction of all the Territorial courts, and the judge who rendered this judgment and awarded this peremptory mandamus would be out of office the moment that State was admitted; and so making their findings as to the vote on the constitution and as to the officers and representatives on the 4th of November somehow, by some winged messenger, faster than the iron steed, more swift than any method of transportation of which we have any knowledge, as swift as the lightning comes the proclamation of the President of the United States telling them that he had the certified proceedings of that board before him, and that in obedience to the law he proclaimed Montana duly admitted as a State into this Union.

I will not pause to criticize the preparation of that proclamation and the evidences of haste upon its face it also bears when compared with the other proclamations in regard to the others of this sisterhood of Northwestern States, but we find this remarkable thing about it. I am not here to accuse the President of the United States of being a participant in this crime—far from it; but he has been persuaded by this active cabal of conspirators in a distant State to make himself an instrument in consummating their designs. We find this proclamation was dated on the 8th day of November, and that board made its deliverance on the 4th day of November; and we find also that it was not late in the day on the 8th day of November, but in a note it is stated:

Ten o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., Friday, November 8, President's signature attached.

This is an official copy from the State Department obtained yesterday. No such note as to the hour of the proclamation or the attachment of the President's signature appears upon any proclamation for the admission of the new States but this, and I have them all in my hand, Washington, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] put a question to the Senator from Delaware—

Mr. GRAY. I wish the Senator would let me answer.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, if the Senator desires. I do not wish to interfere.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator may proceed. I do not object.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said he would like to have the facts made right.

Mr. GRAY. If I have made any mistake or misstatement I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Mississippi asked the Senator from Delaware just now in regard to a peremptory mandamus issued by the district court, and the Senator from Delaware answered that that mandamus had issued, and that this returning board, knowing the fact, had proceeded to make up their judgment or take action disregarding it. I asked the Senator if he was not aware that that was a district court of local jurisdiction and that an appeal had been entered, to which the Senator, with great earnestness of manner, undoubtedly forgetting the facts, I am sure, but still with very great earnestness of manner, made what seemed to him to be quite a triumphant answer.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment. I am very willing to answer a question, but I want to get through. I am very tired, and the Senator will have his own time to answer me.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one fact; I do not wish to make any speech. The Senator said, as I understood him, that the bond was not filed in time. Now I wish to read from the statement of facts made by the Senator himself: "To which ruling of the court defendants, by counsel, duly except and file notice of appeal." That is the 1st of November. This other bond was not filed for six days afterwards, while the statute requires five. There was entered in the cause an agreement that the whole matter should remain unchanged, in statu quo, until the 12th of November. This is the proposition.

Mr. GRAY. I have considered that matter and examined the record. If that appeal bond had been filed within the time prescribed by the statute, then this peremptory writ of mandamus could not have issued on the 7th, because it would have been a supersedeas. Now, as a matter of fact, that mandate did issue on the 7th, and therefore we must conclude that this understanding or note of an agreement by counsel in court had no effect at all upon extending the time prescribed by the statute within which an appeal bond should be filed. Therefore, I say you can not change the statute by agreement; you can not extend the time prescribed by law by mere agreement, although it may be where a right has accrued it may be waived by agreement, but the statute of Montana, as I understand it, is positive and mandatory that if an appeal bond is not filed within five days from notice of the appeal said appeal shall be unavailing for any purpose whatever. That is the language.

Mr. HOAK. Mr. President—

Mr. GRAY. I do not object to answering any question of the Senator from Massachusetts or to having him call my attention to anything that is a mistake of fact; I will only be grateful to him for doing it, and I hope he does not understand me as objecting on that ground; but I am anxious to conclude my remarks.

I was commenting when interrupted by the question of the Senator from Massachusetts, which I do not object to, on the fact that is here in the record, that the President of the United States, to whom I attribute no unworthy motive at all, had been induced by this active cabal of conspirators out in this distant State to issue his proclamation of the 8th of November, certifying to a fact that was not officially found until the 4th day of November, 2,000 miles away from this city and a distance so great that it could not by any possibility have been traversed by any of the ordinary modes of communication between those two dates.

Now, we find, as I said before, what seems to me a significant thing, showing the extraordinary zeal with which these parties in Montana pressed upon the President of the United States, that they were so anxious that this Territorial court should be ousted from its jurisdiction by the admission of the State, and prior to the service of the writ of peremptory mandamus, that they would not leave it in doubt as to whether the fraction of a day, which the law does not regard, might save them or not; and so they put in that the President's signature was attached to this proclamation at 10.40 a. m. on that 8th day of November, a note which is not found in any other proclamation in regard to States in the Northwest, as to the hour at which the President's signature was attached. But, unfortunately for them, fast as they traveled, swift as this lightning was, it was not swift enough to anticipate the service of this peremptory writ, for it was served on the 7th of November, and 10.40 a. m. on the 8th could not save them.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question right there, if he will allow me.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator said that the communication of this constitution and these proceedings could not have been made from Helena—I believe that is the name of the capital of the Territory, where these proceedings were had—within the time limited. I desire to ask the Senator if he has inquired into that fact particularly and satisfied his mind that it is true.

Mr. GRAY. I am satisfied about that. I do not know of my own knowledge, of course, but I have been informed that there are no trains running across this continent anywhere within reach of Helena that can bring anybody here except by about the consumption of five days. I am informed that the first possible train that could have brought any one here from the 4th of November, the date of this finding by the board as to the vote on the constitution, the earliest date at which any one could arrive here would be at 5 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, and this proclamation was issued on Thursday at 10.40 a. m. Do not forget that. But, unfortunately for these conspirators, at 10.40 a. m. on Thursday, the 8th of November, in the year of our Lord 1889, the peremptory writ of mandamus issued by this court of competent jurisdiction, and not superseded, had been served upon these county canvassers and had been obeyed. That was complete. There is no room to question the legality in any sense of that proceeding. It was fait accompli.

Now, Mr. President, apologizing for the time that I have already taken, which has been somewhat due to the interruptions, which were, of course, pertinent, but have led me somewhat off from the orderly track of my argument, we come to inquire into what is this thing done by the county board; what is this act performed by them in accordance with their law-directed duty, interpreted by a court of competent jurisdiction, which this Territorial canvassing board complained was not before them or in their jurisdiction. Why, here it is; here it is in the evidence before the committee, and, of course, before the Senate, this return from Silver Bow County, in the name of all the commissioners who constituted that county board, certifying to the result, adding up the figures, including precinct 34, and clearly showing that the five members who sat in the Iron Hall house of representatives, and who participated in the election of Messrs. Sanders and Power, were not elected, but, on the contrary, the five members who sat in the Court-House assembly, and participated in the election of Messrs. Clark and Maginnis, were elected.

What are we going to do about it? How shall we treat it? Oh, it is the Democratic party, and it elects Democratic members, and therefore some different law and rule of action must apply than if the contrary had been the fact. Oh, no; I do not accuse our friends on the other side of any feeling of that kind. I know that they feel bound, as I feel bound, to treat this case according to the law and evidence, and to exercise this judicial function of the Senate on a high plane of conscience and loyalty to duty.

What must we do? If we have no finding of this Territorial board that is binding upon us, are we not bound, in the language of Mr. Paine, on Elections, to turn to the canvassing board of the county which has been omitted to be canvassed by the Territorial board? I do not know how to state the case more plainly. Argument on my part could not make our duty plainer. It would not emphasize, it seems to me, the force and pressing urgency of this duty for me to dwell upon it and seek by argumentation to press it further on the minds of Senators. I conceive, of course, that Senators agree with me, as I submit they must, that we have no finding of the Territorial board in the premises, because they tell us that this very thing we are now face to face with was not before them.

Then, it seems to me, under the circumstances, as reasonable beings, much less as men fit to occupy as we do occupy positions as lawyers, as Senators, and as statesmen, this finding of the county canvassing board under the law of the Territory of Montana, recognized by Montana, recognized by all departments, must be conclusive upon us. And if that is so, we have found, in the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, five members holding credentials of an officer or a board upon whom was devolved by law the duty of making such a finding; and there this case rests, and from that point it can not be moved, except by sophistry and a process of reasoning which must disregard the facts, disregard the principles which have always governed this Senate heretofore, and arbitrarily seek to accomplish results over and in spite of both facts and principles.

Now, Mr. President, unless I have demonstrated that this finding of the county board is binding upon the Senate and is the lawful and sufficient evidence of title of the five members who sat in the Court-House house of representatives and participated in the election of Messrs. Maginnis and Clark as Senators of the United States from Montana, of course I have failed to accomplish what I had in view. That evidence is all before the Senate, as it was before the committee. You have here, in the record, and it is in no way denied to be a veritable and true record in that respect, the finding of that county board of canvassers, made in obedience to law, made in obedience to the mandate of a judicial tribunal competent to make and issue such a mandate, and that is the only lawful certificate we have. We are not seeking to go behind the returns; we are not taking any of the positions which the Senator from Massachusetts attributed to the minority; we are not indorsing the doctrine of the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Carpenter, distinguished as he was in his lifetime as a lawyer and as a statesman, and which I, as well as the Senator from Massachusetts, depart from and decline to indorse; not at all.

We are trying to answer truly, to answer as a judicial tribunal upon a judicial inquisition, as we must, the question which of these two groups of members had in their lawful possession a lawful credential from a board or officer authorized by law to give it, and we have found it going step by step from the doors of either house and seeking, first, the highest or central authority, and failing to find it there, seeking for the next, which was the county board of the county in which and from which alone these members were elected, and there we stop. We do not seek to go behind these returns; we do not seek for the purposes of this case to engage in any discussion with the Senator from Massachusetts as to the fairness and legality of the election that was held at precinct 34, although on that subject we have something to say, but we simply say that, standing upon the same ground, professing to indorse the same principles, and governed by the same rules, we have found this result; and I think, with becoming respect for the majority of the committee, I may say we challenge them to show wherein we have not, pursuing that very path that they have pointed out, come to a strictly just, logical, and legal conclusion of this whole matter, and that is that Messrs. Maginnis and Clark, as the duly chosen and accredited Senators of a body duly elected and composed of members holding lawful credentials, are entitled to sit in this body.

Mr. President, we might pause there and I might well, and perhaps should, apologize to the Senate for continuing longer in what must already have been a tiresome deliverance on my part, but for the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts, both in the report of the majority which he submitted and also in his remarks this morning, has reflected upon the integrity of those polls at precinct 34, in Silver Bow County, of the then Territory of Montana, and perhaps it is my duty, because

I am thoroughly possessed with the conviction that the honest vote of that precinct will have to be suppressed in order to support the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, that I should say a word in defense of those as yet undefended people.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it will be utterly impossible and, but for the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts did undertake to impugn the fairness of that election, I would have said that it was impossible for any honest mind to examine the evidence that is before the Senate, to examine it all, all that the Senator from Massachusetts had before him, all that was spread before the committee, all that I have ever heard of, and then say that the election at that poll was not as peaceable, as fair, as orderly, and as legally conducted as in any precinct of which any one of us ever had any knowledge anywhere in the course of our lives.

It seemed to have been a part of the exigency of this case, which from the first to the last appears to have been so pressing in every direction and on all sides upon the majority of this committee, that they should attack the integrity of that poll at precinct 34; and upon what sort of evidence and upon what ground? The Senator from Massachusetts told you this morning, and he has told you in the report submitted by him on behalf of the majority of this committee what those grounds were, and when I recite them I will venture to say that every Senator who does me the honor to listen will agree with me that never before in his experience were objections so frivolous, so light, so unfounded, brought as a ground to throw out and discard the votes of American freemen in any election in this country.

Mr. President, I heard it suggested, not by the Senator from Massachusetts, but in some of the arguments made in behalf of these interested gentlemen in Montana, that this was a poll up in the Rocky Mountains, far away from the centers of civilization, where none but those rough and rugged spirits, who are the pioneers of our civilization nevertheless, were congregated—"laborers on railroads" was sneeringly said, working under a railroad contractor, continuing those mighty works which have done more to civilize this continent, to magnify its importance, and demonstrate its strength and greatness than all other labor combined—that these were the class of men at those polls, presumably ignorant and controlled by their bosses. That was urged and that was suggested in argument made on behalf of these gentlemen, Messrs. Power and Sanders, to commence with, and then what were the facts? So far from its being very distant, I do not know that it would make any difference if it was distant, but as a mere matter of fact it is interesting to observe as we pass along that it is only 9 miles from this precinct to the city of Butte, the largest and most important and most populous town in the Territory of Montana—only 9 miles, with railroad communication part of the way.

Well, they were not so far off from the civilizing illumination that comes from the urban populations of this country that they might not have enjoyed some of that light and been entitled to enjoy the right of an American freeman to cast a ballot. Almost within the sight of the lights of that great city, they might be presumed to have been so far advanced in civic virtue and civic attainments that they might have been allowed, without this unnecessary aspersion, to drop their ballots in the box and exercise that ordinary but most precious gift of every freeman, the right to cast one vote and have it counted. Well, they did presume that they had that right, and they came down to precinct 34, and under the Australian ballot law—the law which the State of Massachusetts was the first of all the States, I believe, in this country to enact, and which I should be glad to see everywhere—under that Australian system they came down and they dropped their ballots in the box. One man went into the booth at a time—I am reciting the substance of the evidence now in this case, though I will not stop to read it at large—each man went into the booth unattended and alone, and there he had communication with that mysterious being, the election officer, who sat back there, and who, at his direction and in his presence, marked the ticket and designated the names for whom he wished to vote, and that vote was stamped as official by another judge, and by another was dropped in the box. There is no evidence that there was any intimidation, bribery, corruption, or undue influence exercised towards any man on that day. There is no evidence that a man was offered so much as the value of a nickel to cast his vote one way or the other, and, therefore, there were certainly some presumptions—some presumptions that even partisans must entertain—in favor of the regularity of the ballot of an American freeman cast in this way.

Oh, but the Senator says—for I really think the Senator from Massachusetts was not able to go the length that the gentleman who represented these aspiring Senators did—the returns were irregular, the election was not conducted according to law, and we get up, lawyers of some experience as most of us are, and make objections. These poor railroad men went down there and cast their ballots under the Australian system, and then, with an additional safeguard (which I am sure some of my friends on the other side will think an additional safeguard), the majority of the judges were of the Republican party, put their ballots in the box, and they fancied that they had performed this great duty of an American citizen, and their self-respect was increased and magnified, and it ought to have been.

They went back to their work, humble though it was, and with pick, and ax, and shovel sought to make advance towards the setting sun with this great line of railway over the Rocky Mountains, it is true, 9 miles away from this center of illumination and enlightenment, the city of Butte; but going back to that work, honest, though humble, they had a right, we would suppose, to think of this act of theirs as properly contributing to that great drama enacted on that day all over Silver Bow County and all over the Territory of Montana. They had a right, one would think, to believe with some satisfaction that their votes would be taken into the account when they came to reckon up the results. That is all they had a right to ask. They certainly had a right to ask that much.

But now come the lawyers from Helena, with 1 Dogberry, bound in boards, under their arms. They walked down to these polls, and they pick up the returns, and they put on their gold-bowed eye-glasses, and they sneer and laugh at these poor, innocent laborers, and they say, "All right; you voted; the election officers swear the election was honestly and peaceably conducted; that is all so; but after you had gone back to your work these officers of the election, over whom you had no control whatever and for whose acts you were not responsible, have in making their returns, we observe, not signed their names in the proper place, and we will call your attention, gentlemen"—or laborers from this tunnel—"to the fact, in regard to which, no doubt, when you observe, you will be quite content to share our conclusions, that, whereas the law of Montana requires the returns to be signed by the clerks and attested by the judges, these returns are signed by the judges and attested by the clerks, and surely under circumstances of that kind you do not expect your votes to be counted!"

Now, that is the first objection seriously urged before a tribunal of American Senators, and to-day it stands among the objections upon which this Senate is called to pass. The law of Montana said that these returns must be signed by the clerks and attested by the judges, but actually they were signed by the judges and attested by the clerks. That is the first objection.

That is not all. There are other objections. But, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, it is not one objection he places it upon, but upon the cumulative force of several such objections. Now, let us see. There is another as to the laws of Montana—and the Senator from Massachusetts dwelt with great emphasis upon this—that under this new law for the Australian ballot passed in March of last year, just about a year ago, this being the first election held under it, it was directed that there should be five judges of election at each precinct, except that the county commissioners, whose duty it was to appoint the judges, might, where there were less than 100 votes, appoint only three judges.

This was a new precinct established for the first time. It was a small precinct, and there was no evidence of any previous vote by which the county commissioners could be guided, and, therefore, on the best evidence I suppose that they could get, they supposed there was only occasion to appoint three judges, and three judges only they did appoint. But then these laborers, these railroad laborers up in this tunnel, called Homestake tunnel, did not know about this when they went down to cast their votes, and they dropped their ballots in the box all unsuspecting of the fact that only three judges had been appointed by the county commissioners who supposed that not more than one hundred votes would be cast at this new precinct. That was not their fault, but, according to the Senator from Massachusetts, they must suffer for it.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no.

Mr. GRAY. And their votes must be thrown out and trampled under foot as unworthy of being counted with the votes of other freemen of that county because for that and other reasons they were not entitled—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Delaware will permit me to say that he entirely misrepresents me in consequence of having entirely misunderstood me. In pointing out the numerous badges of fraud and irregularity in this election, when I alluded to each one of those irregularities I said expressly, for that the people who cast the votes ought not to suffer if it were taken alone. Every time I made that observation.

Mr. GRAY. I meant to, if I did not, quote that language of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says "for this the Senator from Massachusetts would have them suffer."

Mr. GRAY. "And for other reasons."

Mr. HOAR. "For this the Senator from Massachusetts would have their votes thrown out." Then he repeated "for this and other reasons."

Mr. GRAY. Of course I would not do the Senator an injustice knowingly, and I am perfectly willing he shall make that explanation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator would do himself a great injustice if he should let it pass.

Mr. GRAY. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that I would do myself a great injustice if I misrepresented the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir.

DEATH OF HON. DAVID WILBER.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that a communication from the House of Representatives, giving us notice of the death of a colleague of ours in that body, may now be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has learned with profound regret of the death of Hon. David Wilber, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a special committee of seven members of the House of Representatives and three members of the Senate be appointed to take order for attending his funeral at his residence in the State of New York; and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be payable out of the first funds in the contingent fund of the House available therefor.

That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. EVARTS. I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate have heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. David Wilber, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolutions of the House of Representatives, providing for the appointment of a special joint committee to take order for attending the funeral of the deceased at his residence in the State of New York, and that the members of the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will appoint as members of the committee representing the Senate Messrs. HISCOCK, SQUIRE, and KENNA.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 3, 1890, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1890.

The House met at 11 o'clock, a. m.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal of yesterday's proceedings is not quite ready to be submitted to the House; therefore, without objection, that matter will be passed over for the present.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Manufactures be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 313 and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. This is a bill involving the question of trusts. Some of the bills on this subject have been sent to the Committee on Manufactures and others to the Committee on the Judiciary. I understand that the Judiciary Committee is about to take up this subject, and therefore I would like to have this bill before them.

There being no objection, the Committee on Manufactures was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 313) to prohibit the formation of interstate trusts and trade conspiracies, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IRRIGATION.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that House Report No. 409, from the Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, be printed in the RECORD, together with extracts from letters received by me from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The documents referred to are as follows:

Mr. LANHAM, from the Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 324):

The Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States, to whom was referred House bill No. 324, entitled "A bill concerning the irrigation of arid lands in the valley of the Rio Grande River, the construction of a dam across said river at or near El Paso, Tex., for the storage of its waste waters, and for other purposes," have considered the same and respectfully report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The reasons which commend this bill to legislative attention, the conditions which have given rise to its introduction, and the necessities which have brought about its consideration are substantially formulated in the preamble. (See copy of bill hereto attached.) The statements therein made have been affirmatively established. The investigation of the committee has been aided by the presence and testimony of gentlemen who are fully conversant with the facts and have had ample opportunity for an actual observation of their existence; besides, documentary and historic evidence bearing upon the situation has been available, from which additional information, believed to be reliable and accurate, has been obtained.

It will be observed that the measure proposed is inceptive and initiatory in its character, contemplating in its terms no present final or conclusive legislation, carrying no appropriation, but reserving any ultimate proposition on the subject to be controlled by the future judgment and discretion of Congress, after international consultation and methods for concert of action shall have been considered and devised. It is not expected that the remedies suggested for a solution of the troubles indicated can be rendered operative without the preliminary negotiations provided for shall be followed by appropriate and necessary legislation to carry them into effect. A mutual understanding and co-operation by and between the respective Governments concerned will be a necessary antecedent, and any practical results are contingent on the event that, after full conference shall be had and full investigation shall be made, it shall be regarded expedient and of such importance as to warrant future authoritative and conjoint execution by the two countries. Accordingly the fourth section of the bill provides—

"That the President is requested to communicate to Congress the result of said negotiation, together with his recommendation thereon, at the earliest practicable opportunity."

The committee are of the opinion that the issues involved are of such moment, the complications so embarrassing, the national and international interests so important, and the situation one of such gravity as to suggest the wisdom and propriety of the two Republics conferring and reasoning together, and inaugurating all suitable and possible measures for the conservation of that harmony and prosperity of their respective citizens and that amicable and orderly administration of their respective Governments so greatly to be desired, and yet so seriously menaced by the existence of the causes stated in the preamble. These difficulties will, it may be assumed, grow more serious and critical the longer the correctives are delayed, and it would seem to be the part of prudence to anticipate and provide against their consequences as far as it is possible to be done.

The Republic of Mexico is our near neighbor, separated from us, in part, by the Rio Grande River for a distance of some 1,200 miles. With its twelve millions of people, with its developing resources and wonderful possibilities, with its invitation to and reception of American capital, with its great trunk-line railroads, practically extensions of ours, with its varied fields for our commerce and constant demand for our products, with all its multiplied relations to us, it is a neighbor with whom we shall always have to deal and whom it is both our duty and policy to treat and cultivate in a neighborly way. There are many Mexicans who are citizens of the United States, enjoying all the immunities of such. They are to be found all along on our side of the Rio Grande. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in its eighth and ninth articles made especial provision for such citizenship.

In a report relating to troubles on the Rio Grande, transmitted to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of War in 1878 (see Ex. Doc. No. 84, Forty-fifth Congress, second session), Colonel Hatch says:

"The people are one and the same on the two sides of the river; although subjects and citizens of different nations, they are one in race and religion, and bound by the closest ties of interest and blood; their customs, habits, and traditions are the same, and there is hardly a family on the one side but is related by ties of blood or marriage with those on the other; hence, when you touch one you touch all, and when one is hurt all feel it. * * * One [trouble] which must be looked for sooner or later is in connection with the water taken from the Rio Grande for irrigation. As soon as the attempt is made to largely extend cultivation in this valley (there will not be enough water for all, and both sides have an equal right), from this trouble are certain to arise sooner or later, which may involve the two countries seriously."

In the report of the board of officers (see Ex. Doc. No. 93, Forty-ninth Congress, second session), March 16, 1878, is to be found the following statement: "The Rio Grande, at this season of the year even an insignificant stream, its channel often shifting and always erratic, but during the heats of summer sometimes dry, affords, by being directed into acueductos on either bank, a vast and variable supply of water to the people of both nationalities, but is utterly insufficient to irrigate this extensive valley, where the yearly rainfall measures but a few inches. As time progresses and the country is opened by accessions to its populations, sure to come—for it is a most fertile region and gloriously rewards the labor spent in irrigation—the question must grow in importance, and may occasion trouble beyond the reach of diplomacy to settle."

Time has verified in a great degree these prognostications, as will appear subsequently. The "accessions to the populations" have been rapidly made. A new and different citizenship has been attracted here and added to those residing in the valley at the time when these official reports were submitted. Energetic and progressive Americans have since made their homes and invested their capital here, while substantial and material development by the Mexicans is also observable. Our people along the border are thrown in daily contact with the people of Mexico. Notwithstanding our covenants of amity, it has been not only difficult but at times impossible to prevent outbreaks and conflicts on the Mexican frontier from various causes, despite the efforts of good men in either country to maintain friendly relations. Depredations, reprisals, bloodshed, and retaliations have occasionally marked and marred the history of these border peoples. General Stanley, commanding the department of Texas, in his official report, dated September 12, 1889 (see Report of General Schofield to Secretary of War, 1889, page 100), says:

"Our relations with our Mexican neighbors upon the long line of the Rio Grande have been kindly, although they are a good deal excited over what they deem the violation of their riparian rights, through our people taking all the water of the Rio Grande for the irrigation of the San Luis Valley, which leaves the Rio Grande a dry bed for 500 miles. The question is one that must be settled by the State Department, and thus far there has been no call for military force. The remedy for this water famine and consequent ruin to the inhabitants of the Rio Grande Valley must be found in storage reservoirs, so easy of construction, one in the cañon opposite Taos, and the other in the cañon near and north of El Paso."

The Rio Grande is quite a long stream, being with its meanders some 2,000 miles in length. It rises in Colorado and is supplied from a number of tributaries in that State and Northern New Mexico, the rainfall and melting of the snow and ice. There are frequently vast accumulations of snow and ice in the deep cañons of that region during the long winters. If the snowfall be great and its melting accompanied by rains in the spring, the river becomes a raging torrent from about the 1st of April until July, carrying enormous quantities of water through its entire length. Much of this time it is wholly unused and unnecessary for irrigating purposes in either Colorado or Upper New Mexico, and its flow is not only vastly more than is required for such purposes lower down the stream, but, because of its temporary superabundance, becomes really destructive. In such cases it goes on unused to the Gulf, carrying as waste that which if it could be conserved for the seasons later on would be precious indeed to the people along its course. If the snowfall in the mountains above be light, and its melting unaccompanied by rains, the water from the snow is in a great degree evaporated and the floods are less enormous.

The middle third of this river, say from Albuquerque, N. Mex., to Presidio del Norte, Mexico, a distance of about 500 miles, has no important living confluents and passes through an extremely arid belt, where the evaporation from a water surface is many times the rainfall annually; and in unusually dry seasons its history for the past forty years shows that it failed to carry a current for short periods during August or September on an average of about once in seven years. At and below Presidio del Norte it has living confluents from Mexico and Texas which maintain a constant flow to the Gulf of Mexico. Midway in this arid belt are the two large valleys of the river—Mesilla in New Mexico and El Paso in Texas and Mexico—where agricultural pursuits have been maintained almost since prehistoric times certainly, and of record for more than two centuries, essentially dependent on irrigation, the ordinary rainfall not being an important factor in the growth of crops.

Near and just above El Paso, Tex., the Rio Grande, or rather "the middle of that river, following the deepest channel" (treaty 1853), or "the center of the normal channel," etc., (convention 1884), becomes the international boundary of the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico. But for the last forty years the river has been so continuously changing its bed from one side of the valley to the other, more or less with each recurring flood, in many cases it being unknown whether caused by avulsion or gradual erosion and deposit, that it is frequently impossible to determine to which country the land on either bank of the river belongs in different localities and to great extent in area.

These floods have sometimes become devastating torrents, inundating the whole valley for miles, cutting new channels, and sweeping everything before them. In 1842, in the El Paso Valley, the river changed its bed for a distance of 30 miles, and in some places 7 miles laterally. Hundreds of smaller changes have been made since. In 1884 it began moving back from the Mexican side at this point, and in a few months carried away 15 miles of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and threw a single body of over 5,000 acres of land on the south side of the river, although it is still claimed to be within the domain of Texas. This land was just above the Mexican town of San Ygnacio, and as the river left the town for miles its people were compelled to take a canal from the river where it is entirely in Texas and carry it for more than 3 miles over Texas soil to irrigate their land and for domestic purposes. The situation is further well described in an able report submitted in the last Congress by the Hon. Mr. HITT, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows:

"It [the Rio Grande] has shifted its channels so often and so far, in some cases gradually, in others abruptly and by cut-offs, that no man knows accurately where the boundary is to-day. Sometimes the stream will suddenly cut a new channel, abandoning the old ones altogether, and in a single day, by a cut-off, a tract or 'banco' of a hundred acres will be found to be on the other side of the river. These causes have produced uncertainty as to the boundary, and this encourages smuggling, which is always carried on more or less on the border. When a man smuggles from a 'banco' it is almost impossible to catch and convict him. No surveys are made nor official records kept of the time and place of cut-off changes and no one can tell with accuracy the extent of a cut-off. The bed of the old channel is the boundary, though it may be long since dry. There are sometimes two or three old beds, and it is hard to tell where is the middle of the old bed contemplated by the treaty.

"At the last term of the United States district court at Brownsville, the most noted case of smuggling was lost by the Government for want of that accurate knowledge that would satisfy the court. . . . These bancos with their uncertain boundaries afforded retreats for smugglers, thieves, kidnappers, murderers, and every class of criminals, as well as bases of supplies from which to carry on their operations, free from interference by either Government."

He concludes his report with a recommendation from the committee in favor of the creation of a boundary commission, "in view of the protection of the revenue, the prevention of crime, the maintenance of good order, and the preservation of international harmony."

"Article 5 of the convention of 1884 between the two countries provides that rights of property in respect of lands which may have become separated through the creation of new channels shall not be affected thereby, but such lands shall continue to be under the jurisdiction of the country to which they previously belonged."

It is easy to be perceived how serious are the difficulties to both countries in the adjustment of titles to land, the prevention of smuggling and the arrest and punishment of all kinds of criminals on account of the confusion of boundary and doubtful jurisdiction, which arise from the facts stated.

But a further complication has arisen in recent years, growing out of the fact that in Colorado and New Mexico a great number of irrigating ditches and canals have been taken from the Upper Rio Grande and its tributaries, resulting to a great degree in the absorption of the water before it reaches the point of international boundary. By reference to the fourth biennial report (pages 287 to 325) of the State engineer of Colorado for 1887-'88 it will be seen that more than three hundred ditches have been taken out in that State alone, while vast quantities of water have been and are being similarly appropriated in New Mexico. The result has been a great depletion of the flow of the river in the driest part of the year, July and August, when it is most needed. This has been so great for the last three years in the above-indicated middle third of the river's course as to almost entirely destroy the growing annals, the younger vines and fruit trees, and unless corrected in some way will finally eventuate in the total destruction of the agricultural interests in this entire section.

In 1888 the river was absolutely dry for over sixty days about August and September, and in 1889 it had no flow whatever from the 5th of August to the 20th of December, a period of 137 days. While this dearth of water may not be wholly imputed to the irrigating agencies and consumption of water by the people of Colorado and New Mexico—for it must be admitted that these seasons were dry, with little snow in the mountains—still there can be no doubt that they have materially contributed to that end, and will continue to do so in the future in an increasing ratio as the number of ditches multiply. It is stated by Major Powell, Director of the Geological Survey, as a reasonable probability, that within a comparatively short period, with the growing development of agricultural interests in the region of the Upper Rio Grande, the impounding, distribution, and utilization of the waters of that river and its tributaries after the manner already begun, there will be a wholly inadequate, if not utter absence of, supply of water in the stream below.

Such continued and serious dearth of water in the river has never been known before by those inhabitants of the valley who are and have been for many years best acquainted with its history and characteristics, and both Americans and Mexicans claim that the deprivation of their accustomed water supply is attributable to the action of the people of the United States in the localities mentioned. They further insist that the Rio Grande is an international stream, belonging not to Chihuahua or other Mexican States or to Texas or its people, but that an equal undivided one-half interest in it, with all its privileges, belongs to the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, and that as such it is entitled to receive the care and attention of the respective Federal Governments.

The El Paso Valley extends from the pass at El Paso 90 miles below, and is from 4 to 10 miles wide. It contains about 200,000 acres of magnificent lands, situated about equally on the Mexican and Texan side of the river, that under proper and possible conditions could be reduced to a fine state of cultivation. There are now in this valley about 50,000 people, nearly equally divided between the two countries. They at present cultivate about 50,000 acres of land, which in fertility is not surpassed on the continent. Here are grown fruits and vegetables of the rarest quality, with cereals of nearly every kind. Perhaps the best grapes in the world are produced here, and this vineyard-dotted valley, under proper auspices, can nowhere be equaled. Of many products the climate and soil afford more than one crop per year; there are numerous valuable farms and gardens, and the people have been heretofore prosperous. There are towns on either side of the river some of which are centuries old. It would not be extravagant to say that this valley and these people represent values aggregating $25,000,000.

These people claim vested rights in the water of the Rio Grande antedating even the written history of the country, of which they insist they are being unjustly deprived by those seeking to form new communities above them. They look with dismay on the manifest and "consequent ruin," described by General Stanley, which inevitably awaits them, if not already upon them, unless some solution of the water question can be found and the "water famine" averted. Their values will be dissipated, their valley depopulated, their homes abandoned, and their possessions useless unless some relief can be afforded and some remedy applied. Severe as these sacrifices may be, it is to be seriously apprehended that they will not peaceably be made.

If these be the facts, and such conditions as above described exist, is not the subject one that should challenge the thoughtful inquiry of Congress, and is it not worth the while and within the proper functions of our Government to take a step in time for promoting some authoritative investigation of the matter through the medium of international negotiation, looking to an ultimate application of any proper correctives? And is it not obvious that the sooner this is done the better it will be for the interests of both Governments?

Confronted as they were with these conditions, it was quite natural that both Americans and Mexicans in the El Paso Valley should take a lively interest in the discussion and discovery of some feasible and practicable remedy for and solution of their troubles. Much was thought, said, and written about it. Finally, Maj. Anson Mills, of the Tenth Cavalry, United States Army, who had lived along the Rio Grande before and since the war and was familiar with the people and history of that part of the country, as well as the characteristics of the river, conceived the idea of impounding the torrential flow of the river in the pass just above El Paso, where the channel is narrow and passes between the mountain walls on either side, and over a solid rock bottom, by means of the construction of a dam about 60 feet high. In this way it is maintained that a vast lake or reservoir, 15 miles long by 7 miles wide, with immense storage capacity, can be created.

There is certainly a wonderful natural adaptation at this point for such a purpose, both in the basin and rim for a lake of such dimensions, and the advantages afforded for the construction of a dam, one end of which to rest on the mountain wall on the Mexican side, and the other on the American side. The project was submitted by Major Mills to the Secretary of State in December, 1884.

By the approval of the Secretary of War he was detaile to make observations and to act under the instructions and directions of the Director of the Geological Survey at this point. He has made full and exhaustive examination and submitted an elaborate report in the premises. He was assisted in the work by Señor Ygnacio Garfias, an accomplished and distinguished Mexican engineer, who was detailed by his Government for that purpose, and whose judgment fully approves the plan. The Senate Committee on Irrigation, appointed at the last Congress, accompanied by Major Powell, of the Geological Survey, visited the locality last September, and also made considerable examination concerning the matter. Major Powell pronounces the plan feasible, and stated before your committee that the only remedy to be found was in such a storage of the water, expressing at the same time the apprehensions before mentioned with reference to the possible future consumption of the water near the sources of the river. The Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands in the Senate have at this session considered and favorably reported a measure substantially the same as that here presented.

The following extract from a recent letter addressed to the writer of this report by the Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE contains an admirable statement of the situation. He was at El Paso during the long period of drought mentioned, and was afforded an opportunity for personal observation of the conditions which there obtained. Believing that anything said on the subject by so eminent a man as the ex-Speaker can not fail to be of interest, a portion of his letter is here copied:

"I had an opportunity last summer, while on a visit to Mexico, to investigate this matter to some extent, and became satisfied that the situation on that part of the river to which your bill relates was such as to demand the immediate and careful attention of both countries. The diversion of the water of the river in New Mexico and Colorado for irrigation purposes has practically destroyed, during a large part of the year, a very considerable section of it flowing between the two countries, and thus deprived the people on both banks of the use of the stream for any purpose whatever. Besides this the numerous changes that occur in the channel render it difficult, if not impossible, to determine precisely where the boundary line between the two countries is located. This is a source of constant irritation, and unless some remedy can be devised may ultimately produce serious disagreement between the two Governments.

"The subject is an international one in both its aspects. Whether the people of Mexico can be lawfully deprived of the waters of the Rio Grande as they would, if not diverted, naturally flow from that part of the stream within the United States, may be a disputed question; but there certainly is a moral obligation upon our part to co-operate with the Government of that country in such measures as may be necessary to prevent injury in the future. Of course the question of boundary is one which equally concerns both Governments and must be settled, if at all, by their joint action.

"As your bill proposes only to open negotiations upon the subject and leaves final action to be taken hereafter when the results of the conference have been communicated, I think it ought to pass."

The preliminary investigation heretofore made by Major Mills and Mr. Garfias, representing both countries, leads to the conclusion and has demonstrated, so far as their concurrent judgment is concerned, that it is possible, by the construction of the dam before described, to solve both the water and boundary problems. The proposed dam, it is affirmed, can be built upon solid bed-rock abutting on the solid-rock walls on the bluffs of the Pass, with a length of about 450 feet. It can be constructed upon the approved principles of modern masonry dams. The plan used in the preliminary survey was from the profile recommended by Mr. Alphonse Fteley for adoption in the building of the great Quaker Bridge Dam in the Croton River, New York, designed to be 270 feet high and 1,350 feet long, and is "Practical profile No. 2" of Wegman's Design and Construction of Masonry Dams, which is understood to be the best and latest authority on that subject.

It gives a historical description of some forty of the principal dams constructed throughout the world in the last three hundred years. It describes the Almanza dam in the province of Albacete, Spain, which has successfully impounded water for three centuries. This is 67 feet high and 22 feet long. Another is the Alicante dam, also in Spain, which is 134 feet high and 190 feet long, which has had a safe and successful existence for about the same length of time. Most of the other dams described in this work are on a grander scale, but of more recent construction. The opinion seems to be sustained that masonry dams, if properly constructed, can be rendered absolutely safe and permanent.

The proposed reservoir or lake, it is maintained, can be supplied with a "by-wash" or "waste-weir," 200 feet wide by 5 feet deep—that is, with its crest 5 feet below the crest of the dam—and through and over one of the solid rock walls or banks of the river, having an easy outward slope for the passage of the waste waters in their descent to the channel of the river below, avoiding the shock or tremor of a perpendicular fall, injurious to masonry work. It is estimated that such a sized weir will pass all the waters in excess of the storage capacity between its crest and that of the dam proper possible to come from any extended flood in the river.

To maintain a constant and uniform channel of the river below, when the surface of the lake may be below the crest of the by-wash, it is stated that six 48-inch cast-iron pipes may be placed through the masonry of the dam near its base, three on each side of the river, and that each of these pipes can be provided with valve gates, so arranged that one person can easily adjust one or all of them, to permit just the desired amount of water to pass through them from the lake. By this means it is claimed that there can be maintained a small stream of clear water, unburdened by silt, equal to the mean annual flow constantly each day in the year, the bed and channel of which could be permanently directed and controlled in such a manner as to fix and determine a boundary line of a living and permanent stream between the two countries for 200 miles below El Paso to the point where a sufficient water supply is afforded by confluents of the Rio Grande.

It is not intended in this report to discuss the scientific details of the proposition, but simply to submit a general and substantial statement. It may be said, however, that no essential feature of the project was overlooked or left unconsidered by the parties who made the preliminary investigation. The amount of silt and its effects on the reservoir, the liability to evaporation, the extent of percolation, the structural security of the dam, and all cognate questions were made subjects of careful and intelligent inquiry. Connected necessarily with the measure for the rectification and establishment of the boundary line is the benefit to be afforded to our own and the Mexican people in the use of the waters to be stored for the purpose of irrigation, and the restoration, as far as the same could be accomplished, of those ancient and valuable rights of which they are being deprived by reason of the facts mentioned.

It is believed, from statements made by prominent Mexican citizens and the profound interest known to be felt and taken by them in this matter, that such a movement as is here proposed on our part will not only receive their grateful acknowledgment and cordial approval, but that it will be earnestly indorsed by the authorities of their Government, and that they will readily be disposed to participate in the expense involved, should the negotiations contemplated result in any practical execution.

Whatever project may be finally considered the proper one for the settlement of the troubles described, whether the plan suggested shall ultimately be adopted, the bill reported will open the way for a thorough international conference and comprehensive consultation concerning the whole matter, the results of which can not be in any sense injurious, but on the contrary give promise of some satisfactory adjustment of difficulties and complications manifestly serious and worthy of earnest consideration. To avoid greater length in this report, a further discussion of the bill is omitted, as it is believed that with the explanations already made a simple inspection of its provisions will enable its scope and purpose to be fully understood. It is accordingly here subjoined.

A bill concerning the irrigation of arid lands in the valley of the Rio Grande River, the construction of a dam across said river at or near El Paso, Tex., for the storage of its waste waters, and for other purposes.

Whereas the Rio Grande River is the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; and

Whereas, by means of irrigating ditches and canals taking the water from said river, and other causes, the usual supply of water therefrom has been exhausted before it reaches the point where it divides the United States of America from the Republic of Mexico, thereby rendering the lands in its valley arid and unproductive, to the great detriment of the citizens of the two countries who live along its course; and

Whereas in former years annual floods in said river have been such as to change the channel thereof, producing serious avulsions, and oftentimes and in many places leaving large tracts of land belonging to the people of the United States on the Mexican side of the river and Mexican lands on the American side, thus producing a confusion of boundary, a disturbance of private and public titles to lands, as well as provoking conflicts of jurisdiction between the two Governments, offering facilities for smuggling, promoting the evasion and preventing the collection of revenues by the respective countries; and

Whereas these conditions are a standing menace to the harmony and prosperity of the citizens of said countries and the amicable and orderly administration of their respective Governments: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to negotiate with the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico, to the end that these conditions may be improved and the proper correctives applied.

SEC. 2. That he is further empowered to negotiate in the premises for the construction of an international dam across the Rio Grande River in the vicinity of El Paso, Tex., at such points as may be determined upon by competent engineers, to be appointed for that purpose by the respective Governments, with the object of storing the waste waters of said river during the torrential flow thereof, and affording a permanent reservoir for the necessary water supply of the citizens of the two countries who reside in the immediate valley below, having in view the proper definition and protection of their respective rights to the use thereof for irrigation and other purposes, as well as the maintenance of a uniform and steady flow of water in the channel of the stream below said dam and the direction of its current in such a manner as to insure permanency of the channel in said river as far as the same may be done.

SEC. 3. That he is further empowered to negotiate for the creation of a joint international commission, to consist of not exceeding three persons on the part of each Government, whose duty it shall be to adjust and determine the respective water rights of the citizens of the two countries in and to said reservoir, to mark and define the correct bed or channel of said river, to hear and investigate conflicting claims as to titles to land growing out of the avulsions aforesaid, and report their action and finding thereon to their respective Governments. He may also negotiate concerning any additional authority of said commission touching other matters of an international character between the two countries, the length of its existence, and further definition of its duties.

SEC. 4. That the President is requested to communicate to Congress the result of said negotiations, together with his recommendation thereon, at the earliest practicable opportunity.

Mr. LANHAM. Under date of March 8, 1890, in a letter to me relating to this report, the Secretary of the Interior says, among other things:

I have read the report with great interest. The subject is most important, and at the present time demands the earnest consideration of Congress.

I concur in the general purport of the report and think that it has fully covered the subject and presented all that is necessary to be said in support of the bill.

The Secretary of State, under date March 12, 1890, says:

* * * The matter is important, and the results would seem to promise benefit to the agricultural interests in those regions no less valuable to Mexico than to us. Much advantage, too, is discernible in the opportunity which such an engineering work would give for regulating the flow of the river in torrential seasons through the unstable channels below the rocky gorge at El Paso, and thus doing away with the questions involved in the construction of wing-dams and revetments on either bank for the protection of the river front or as feeders for local irrigation. Disputes in such cases are constantly liable to arise, and, as you are aware, a pending convention looks to the establishment of an international commission to decide them.

It is very desirable that an international dam, such as your report contemplates, should be controlled, and the water supply dispensed, for the equal benefit of the inhabitants on either side, and not through the interested management of a local corporation. It is probable that should the proposal take more definite shape any successful negotiation with Mexico would turn upon the practical guaranties for a fair distribution of water and open enjoyment of water rights by Mexicans and Americans alike under international supervision, by a mixed commission or otherwise, on behalf of the respective Governments, as proposed in section 3 of the bill which accompanies your report.

CLAIM OF SCHUYLKILL COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. REILLY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be now considered by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5601) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of the county of Schuylkill, in the State of Pennsylvania, for money advanced by it under allotments made by soldiers from said county during the late rebellion, by virtue of section 12 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," approved July 22, 1861.

The bill having been read at length,

The SPEAKER said: Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REILLY. I hope the gentleman will allow this bill to pass. It is a unanimous report, and there has been a favorable report on several previous occasions.

Mr. KILGORE. I can not withdraw the objection.

Mr. REILLY. Is this the highest duty the gentleman can perform here—to make objection to meritorious bills? It is a very capacious objection, I think.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at eight minutes past 11 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

BRIDGE ACROSS OCONEE RIVER, GEORGIA.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I call up the bill (H. R. 5729) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Oconee River in the State of Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Wrightsville and Tennville Railroad Company, an organization incorporated under the laws of the State of Georgia, its successors and assigns, and such other person or persons as may be associated with it to construct and maintain a bridge over the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War a design and drawings of said bridge, for his examination and approval, and a map of its location, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and in all things shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and until said plan and location of said bridge are approved by the Secretary of War said bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of the work of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and they shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads of the United States. And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for said postal telegraph purposes.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, before the reading of the amendment reported by the committee I ask unanimous consent to make a verbal correction in the fourth line of section 1. The name "Tennville" should be "Tennille."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that correction will be made. There was no objection.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the bridge shall be so constructed by draw-pan or otherwise that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all vessels and other water craft navigating said river. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, the design and drawings of the bridge, piers, and approaches, and a map of the location, giving for the space of at least 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, and the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of other bridge or bridges, wharves, landings, or ferries, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built.

and after such approval by the Secretary of War the approved plans and designs for the bridge shall not be deviated from or aided to, either during the construction or after the completion of the bridge, until the proposed change shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War and received his approval; and the said bridge shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said bridge; and if said bridge be built with a draw said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, and the said company or corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset until sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe; and, if at any time the navigation of said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the bridge authorized by this act to be constructed, the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require said company to alter and change the said bridge, at its own expense, in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment; and if, upon reasonable notice to said company to make such change or improvements, the said company fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have authority to make the same, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited, and Congress shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the river: Provided, also, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt this bridge from the operations of the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT FOREST CITY, S. DAK.

Mr. BAKER. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce I call up the bill (H. R. 7164) to amend and continue in force "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City and Watertown Railway Company," approved August 6, 1898.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge authorized by the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City and Watertown Railway Company," approved August 6, 1898, as provided for in section 7 thereof, be, and it is hereby, extended two years from the date of the passage of this act.

Sec. 2. That wherever in said act the term "Territory of Dakota" is used it shall be held to mean and shall read "State of South Dakota."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following as a new section:

Sec. 3. That so much of said act as authorizes the said bridge to be built as a draw-bridge be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and any bridge constructed under the authority granted by said act shall be built as a high bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREE BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. By direction of the Committee on Commerce I call up the bill (S. 2026) authorizing the construction of a free bridge across the Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the county of Pulaski, State of Arkansas, to build a free foot, wagon, and street-railway bridge across the Arkansas River, at the city of Little Rock, in Arkansas; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river by reason of the construction of said bridge the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States having jurisdiction over that portion of the State of Arkansas where said bridge shall be located.

Sec. 2. That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river, at an accessible and navigable point, and with the spans of not less than 160 feet in length in the clear, on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than 250 feet; and said span shall not be less than 20 feet above high-water mark, measuring to the bottom cord of the bridge: And provided, also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge; and the bridge-piers shall be parallel to the current of the river.

Sec. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which no charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States.

Sec. 4. That the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph purposes across said bridge. And all telegraph and telephone companies shall have equal rights and privileges as to constructing their lines across said bridge.

Sec. 5. That the said county of Pulaski shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his approval, a plan with the necessary drawings of the said bridge conforming to the above requirements, and until the Secretary of War approve the plan and location of said bridge and notify the county court of the said county of the same in writing, the bridge shall not be built or commenced; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Sec. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the approval of this act.

Sec. 7. That Congress shall have power at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act, or any part thereof, if, in its judgment, the public interests so require, and any change in the construction of the bridge hereby authorized made necessary by the action of Congress, or the entire removal of the same, if required, shall be at the expense of the owners of said bridge or the parties controlling and using the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

BRAZOS TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, I call up the bill (S. 1873) authorizing the Brazos Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Brazos Terminal Railway Company, a corporation incorporated and organized under the laws of the State of Texas, and to its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas, between its mouth and a point 12 miles up said river. Said bridge shall be so constructed as to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of said corporation, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for reasonable rates of toll, to be fixed by said company and approved by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans giving a clear water way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of such width and height as the Secretary of War may, upon examination, prescribe; and the lowest part of the superstructure of the bridge shall be of such elevation above the plane of the highest flood known at the locality as the Secretary of War may deem advisable; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to and the bridge shall be at right angles to the current of the river: Provided, That the draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and other water craft, except when trains are passing over the draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the draw during or after the passage of trains; and said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights and other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and said corporation shall provide, at its own expense, such sheer-booms, guides, piers, and other devices as may be necessary to facilitate the safe passage of boats or other water craft through the spans of such bridge. The said bridge shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of said bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of 1 mile below and 1 mile above the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed and channel of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said location and plans of the bridge hereby authorized to be constructed are approved by the Secretary of War, the said bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of such bridge during the progress of construction thereof, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and in case of any litigation arising from the obstruction or alleged obstruction caused by said bridge to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction any portion of the bridge is located.

Sec. 3. That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for through railway passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile for their transmission over the railroads leading to said bridge; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

Sec. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

Sec. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, when ever Congress shall consider it necessary to the public interest, is hereby expressly reserved; and any alterations or changes that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act, or the entire removal of said bridge, if required by Congress, shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same at its own expense; and if said bridge shall not be commenced within one year and be finished within three years from the passage of this act the rights and privileges hereby granted as to such bridge shall be null and void.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In section 3, line 6, strike out the words "or for through railway passengers or freight."

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. How would the section read with that amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the provision as it would stand amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and the munitions of war of the United States passing over said bridge than the rate per mile for their transmission over the railroads leading to said bridge.

Mr. SWENEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that amendment ought to be adopted. It changes the bill from the usual form of bills of this character. The word "through" as incorporated in the bill is different from that sometimes employed in these bills, but it is not usual to permit without restriction the imposition of charges for the passage of freight and passenger over a railroad bridge.

Mr. CRAIN. The bill authorizes a terminal railway company to construct the bridge. It will not be more than 600 feet long, and to limit the charge on through passengers and freight to the rates that are collected on the road on land will not pay. This is not a bridge such as are provided for in the bills to which the gentleman refers, but it is intended as a terminal railway bridge. There will be a town near the mouth of the Brazos River, or as soon as deep water is obtained there.

Mr. SWENEY. Is it not a part of a line of railroad?

Mr. CRAIN. No, sir; there is no railroad there. There is not a house where this bridge is intended to be built. A private corporation is endeavoring to procure deep water at the mouth of the Brazos. If that attempt is successful the corporation contemplates establishing a town somewhere on the river, and this bill is intended to enable them to cross the river with a bridge if they see proper to do so.

Mr. SWENEY. With a railroad?

Mr. CRAIN. There may or may not be a railroad. There is nothing of that kind provided for in the act establishing the corporation.

Mr. SWENEY. If a railroad is to cross the bridge then I think the bill ought to conform to the provisions usually contained in bills passed for such cases, requiring that no higher rate shall be charged over the bridge than over other parts of the railroad line.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, I have stated the reasons why I think these words should be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWENEY].

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI.

Mr. SWENEY. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce I call up the bill (S. 1738) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Missouri in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and the county of Burt, in the State of Nebraska.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Iowa and Decatur Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, be and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a railroad bridge over the Missouri River from and through section numbered 7, in township numbered 83 north of range 46 west of the principal meridian, in the county of Monona, State of Iowa, and in and through the county of Burt, in the State of Nebraska.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be built as a high bridge, with unbroken and continuous spans, all spans over the waterway to have a clear channel way of not less than 300 feet and a clear head room of not less than 50 feet above high-water mark; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river, and the bridge itself at right angles thereto: Provided, That if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the passage of this act, and be completed within four years from the same date, the rights and privileges herein granted shall cease and be determined.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States and for passengers or freight passing over said bridge than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telephone and telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-line at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and, until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War, the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and, should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent and easily navigated channel for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge location, and for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other crafts safely through the draw and raft spans as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained, at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board; and the said structure shall be changed or removed at the cost and expense of the owners thereof as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law, when the public good shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 6. That said company or its successors may construct and maintain defensive and corrective works in or along said river above and below said bridge, for the protection of the same, and the approach thereto, or the improvement, correction, or control of the channel of said river.

SEC. 7. That in case the western end of said bridge shall abut upon the Omaha Indian reservation in the State of Nebraska the right to construct the same thereon and the approaches thereto, together with all structures proper for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge is hereby granted and confirmed: Provided, That compensation therefor shall first be made to the Indians holding in severalty or by allotment the lands upon or over which said approaches, tracks, or structures are erected, built, and maintained, to their satisfaction, or to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, or by proceeding for condemnation in the usual manner under the laws of the State of Nebraska.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WALKER], who desires to call up three bills.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE AND CUMBERLAND RIVERS.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce, I call up the bill (H. R. 380) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers," approved January 8, 1889.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of these bills be dispensed with. They are in the usual form in all respects, and the reading consumes time unnecessarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] asks unanimous consent that the reading of these bills be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think all bills ought to be read at least once.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act of Congress approved January 8, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "below Aurora," in section 1, and inserting in lieu thereof "from Birmingham, in Marshall County, Kentucky, to the," and in section 4, line 3, after the word "such" insert "reasonable," and in line 16, section 4, after the words "Secretary of War" insert "or conform to the existing laws of Congress concerning the building of such bridges across navigable streams;" and in section 6, line 3, strike out "two" and "three" and insert in lieu thereof "three" and "four."

The committee recommended an amendment in line 16, striking out "four" and inserting "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS AT OR NEAR PENDLETON, ARK.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri, also, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, called up the bill (S. 2323) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Pendleton, Desha County, Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the Arkansas and Gulf Railroad Company, a corporation organized, chartered, and duly perfected under and in full accordance with the statutes of the State of Arkansas, or its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Arkansas River, at a point on said river at or near Pendleton, Desha County, in the State of Arkansas, and to lay on and over said bridge a railroad track or tracks, for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall hereafter be constructed to the said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the builders and owners thereof, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals of all kinds, and for foot-passengers for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time, by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and the munitions of war, or other property of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation of the same over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States. Equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be constructed with a draw or pivot span, which shall be over the main channel of the river at an accessible navigable point, and the openings on each side of the pivot-pier shall be of such width as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and, as nearly as practicable, both of said openings shall be accessible at all stages of water; that the spans shall be of such height above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest point of the superstructure of said bridge as may be directed by the Secretary of War in the interests of navigation; that the piers and draw-rests of said bridge shall be built parallel with the current at that stage of the river which is most important for navigation, and the bridge itself at right angles thereto; and that no riprap or other outside protection for imperfect foundations be permitted to approach nearer than 4 feet to the surface of the water at its extreme low stage or otherwise to encroach upon the channel-ways provided for in this act: Provided, That said draw shall be opened by the company or persons owning said bridge upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats; and there shall be maintained, at the expense of the owners thereof, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and over the approaches to the same, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions which each shall perform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon hearing of the allegations of proofs of the parties.

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to the regulations for the security of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the owner or owners thereof shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-line at high or low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for the full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until such plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and, should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date thereof.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri, also, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, called up the bill (S. 2324) to authorize the building of a bridge across White River, Arkansas, by the Mississippi and Little Rock Railway Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the Mississippi and Little Rock Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, and maintain a bridge over the White River in sections 16 and 21, in township 1 south, range 3 west. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of the railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation, or its assigns, by which it may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, foot-passengers, and of all kinds of commerce, travel, or communication.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no other charges shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That said bridge may be constructed as a draw-bridge, with an opening over the center of the channel of such width as the Secretary of War shall determine, and which shall be at least 120 feet in the clear: Provided, also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, vessels, or other water craft, and in no case shall unnecessary delay occur; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and such sheer-booms or other structures as may be necessary to safely guide vessels, boats, rafts, or other water craft safely through said draw openings as shall be designated and required by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That said bridge shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the sounding, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built, and, should any changes be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be submitted to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains, engines, or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case the owner or owners of said bridge, and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use, fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties: Provided, That the provisions of section 2, in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge, shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum or sums to be paid to the owners of said bridge by such railroad companies for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act or to require any changes in such structure, or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, and the right to prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to toll and otherwise as may be deemed reasonable, are expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date hereof.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the several votes by which the three bills called up by him were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WRECKED OR DISABLED VESSELS.

Mr. BAKER. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7985) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada," approved June 19, 1878.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada," approved June 19, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the same will read as follows:

"That Canadian vessels and wrecking appurtenances may render aid and assistance to Canadian or other vessels and property wrecked, disabled, or in distress in the waters of the United States contiguous to the Dominion of Canada: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until proclamation by the President of the United States that the privilege of aiding American or other vessels and property wrecked, disabled, or in distress in Canadian waters contiguous to the United States has been extended by the Government of the Dominion of Canada to American vessels and wrecking appliances of all descriptions. This act shall be construed to apply to the Welland Canal, the canal and improvement of the waters between Lake Erie and Lake Huron, and to the waters of the St. Mary's River and Canal: And provided further, That this act shall cease to be in force from and after the date of the proclamation of the President of the United States to the effect that said reciprocal privilege has been withdrawn, revoked, or rendered inoperative by the said Government of the Dominion of Canada."

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask my colleague what the present state of the law is in respect to aid afforded to American vessels by Canadian wrecking tugs, and, on the Canadian side of the water, with respect to Canadian vessels by American wrecking tugs.

Mr. MASON. Under the present law neither the Canadian nor the American wrecking tugs can assist vessels of the other nationality.

Mr. ADAMS. They can not operate at all?

Mr. MASON. We can not operate on Canadian vessels in our waters, if they are in distress, nor can Canadian wrecking boats operate on American vessels in distress in Canadian waters.

The present bill provides that we may now assist them, provided the Canadian Government passes a similar legislative act to this; and the law now proposed goes into force and effect upon a proclamation by the President after a similar bill shall have been passed by the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. ADAMS. I noticed that, but I notice also that there is a restrictive provision in the act as to aid to Canadian vessels—

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I think I can explain this matter. A bill similar to this is pending and is about to become a law in the Canadian Parliament, and the object of the present bill is to make this reciprocal, for the mutual extending of aid to disabled vessels of either nationality.

Mr. ADAMS. But if this passes and the Canadian legislature passes a similar act, still it would be unlawful for Canadian tugs to help American vessels or for American tugs to help Canadian vessels under these circumstances.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. After the proclamation of the President has been issued, however, this becomes a mutual arrangement—

Mr. ADAMS. But the gentleman does not understand my point. Suppose that the President's proclamation shall issue, announcing that proper legislation has been had under the purview of this bill by the Canadian Parliament, then the bill becomes effective; but, after that, still it would be unlawful for a Canadian tug to help an American vessel or for an American tug to help a Canadian vessel in distress.

Mr. MASON. Oh, I should say not.

Mr. ADAMS. It so appears from the bill.

Mr. MASON. That is not the understanding of the committee nor of the author of the bill. The gentleman from Michigan, who introduced the bill, is in his seat.

Mr. BAKER. Let us have a vote and not consume any more time, as we are limited to-day. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HUDSON RIVER, N. Y.

Mr. BAKER. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3856) to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authorization is hereby given to Jordan L. Mott, John King McLanahan, James Andrews, Thomas F. Ryan, Garrett A. Hobart, W. A. Roebbing, Charles J. Canda, Edward F. C. Young, Henry Flad, Gustav Lindenthal, John H. Miller, Samuel Rea, William F. Shunk, Philip E. Chapin, and their associates, as a corporation as hereinafter provided, to locate, build, maintain, equip, and operate a bridge, proper approaches thereto and terminals, appurtenances, and works connected therewith, across the Hudson River in and between the city of New York, in the State of New York, and the State of New Jersey, and to lay tracks thereon for the connection of the railroads on either side of said river, in order to facilitate interstate commerce in the transportation of persons and property, and for postal, military, and other purposes: Provided, That said bridge shall have not less than six railroad tracks and shall be constructed with a single span over the entire river between the established pier lines in either State, and at an elevation above the river to be determined by the Secretary of War as hereinafter provided, and that no pier or other obstruction to navigation shall be constructed in the river between said pier lines, and that the bridge shall be completed within seven years after the passage of this act; but no time, if any, unavoidably consumed by the pendency of legal proceedings shall be deemed a part of any period of time limited in this act.

SEC. 2. That the plans for said bridge shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and the structure shall be built subject to such regulation for the security of navigation as he may prescribe. Before the construction of said bridge shall be begun, a design and plan thereof must be submitted to the Secretary of War with a map of its location, showing, for the distance of one-half mile above and below, the existing bulkhead, pier, and shore lines, and any existing piers, docks, and basins, and also a profile of the bottom of the river on the center line of said bridge, with such other information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and before he approve the plans for said bridge the Secretary of War may order such changes in the same relative to the clear height of the superstructure above ordinary high water as may be necessary or reasonable for the security of navigation on said river; and any subsequent changes in the plans shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the bridge, with its approaches and railroad thereover, constructed under the provisions of this act shall be a lawful structure and a military and post road, but no toll charges shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails of the United States or for the right of way for United States postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 4. That, for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, the persons named in the first section hereof, and their associates, are hereby constituted and created a body corporate in law, to be known as the North River Bridge Company, and by that name, style, and title shall have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend, in all courts of law and equity, of record, and otherwise; may make and have a common seal, and shall have and possess all the rights, powers, franchises, and privileges incident to or usually possessed by such companies. It may receive, purchase, and also acquire by lawful appropriation and condemnation upon making proper compensation therefor, to be ascertained according to the laws of the State within which the same is located, real and personal property and rights of property, and may mortgage, encumber, charge, pledge, grant, lease, sell, assign, and convey the same. And to aid in the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto, and railroad terminals, appurtenances, and works connected therewith, and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said North River Bridge Company is hereby authorized to issue its bonds and secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, including its franchise to be a corporation. And, generally and specially, for the fully carrying out of the purpose and intentions of this act, the said North River Bridge Company, and its successors, shall have and possess all such rights and powers to enter upon lands, and for the purchase, acquisition, condemnation, appropriation, occupation, possession, and use of real estate and other property, and for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge, with its approaches, terminals, and appurtenances, as are possessed by railroad or bridge companies in the States of New York and New Jersey, respectively. That all persons, railroad and telegraph companies, respectively, desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over and the use of the same and the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation, to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as hereinafter determined, and to be paid to the North River Bridge Company, which is hereby duly empowered to collect the same. And sufficient trackage and terminal facilities shall be provided for all railroads desiring to use said bridge and appurtenances. In case any litigation arises out of the construction, use, or operation of said bridge or approaches thereto and railroad thereon, or for the condemnation or the appropriation of property in connection therewith under this act, the use so arising may be heard and decided before the circuit court of the United States for the judicial district in which the bridge or one of the approaches is located. Applications for condemnation or appropriation of property shall be made in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such property is situated, upon the petition of said company, and the hearing and trial of all other proceedings thereon shall conform as nearly as may be to the practice in the courts of the State in which such district is situated, in the case of condemnation or appropriation of property for railroads.

SEC. 5. That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to require the said North River Bridge Company, in addition to such reports as it may lawfully require of railroad companies, a statement, certified to by the president of said North River Bridge Company, of the actual cash expenditure for all property acquired and for the cost of construction of all structures and appurtenances, for equipment and for other proper and legitimate expenses incurred under this act; said statement shall be made on the completion of all the work and before the said North River Bridge Company shall collect tolls from the connecting railroad companies. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall be authorized to employ, at the expense of said North River Bridge Company, such expert accountants as it may appoint and direct to examine the accounts of said North River Bridge Company for the purpose of verifying the said actual cash expenditures under this act. And the said ascertained cash expenditures shall form the basis on which the Interstate Commerce Commission shall approve the toll charges to be paid by the connecting railroad companies to said North River Bridge Company for the use of said bridge, approaches, tracks, and terminals, in such manner that whenever the net revenue derived from said toll charges after paying all expenses for the proper and safe operation and maintenance of its property, and after paying all taxes, and after deducting 5 per cent. of the gross revenue for the sinking fund, to be applied to the liquidation of any indebtedness, shall exceed 10 per cent. on the above-specified cash expenditure, the Interstate Commerce Commission may order a reduction of toll charges: Provided, That said reduction shall not be ordered oftener than once in three years.

SEC. 6. That the government and direction of said company shall be vested in a board of seven directors, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are duly elected and qualified. The said directors, five of whom shall be a quorum, shall elect one of their number president; they shall also appoint a secretary and treasurer. The directors of said company shall have power to make such prudential by-laws as they shall deem proper for the management and disposition of the stock, property, and business affairs of said company, not contrary to the laws of the United States, and prescribing the duties of officers, artificers, and servants that may be employed, for filling vacancies, and for carrying on all business within the objects and purposes of said company. There shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be held at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the by-laws may prescribe; and such directors shall annually make a report of their doings and of the business of the company to the stockholders, a copy of which, sworn to and signed by the president of the company, shall be transmitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Failure to elect directors on the day fixed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be held on any day appointed thereafter by the directors, first giving thirty days' notice thereof in manner provided in said by-laws. The capital stock of said company shall consist of not less than 10,000 shares of $100 each, which shall in all respects be deemed personal property, and shall be transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company shall provide; but no share shall be transferable until all calls thereon shall have been fully paid in, and it shall not be lawful for said company to use any of its funds in the purchase of any stock in its own or any other corporation. The amount of such capital stock may be increased upon the vote of two-thirds of such stock of said company at any time out of meeting.

SEC. 7. That the said North River Bridge Company shall maintain on the bridge, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or signals as the United States Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States Government in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than the payment of tolls over said bridge and approaches for troops and munitions of war, for which no higher charge per mile shall be made than the rate paid to railroads connecting with said bridge; but Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act as the contingencies of commerce or the public good may require, and said company shall further be subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce laws and any amendments and supplements thereof.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment in the nature of a substitute:

That authorization is hereby given to Jordan L. Mott, John King McLanahan, James Andrews, Thomas F. Ryan, Garrett A. Hobart, F. W. Roebbing, Charles J. Canda, Edward F. C. Young, Henry Flad, Gustav Lindenthal, A. G. Dickinson, John H. Miller, William Brookfield, Samuel Rea, William F. Shunk, Philip E. Chapin, and their associates, as a corporation as hereinafter provided, to locate, build, maintain, equip, and operate a bridge, proper approaches thereto, and terminals, appurtenances, and works connected therewith, across the Hudson River in and between the city of New York, in the State of New York and the State of New Jersey, and to lay tracks thereon for the connection of the railroads on either side of said river, in order to facilitate interstate commerce in the transportation of persons and property, and for vehicle, pedestrian, postal, military, and other purposes: Provided, That said bridge shall have not less than six railroad tracks, with a capacity for four additional tracks for future enlargement, and shall be constructed with a single span over the entire river between the towers, located between the shore and the established pier-head lines in either State, and at an elevation above the river not less than that of the existing Brooklyn suspension bridge over the East River, and which elevation may be increased by the Secretary of War as hereinafter provided, and that no pier or other obstruction to navigation, either of a temporary or permanent character, shall be constructed in the river between said towers.

SEC. 2. That the construction of said bridge shall be commenced within three years after the passage of this act, and shall be completed within ten years after the commencement of construction. But that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to extend the time for the commencement of construction for two additional years upon cause shown by the company, and provided that the Secretary of War shall deem such cause sufficient and satisfactory; and that if the company fail to commence the construction of said bridge within the time so extended this act shall be null and void. And the company, at least three months previous to commencing the erection of said bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War a plan of the bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge, and for the distance of one-half of a mile above and below the site, with such other information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject. And the Secretary of War may, upon receiving said plans and map and other information, order a hearing before a board of engineers, appointed by him for taking testimony of persons interested in railroads and navigation, relative to the clear height of the superstructure above ordinary high water. Such clear height shall not be less than that named in section 1 of this act, and the Secretary of War may thereupon order such additional clear height as he shall deem necessary for the security of navigation. And he is hereby authorized and directed, upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and at said locality will conform to the conditions of this act, to notify the said company that he approves the plans therefor; whereupon said company may proceed to the erection of said bridge. But until the Secretary of War approve the plan and location of said bridge the erection of the same shall not be commenced; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall likewise be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the bridge, with its approaches and railroad thereover, constructed under the provisions of this act, shall be a lawful structure, and a military and post road, but no toll charges shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails of the United States or for the right of way for United States postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act the persons named in the first section hereof and their associates are hereby constituted and created a body corporate in law, to be known as the North River Bridge Company, and by that name, style, and title shall have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend, in all courts of law and equity, of record and otherwise; may make and have a common seal, and shall have and possess all the rights, powers, franchises, and privileges incident to or usually possessed by such companies. It may receive, purchase, and also acquire by lawful appropriation and condemnation, upon making proper compensation therefor, to be ascertained according to the laws of the State within which the same is located, real and personal property and rights of property, and may mortgage, encumber, charge, pledge, grant, lease, sell, assign, and convey the same. And, to aid in the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto, and railroad terminals, appurtenances, and works connected therewith, and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said North River Bridge Company is hereby authorized to issue its bonds and secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, and its franchise to be a corporation. And, generally and specially, for the fully carrying out of the purposes and intentions of this act, the said North River Bridge Company and its successors shall have and possess all such rights and powers to enter upon lands, and for the purchase, acquisition, condemnation, appropriation, occupation, possession, and use of real estate and other property, and for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge, with its approaches, terminals, and appurtenances, as are possessed by railroad or bridge companies in the States of New York and New Jersey, respectively. That all persons, railroad and telegraph companies, respectively, desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over and the use of the same, and the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation, to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission as hereinafter determined, and to be paid to the North River Bridge Company, which is hereby duly empowered to collect the same. And sufficient trackage and terminal facilities shall be provided for all railroads desiring to use said bridge and approaches. In case any litigation arises out of the construction, use, or operation of said bridge or approaches thereto and railroad thereon or for the condemnation or the appropriation of property in connection therewith under this act, the cause so arising shall be heard and tried before the circuit court of the United States for the judicial district in which the bridge or one of the approaches is located. Applications for condemnation or appropriation of property shall be made in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such property is situated upon the petition of said company, and the hearing and trial of all other proceedings thereon shall conform as nearly as may be to the practice in the courts of the State in which such district is situated in the case of condemnation or appropriation of property for railroads.

SEC. 5. That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to require the said North River Bridge Company, in addition to such reports as it may lawfully require of railroad companies, a statement, certified to by the president of said North River Bridge Company, of the actual cash expenditure for all property acquired and for the cost of construction of all structures and appurtenances, for equipment, and for other proper and legitimate expenses incurred under this act; said statement shall be made on the completion of all the work and before the said North River Bridge Company shall collect tolls from the connecting railroad companies. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall be authorized to employ, at the expense of said North River Bridge Company, such expert accountants as it may appoint and direct to examine the accounts of said North River Bridge Company for the purpose of verifying the said actual cash expenditures under this act. And the said ascertained cash expenditures shall form the basis on which the Interstate Commerce Commission shall approve the toll charges to be paid by the connecting railroad companies to said North River Bridge Company for the use of said bridge, approaches, tracks, and terminals in such manner that whenever the net revenue derived from said toll charges, after paying all expenses for the proper and safe operation and maintenance of its property, and after paying all taxes, and after deducting 5 per cent. of the gross revenue for the sinking fund, to be applied to the liquidation of any indebtedness, shall exceed 10 per cent. on the above specified cash expenditure, the Interstate Commerce Commission may order a reduction of toll charges: Provided, That said reduction shall not be ordered oftener than once in three years: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as establishing contract rights between the United States and said North River Bridge Company as to the rate of toll authorized to be collected, but this section shall be subject to amendment or repeal as is provided may be in relation to every other section of this act.

SEC. 6. That the government and direction of said company shall be vested in a board of seven directors, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are duly elected and qualified. The said directors, five of whom shall be a quorum, shall elect one of their number president; they shall also appoint a secretary and treasurer. The directors of said company shall have power to make such prudential by-laws as they shall deem proper for the management and disposition of the stock, property, and business affairs of said company, not contrary to the laws of the United States, and prescribing the duties of officers, artificers, and servants that may be employed, for filling vacancies, and for carrying on all business within the objects and purposes of said company. There shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be held at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the by-laws may prescribe; and such directors shall annually make a report of their doings and of the business of the company to the stockholders, a copy of which, sworn to and signed by the president of the company, shall be transmitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Failure to elect directors on the day fixed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be held on any day appointed thereafter by the directors, first giving thirty days' notice thereof in manner provided in said by-laws. The capital stock of said company shall consist of not less than ten thousand shares of $100 each, which shall in all respects be deemed personal property, and shall be transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company shall provide; but no share shall be transferable until all calls thereon shall have been fully paid in, and it shall not be lawful for said company to use any of its funds in the purchase of any stock in its own or any other corporation. The amount of such capital stock may be increased upon the vote of two-thirds of such stock of said company at any time outstanding.

SEC. 7. That the real and personal property of the company shall be subject to taxation for State, county, and municipal purposes in the State where the same is located, but at no higher rate than other real and personal property in the State.

SEC. 8. That the said North River Bridge Company shall maintain on the bridge, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or signals as the United States Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States Government in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than the payment of tolls over said bridge and approaches for troops and munitions of war, for which no higher charge per mile shall be made than the rate paid to railroads connecting with said bridge; but Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act as the contingencies of commerce or the public good may require, and said company shall further be subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce laws and any amendments and supplements thereof.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to incorporate the North River Bridge Company and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road."

THE SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that in the seventh line of the printed bill, on page 18, the word "reserves" is printed "reverses."

MR. BAKER. I ask that the proper correction be made.

THE SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended as recommended by the committee.

MR. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the bill (S. 1332) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs, having been returned from the President, in compliance with the request of the two Houses, the vote on said bill had been reconsidered, and the Senate had passed the same, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

COLORADO SPRINGS WATER RESERVOIR.

THE SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House the bill just received from the Senate, as the amendments are merely verbal.

The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, strike out "and" and insert "of;" also, in the same line, strike out "and" where it occurs the second time and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the."

The amendments were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

MR. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, this day being set apart under the special order for the consideration of the Idaho bill, I desire now to proceed with the consideration of that measure.

MR. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate resolution No. 46, which is on the Speaker's table, for immediate consideration.

MR. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object, unless the same measure of consideration can be given to this proposition as it would be entitled to receive in the Committee of the Whole; that is, that it shall be open for discussion and amendment.

MR. MANSUR. I shall feel compelled to object if this is to consume any time.

MR. BOUTELLE. This is a very important matter. I will state to the House that it relates to the removal of a powder magazine in New York Harbor, which has been reported as dangerous to life and property; and both the Navy and the Treasury Departments are desirous that the resolution shall be passed. This has already passed the Senate and is unanimously recommended by the Naval Committee and recommended by the Committee on Immigration; and I trust that we may be able to dispose of it at this time. It is most important that it should be considered now.

MR. COVERT. If the joint resolution went no further than stated by the gentleman from Maine, there would be absolutely no objection on my part; but unfortunately it is complex in its character and goes a great deal further than suggested by the gentleman. It not only provides for the removal of the magazine, as suggested by the gentleman from Maine, but it seeks to establish a site for the landing of immigrants as well. It is the latter portion of it to which I object.

MR. BOUTELLE. On that point, I will state that it is even more important than the other consideration, because the lease of the present immigrant station in the city of New York expires on the 18th of this month and it is absolutely necessary that provision be made for the establishment of an immigrant station on the island to be vacated by this magazine.

MR. MANSUR. I demand the regular order.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] demands the regular order.

MR. BOUTELLE. Very well; I hope it will be understood by the House and the country how this matter is obstructed.

ADMISSION OF IDAHO.

Mr. SPRINGER (during the reading of the bill). I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill, as it is to come out of the time allotted for debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DORSEY. Before opening debate I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of section 3 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 3 the following: "The law of the Territory of Idaho for the registration of voters shall apply to the first election of State, district, and other officers held after the admission of the State of Idaho. The county and precinct officers elected at the first election held after the admission of the State of Idaho shall assume the duties of their respective offices on the second Monday of January, 1891."

Mr. DORSEY. The minority of the committee make no objection to this amendment, and I move its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there are several verbal amendments which can be adopted.

Mr. DORSEY. There are several verbal amendments that can be adopted now.

In line 13 of section 16, after the word "courts," insert the following words: "in the said district."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska to section 4. The proviso that was in the four-States bill, and which was agreed to be put in here, was not reported, the provision in regard to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for permanent reservations.

Mr. DORSEY. The Delegate from the Territory [Mr. DUBOIS] will offer an amendment to cover that before the final vote is taken on the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. All right.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the claims of the Territory of Idaho for admission to statehood, I shall not attempt to discuss the policy that should be pursued by Congress touching the admission of new States. In the great political contest waged in 1888 this question was freely discussed and was decided by the American people. In the future no political party, no man who aspires to leadership in either party, will dare oppose the admission to statehood of a Territory that is shown to possess the constitutional requirements. The Constitution provides that "New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union." Hereafter we will interpret that clause so as to read: "New States shall be admitted by the Congress into this Union whenever the constitutional requirements are complied with."

We all know the position taken by the people upon this subject, and, as representatives of the people sent to this Chamber to voice their will, we have in this case a very simple duty to perform; that is, we shall investigate the claims of the Territory of Idaho, and if we find that this Territory has a sufficient population, that its material resources are sufficient, and that her people are intelligent and progressive and are attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, then our votes on the roll-call for the admission of Idaho must be in the affirmative. We should not consider to which one of the great political parties a majority of the citizens of a Territory may belong. Every case should be tried upon its merits, and if the showing is satisfactory its admission should be speedy.

Let us apply the tests to Idaho. Idaho was created a Territory by act of Congress March 3, 1863, and was formed from parts of the Territories of Dakota, Nebraska, and Washington. By the creation of the Territories of Montana and Wyoming Idaho was reduced to its present size of 86,294 square miles, extending from the British Possessions on the north to Utah and Nevada on the south, and from Montana and Wyoming on the east to Oregon and Washington on the west, having a length from north to south of 410 miles and a width from east to west varying from about 50 miles on the line of the British Possessions on the north to 306 miles on its southern boundary line. This Territory contains in round numbers 55,000,000 acres, 16,000,000 acres of which are agricultural, 10,000,000 acres forests, 20,000,000 acres grazing and mineral lands, 8,000,000 acres rough and mountainous, and 1,200,000 acres in lakes and rivers.

Idaho has a greater area than New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire combined, and being on the west side of the Rocky Mountains, the warm currents from the Pacific sweep over the Territory and have a most beneficial effect on the arable and grazing belts. The average mean temperature is about 51°. Idaho is well supplied with water, and in fact better than any of the States or Territories west of the Missouri River. The great Snake River, which in volume of water is about equal to the Ohio, traverses the Territory from east to west. The Salmon River courses through the Territory for over 500 miles; Clarke's Fork, Spokane, Boise, Payette, Weiser, Big and Little Wood Rivers, Clearwater, Coeur d'Alene, St. Joseph, Bear River, and other large streams, into which hundreds of tributaries empty, also flow through the Territory.

Of the 16,000,000 acres of agricultural lands in the Territory but a small portion has been surveyed. About 4,500,000 acres have been filed upon under the several land acts of Congress.

The deep soil in the valleys and on the plateaus in the eastern and southern counties is composed of decayed vegetable matter mixed with sufficient mineral and disintegrated rock to give warmth and great productivity. In the northern counties a dark loam of great depth prevails. This section of Idaho does not require irrigation and is in itself an empire.

The yield of all kinds of cereals and vegetables is most gratifying, wheat ranging from 30 to 50 bushels, potatoes from 250 to 500 bushels, oats from 50 to 75 bushels per acre, and other cereals and vegetables in the same proportion. The agricultural report for the Territory for 1889, compiled after the most careful inquiry and investigation by Governor Shoup, shows the following as the amount of grain raised in 1889:

Wheat.....	bushels.....	4,600,000
Oats.....	do.....	2,014,800
Barley.....	do.....	1,150,400
Corn.....	do.....	47,400
Rye.....	do.....	64,900
Flaxseed.....	do.....	555,000
Grass-seed.....	do.....	17,350
Potatoes.....	do.....	1,085,900
Other vegetables.....	do.....	838,350
Apples.....	do.....	277,000
Pears.....	do.....	29,850
Peaches.....	do.....	34,850
Plums and prunes.....	do.....	34,350
Hay.....	tons.....	424,740
Grapes.....	boxes.....	18,200
Berries.....	baskets.....	76,600

The fruits and berries raised in the Territory are not excelled in any country. The sage-brush lands of Idaho are more easily turned into fruit farms and with as little expense as in any other State. For the past ten or twelve years from 25,000 to 40,000 fruit trees have been set out annually. Their growth is rapid, and trees bear abundantly when quite young, especially so in all valleys and plateaus not exceeding 3,500 feet above tide water. Trees mature and bear fruit at the altitude of 4,500 feet, but do not produce so abundantly as in the lower valleys.

Shorn of all other resources, the agricultural lands of Idaho alone are sufficient to support a large population and build up a great State.

Stock-raising is one of the great industries of the Territory. On the large area of grazing lands there are now 385,896 cattle of all grades, 123,840 horses, 2,480 mules, and 447,924 sheep.

The 10,000,000 acres of forest land will be a source of large revenue to Idaho for hundreds of years and will give employment to a large population.

I desire to call the particular attention of the House to the wonderful productions of the mines of Idaho.

The mines of the Territory have produced to date $157,720,962.84, the production of last year, 1889, being the largest in the history of the Territory, amounting to the princely sum of $17,344,600, namely:

Gold.....	$3,204,500
Silver.....	7,564,500
Lead.....	6,490,000
Copper.....	85,900

Idaho is rapidly advancing to the front as a bullion-producing State, and with the present rate of increase will soon be the greatest bullion-producing State in the Union. The Territory has developed several of the largest mines on the globe, the production of which will be largely increased during the year 1890. Besides the bullion-producing mines, Idaho also has an abundance of iron, salt, sulphur, marble, sandstone, granite, limestone, and mica, with tin and cinnabar in limited quantities. Coal is known to exist in nearly every county in the Territory, but is not sufficiently developed to determine its extent.

As to population, I submit a table showing the number of inhabitants of the Territory for the different years from 1880 to 1889. These estimates are based upon the census taken of the school children. Under the law the enumeration of children of school age is taken annually.

Years.	Children of school age.	Rates.	Total population.
1881.....	6,698	4.87	32,619
1882.....	8,193	4.87	39,999
1883.....	9,650	4.87	46,995
1884.....	10,936	4.87	53,258
1885.....	13,140	4.87	63,991
1886.....	15,399	4.87	74,993
1887.....	17,372	4.87	84,601
1888.....	19,994	4.87	97,370
1889.....	24,071	4.87	117,225

I also desire to call particular attention to what has been done by this Territory to foster the public-school system.

The total number of schools in the Territory was, on the 21st day of August last, 434; total number of children of school age reported, 24,071. A large number of families live many miles from organized school districts and their children are not included in the above enrollment. Total receipts for school purposes (independent of private schools), $198,782; expenditures, $175,579; balance remaining in the school fund at the close of school year, $23,203.

The following gains appear in the report of the superintendent of public instruction for the Territory for the year 1889: Increase of children of school age, 4,077; schools, 69.

There is a compulsory school law in the Territory, and the greatest interest is taken by the people in educational matters. Substantial and commodious school-houses adorn and add to the attractions of every town and settlement. Besides the public schools there are several independent school districts, and many religious denominations have schools of their own. The estimated cost of buildings used for school purposes for public schools in the Territory is $344,500, an increase of $65,000 during the past year.

There are 109 church edifices in the Territory, valued at $220,500, with a membership of 11,137. I append a table showing the membership and number of church buildings of the different denominations. Idaho is not behind the Western States and Territories so far as public buildings are concerned:

Denominations.	Number of churches.	Value of churches.	Number of members.
Presbyterian.....	14	*$20,000	762
Baptist.....	16	15,500	375
Catholic.....	23	60,000	8,000
Episcopal.....	19	40,000	*500
Methodist.....	*23	*70,000	*1,000
Other denominations†.....	*15	*15,000	*500
Total.....	109	220,500	11,137

* Estimated.

† In addition to the above, the Congregationalists, Christians, and other denominations not enumerated have ministers and places of worship.

The above does not include the adherents to the Mormon faith.

The Territory has constructed and furnished, unaided by the General Government, a capitol building, at a cost of over $100,000. The capitol is a most substantial building, the basement being solid masonry, while the main structure is of the best quality of brick and is heated by the latest improved heating apparatus. This fine structure contains spacious and elegantly furnished rooms on the first floor for governor, surveyor-general, Territorial secretary, comptroller, superintendent of public instruction, and United States attorney, library, and armory. On the second floor are the council chamber, representatives' hall, the supreme court-room, the judges' chamber, and various committee-rooms. The third floor is connected with the galleries, and also has book and committee rooms.

The Territory has in course of construction, at Moscow, in Latah County, a State university. This fine structure, when completed, will cost $75,000. The Territory appropriated from the general fund $15,000 for the building, and an annual Territorial tax of one-half mill is levied and collected, the proceeds going to the university fund.

The Territory constructed at Blackfoot, Bingham County, a fine three-story brick building for an insane asylum, with a two-story wing and other annexes. The building, furniture, and grounds cost the Territory about $55,000. In December last the main structure was destroyed by fire, but the sixty-five patients are comfortably quartered in the wing and annexes.

The United States assay office, located in the heart of Boise City, is the property of the United States, and cost the Government $81,000.

The United States penitentiary, located 2 miles from Boise City, is built of sandstone. It has forty-two cells. An appropriation has been made and the contract let for a wing duplicating the one now in use. There are now incarcerated in the prison sixty-six Territorial and three United States prisoners.

The governor of the Territory, in his report for 1889, places the number of miles of railroad in the Territory at 888.73, the products exported to outside markets by railroads and steam-boats at 184,015 tons, and the imports at 119,000 tons.

There are 917 miles of telegraph lines and 41 newspapers are published within the Territory.

The finances of this Territory are in the most satisfactory condition.

The comptroller, in his annual report to the governor, December, 1889, states that on the 20th day of January, 1890, the registered or floating debt would be paid in full, leaving the bonded indebtedness alone unpaid. The total bonded indebtedness of the Territory is $146,715.06. Under the act of 1887 there were issued, for general purposes of indebtedness, bonds amounting to $46,715.06. The denomination of these bonds is $1,000 and the rate of interest 10 per cent. per annum. The interest is payable semi-annually, in June and December, at the office of the Territorial treasurer. They mature December 1, 1891. There will be an ample fund in the Territorial treasury to redeem these bonds at maturity and without additional taxation.

Under the act approved February 2, 1885, $100,000 additional bonds were issued for the following purposes: Eighty thousand dollars for the capitol building and twenty thousand to aid in construction of insane asylum. These bonds were issued in denominations of $1,000 each, bearing 6 per cent. per annum coupons, payable semi-annually, in July and January. The capitol building bonds mature in 1905 and the asylum bonds fall due in 1892, 1893, 1894, and 1895, in multiples of $5,000 annually. The capitol building fund is maintained by one-tenth of the receipts arising from the Territorial and county licenses and the proceeds of all rents derived from the use of the capitol building.

These bonds are redeemable at the pleasure of the Territory at any time after the expiration of ten years from the date of issue. All these bonds will be extinguished in ten years from date of issue from the sinking fund, as the receipts are increasing annually. There is in this fund at the present time over $20,000.

The rate of Territorial tax is a fixed sum of four mills on the dollar, three and a half mills for general and one-half mill for university funds. The assessed valuation of property in the Territory for the last fiscal year (1889) is in round numbers $24,000,000.

Mines and lands not patented are not assessed. Fully one-half of the improved farms in the Territory are not patented. These lands are worth from $10 to $40 per acre. The present cash value of property in Idaho will equal $100,000,000 at a conservative estimate.

The admission of Idaho to her place among the States of the Union has been agitated by her people for many years, and to-day the press of the Territory, irrespective of party, is urging admission, and the people of the State, irrespective of party, are anxious that this Territory shall take her place in the galaxy of States, and what has been done looking to this end has been in strict conformity to the Constitution.

A proclamation was issued by Governor E. A. Stevenson on the 2d day of April, 1889, recommending the election by the people of Idaho of seventy-two delegates, to assemble at Boise City, the capital of the Territory, on the 14th day of July, 1889, for the purpose of framing a constitution for the State of Idaho, and a proclamation of his successor, Governor George L. Shoup, was issued on the 11th day of May, 1889. A majority of the delegates elected to said Territorial convention of Idaho assembled at Boise City, the capital of the Territory, on Thursday, the 4th day of July, 1889. The convention was called to order on that day by his excellency Governor George L. Shoup, governor of Idaho, and a temporary organization was effected by the election of John T. Morgan, of Bingham County, temporary president, and James W. Reed, of Nez Percé County, temporary secretary. Seventy delegates presented their credentials and were found entitled to seats in the convention. Sixty-nine delegates took the oath and participated in the proceedings. A permanent organization was effected by the election of William H. Claggett, of Shoshone County, as president; James W. Reed, of Nez Percé County, as vice-president, and Charles H. Reed, of Ada County, as secretary. The oath as prescribed by the rules of the convention was administered to the officers and members of the convention by his honor Chief Justice Hugh W. Weir, of Idaho.

In the convention every county of the Territory was represented, and at no time during the convention was there less than a majority of the delegates in attendance. The deliberations of the convention were characterized by harmony and a single purpose, a good constitution for statehood for Idaho. The session of the convention lasted thirty-four days, and after adopting a constitution for the State of Idaho adjourned sine die on the 6th day of August, 1889. The constitution as adopted by the convention was signed by all the delegates present at the adjournment with the exception of one member. In compliance with the direction of the convention, the constitution as adopted by the convention and signed by the delegates and all the records thereof were deposited with the secretary of Idaho.

On the 2d day of October, in pursuance of section 6 of schedule and ordinance of said constitution, George L. Shoup, governor of Idaho, issued a proclamation submitting the constitution of the State of Idaho to the people of the Territory for its adoption or rejection at an election to be held on Tuesday the 5th day of November, 1889, said election to be conducted in all respects as provided by law for general elections, and abstracts of such returns, duly certified, to be submitted to the board of canvassers as now provided by law for canvassing the return of votes for Delegates to Congress.

As provided in section 6, article 21, of schedule and ordinance of the constitution of the State of Idaho, a meeting of the board of canvassers therein provided for was held in the executive office, December 2, 1889; present, Edward J. Curtis, secretary of the Territory, and Joseph F. Wilson, United States marshal of the Territory. In the presence of his excellency George L. Shoup, governor of the Territory, said board of canvassers proceeded to a canvass of the votes cast for the adoption or rejection of the constitution at an election held November 5, 1889, as returned by the canvassing boards of the several counties. Returns from all the counties were found to have been received by the Territorial secretary, which were opened, examined, and canvassed, with the following results:

For the constitution.....	12,88
Against the constitution.....	1,73
Scattering.....	11
Total.....	14,72

Thus the people of Idaho, by an overwhelming majority, ratified the action of the delegates to the convention which framed their constitution.

The character of the population of Idaho is the highest type of American manhood, being composed principally of the descendants of New England, Southern, and Western States. The foreigners are the hardy sons of Norway, Sweden, Germany, Canada, and Great Britain. There is no question that with a stable and settled government, which statehood will insure, the increase in population and development will equal that of other Western States. There is no doubt that Idaho has the resources, wealth, and population to sustain without difficulty a State government. The people of the Territory are almost unanimous in asking this recognition.

The only opposition to the admission of Idaho under the constitution, which the legal voters of the Territory adopted almost unanimously, came from the Mormons. They protested because of section 3 of article 6 of the constitution. I will ask the Clerk to read this section, and I ask the particular attention of the House, as it is against this section of the constitution that the minority of the committee make their assault.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. No person is permitted to vote, serve as a juror, or hold any civil office who is under guardianship, idiotic, or insane or who has, at any place, been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of public funds, bartering or selling or offering to barter or sell his vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime, and who has not been restored to the right of citizenship, or who at the time of such election is confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense, or who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of this State or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who in any manner teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of this State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State; nor shall Chinese nor persons of Mongolian descent not born in the United States, nor Indians not taxed who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization, either vote, serve as jurors, or hold any civil office.

Mr. DORSEY. A law similar to the section of the constitution complained of has been in force in Idaho since 1864. It will be found in section 501 of the revised statutes of Idaho. I will ask the Clerk to read this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person under guardianship, non compos mentis or insane, nor any person convicted of treason, felony, or bribery in this Territory or in any other State or Territory in the Union, unless restored to civil rights; nor any person who is a bigamist or polygamist or who teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages any person or persons to become bigamists or polygamists, or to commit any other crime defined by law, or to enter into what is known as plural or celestial marriage, or who is a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members or devotees or any other persons to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a rite or ceremony of such order, organization, or association or otherwise, is permitted to vote at any election or to hold any position or office of honor, trust, or profit within this Territory.

Mr. DORSEY. The Mormon citizens of the Territory were represented before the Committee on Territories by Judge Wilson and Bishop Budge, of Idaho, who objected to the admission of Idaho under a constitution containing such provisions as are embodied in section 3 of article 6. The committee accorded the gentlemen patient hearings and were instructed by the arguments submitted. During the time this was under discussion a decision of the Supreme Court delivered by Justice Field settled the constitutionality of the Idaho statute, and should have been accepted as final by those who opposed the admission of the Territory on account of this section preventing polygamous Mormons from voting.

The minority of the committee, however, have taken a different view of the case and have filed a report that quotes from the constitution of nearly every State of the Union as well as from statesmen and sages of the past. I will not at this time attempt to reply to the argument submitted in the minority report, but will wait until the gentlemen who made this report have given to the House their views on the subject of the admission of Idaho. Later in this discussion we will endeavor to answer satisfactorily the objections urged against admission by the minority of the committee.

In my judgment, Idaho should now be admitted into the sisterhood of States. I am very sure that the citizens of that State are in full sympathy and accord with the best and most advanced thought of the country. We should do this in order that they may be able to enjoy the privileges of American citizens, and the admission of Idaho by this Congress under the constitution adopted by its people will give encouragement to other Territories that contain Mormon population.

Mr. Speaker, the case of the Territory of Idaho is now before us, and I sincerely hope that this House may carefully consider the claims presented, and that we will no longer keep the people of Idaho in political vassalage, but will give to them the rights and privileges to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States, by their admittance into the great American Union, and thus add another star to the bright galaxy of States, feeling sure, as I do, that no act of the hardy men who have brought Idaho to her present high position will ever cause the Representatives of the people to regret their action in giving to Idaho the rights of statehood. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has spoken twenty-two minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (S. 3131) for the registry or enrollment of the barges Herdis and Agostino C., in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up for consideration at this time the conference report which has just come over from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment of the Senate numbered 41 to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

First. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Add to the end of said amendment the following: "Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended in sinking wells or the construction of irrigation works, and the work done under this appropriation shall be completed and a report of the same made within the appropriation, and nothing herein shall commit the Government to any plan of irrigation or the construction of works therefor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

D. B. HENDERSON,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.
EUGENE HALE,
WILLIAM E. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report under the rules is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 to the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The provision covered by said Senate amendment numbered 41, as agreed upon by the conference committee, reads as follows:

"Location for artesian wells: To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make such preliminary investigation of an engineering and other character as will, so far as practicable, determine the proper location for artesian wells for irrigation purposes within the area west of the ninety-seventh meridian and east of the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains, $20,000; and a report of all operations and expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress immediately after July 1, 1890: Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended in sinking wells or the construction of irrigation works and the work done under this appropriation shall be completed and a report of the same made within the appropriation, and nothing herein shall commit the Government to any plan of irrigation or the construction of works therefor."

D. B. HENDERSON,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to say a word which I feel it to be my duty to say in this connection. This, the only item the former House conferees did not concur in, appropriates $20,000 for the investigation of artesian wells for irrigation. The House conferees were unwilling to enter upon this investigation at this time and preferred to wait until the Committee on Irrigation of the House and the same committee of the Senate could thoroughly investigate the matter and bring it before the House, so the House might have the opportunity to pass on this question.

The proposition in the amendment also places it under the control of the Agricultural Department. The conferees of the House were unwilling to accede to that proposition. They thought, if the irrigation matter was gone into at all, that, inasmuch as we have already an equipped department of the Government for scientific observations, that bureau should make the scientific investigations, and not transfer it to the Department of Agriculture; but we have waived this consideration by offering the amendment which the House accepted, and which the Senate conferees agreed to, which was adopted by the Senate, providing that no wells should be sunk out of this appropriation, which was acceptable to the friends of the proposition in the Senate, and also that whatever should be done with this appropriation should be complete in itself, leaving no opening for any future appropriation to be fitted on to this. It was deemed advisable not to treat this as an entering wedge, but to make this a complete report in itself, and not bind or commit Congress to the system of irrigation by sinking artesian wells.

Speaking only for myself, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that irrigation by the method of artesian wells for agricultural purposes is possible. I am afraid of entering into that wide field, and regretted the necessity for having to do so at this time even to the extent proposed here through the Appropriations Committee of the House, preferring that it should be done through the committees having charge of the matter after a thorough and complete investigation of the whole subject. But under the heavy pressure which has been made for this preliminary, as they say, investigation, we have yielded with the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the time consumed in the consideration of this report is to be taken from the time allowed for the debate on the Idaho bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not be counted against the time allotted to the gentleman from Missouri, but generally to the time fixed for debate on the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this time, it seems to me, ought not to come out of the debate allowed on the Idaho bill.

The SPEAKER. Whatever time is consumed in the discussion of this matter will necessarily be taken from that time.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa, in charge of this report, before he takes his seat, for what purpose this appropriation is to be used?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Simply to ascertain what irrigation wells can be found, not by sinking the wells themselves, but by an inspection of the surface of the earth.

Mr. VANDEVER. I desire to be heard for a few moments on this.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to the consumption of time on this report if the time will be extended to-morrow before the final vote is to be taken on the Idaho bill. At present that time is limited to 3 o'clock, and it seems to me it is not right to consume it for other purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This will consume but a very few moments. How much time does the gentleman from California want?

Mr. VANDEVER. I should like to have about five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Within five minutes is it not possible to dispose of the report?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Entirely possible. We can conclude it in that time, I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the time consumed on the conference report be added to the time to-morrow when the previous question is to be considered as ordered on the Idaho bill.

The SPEAKER. That time has been agreed upon, and the House will govern itself accordingly. There is difficulty, of course, about the new arrangement, as the gentlemen must see.

Mr. SPRINGER. But if all of that time should be consumed with other matters?

The SPEAKER. It is always within the control of the House itself.

Mr. PERKINS. This will only take a minute or two, I think.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from California, if that is sufficient.

Mr. MANSUR. With the understanding that no further time is consumed I will not object.

The SPEAKER. It is understood that the previous question will be then demanded upon the report.

Mr. VANDEVER. I desire only to say a word in response to the remarks which the gentleman from Iowa has made. Irrigation is a branch of agriculture; and if the views expressed by the conference committee in regard to the necessity of investigating this subject of artesian wells scientifically is a valid reason, it will apply to all agricultural operations.

Now, sir, the Committee on Irrigation have this matter under consideration, and they will be prepared, in the course of a short time, to make their report to this House, which shall include irrigation by surface water as well as underflow and artesian wells. It is not necessary, therefore, at this time to conclude the question by turning this over to the Agricultural Bureau to keep it open, to let us consider whether that bureau has not something to do with it as well as the scientific bureau referred to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is what the amendment does.

Mr. VANDEVER. I do not understand it so.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent, in this connection, that my colleague from New York [Mr. FLOWER] may be permitted to publish certain remarks on this question.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask a vote on the report.

The conference report was adopted.

ADMISSION OF IDAHO.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, from the time that the Lord God of the universe created man and woman and placed them in the Garden of Eden, the law of nature and nature's God has undoubtedly been one man for one woman and one woman for one man, and the practices of all civilized nations, without exception, have proven undoubtedly that this relation is that in which the destinies of the race are best preserved and advanced. All civilized nations, so far as I know without exception, visit the heaviest hand of punishment upon all violations of this law, sanctified by the wisdom of men as well as created by the God of nature. Hence, I desire in opening this debate, at the very beginning, to say that I have no sympathy nor do I believe that any person on this side of the House has any sympathy whatever with the institution of bigamy or of polygamy; but while so stating and so confessing, and urging implicit belief in the truth of the fact that these offenses should be crushed out, yet we find in this bill there is a mode of striking at these offenses that is in violation of all the best of our doctrines and tenets of liberty as we have universally understood and enforced them in all the past to the present time.

We find, furthermore, that up to this day and this hour no State in the Union has ever sought to enforce what this constitution, if it shall be granted to the people of Idaho, seeks to enforce; and we find that the proposition upon principle that is to be debated before Congress at the present hour is whether we shall turn back on all the wisdom of the past, whether we shall turn back on each and every State constitution of this Union without a single exception—constitutions that have given to the several States of this Union all their power, all their prestige, all their glory, and enabled them to develop so that in the aggregate they constitute to-day the greatest nation on the globe.

The proposition is whether the gentlemen on the other side will permit a violation of what we believe to be one of the highest Republican as well as Democratic principles upon which our institutions of liberty are founded, and strike down a man without a hearing in a court, without indictment, without trial, or without opportunity of defense, because of an alleged belief in certain doctrines, when the fact is the constitution does not say what in reality they intend, which is that it shall strike down the Mormon Church. I repeat, then, the attitude which is presented by the minority here is not a question of the absolute rejection of the State of Idaho, because, if the plan and policy outlined by the Democratic minority in their report and in the amendments submitted to this bill shall prevail, the State of Idaho is as certain to be represented in this Congress by its Senators and its Representatives at the assembling of Congress at its next session in December as that that day shall roll around.

Then let it be understood that, so far as our amendments are concerned and so far as the attitude of the minority is concerned in their report, it is not an absolute factious fight or opposition to the admission of Idaho, but is because we believe that they are seeking to ingratiate upon the constitution under which they seek admission a principle that ought not to find any toleration in the mind or in the heart of any lover of liberty, whether he be Republican or Democrat; and that is, never to strike down, never to punish an American citizen without first giving to him a trial and a hearing.

That the men who may be involved in the penalties attached to section 3, article 6, of the constitution submitted for your consideration are American citizens in the general sense of the term no one can doubt; and yet, under the peculiar system which prevails in this country and has prevailed from the time of the establishment of the Federal Constitution, it is equally plain that, while men are citizens of the United States, yet they gain their right of suffrage solely and entirely from the States. This has been decided divers times by the Supreme Court of the United States. From that standpoint, then, it will be urged by gentlemen on the other side, especially with reference to the case of Davis vs. Beason in the Supreme Court of the United States two or three weeks ago, that this section 3, to which exception is taken by us, is constitutional; that is, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that a State has a right to prescribe an oath as a prerequisite to the right to vote. That may be so. That is constitutional because the Supreme Court say it is so.

But the Supreme Court do not decide the other point which is involved in this case, that when you prescribe that oath for a man he can be accused at the threshold and be deprived of his right of suffrage on the day and at the hour of accusation without a trial and without a hearing under the prescribed forms of law. To this assumption we object, and the question here is simply whether men shall be deprived of three great rights—the right to vote, the right to hold office, and the right to serve upon juries—without being first convicted of crime. That is the question and that is the proposition that is challenged by the Democratic minority in their report.

Let us see now what is the character of the people assailed and what are their numbers. There is some little difference of opinion, perhaps, in the committee who have had this subject under investigation as to the number of people that may be in the Territory of Idaho. I do not think that any estimate I have heard or now remember places the population at over 110,000 or 115,000. I think, however, that that estimate is probably a little swollen. I doubt very much if they have more than 100,000 people, if so many. But take the population at 100,000; from all we can learn there are 25,000 of that population who are Mormons in their belief. In other words, 25 per cent. of the entire population of the Territory of Idaho at this time belongs to the Mormon faith.

Assuming that there is one male adult voter to every five of the population, there would be 5,000 adult Mormon voters in the Territory. I come now to what I believe to be the real reason, or at least one of the real reasons, why the Mormons there are to be disfranchised. It is because it is understood and charged, and not denied anywhere, that almost every Mormon in the Territory of Idaho is a Democrat and votes the Democratic ticket. Let it be understood that I am now charging distinctly that, from all the information we have, nearly every Mormon in Idaho is a Democrat, and when he votes at all or has an opportunity to vote under their test-oath laws, votes the Democratic ticket.

On the other side gentlemen may laugh this to scorn, but it is true all the same. Just pass across the line, an imaginary line at that, into Wyoming Territory, which you admitted as a State the other day, and, while there are not so many Mormons there as in Idaho, yet they are nearly all Republicans, and, because of the well understood fact that every Mormon there votes the Republican ticket, you let them vote; and not merely that, but you provided the other day that their wives should have the right to vote, thus giving to every Mormon and his wife in Wyoming two votes, while in Idaho you deny the right to vote even to Mormon men! Let these things be understood as we go along. Let it be understood that this is not a question of principle anywhere, but is, in every instance, a question of expediency alone for the Republican party.

Let it be further understood that from forty-eight hours after the Republicans began to think that they had carried the Presidential election of 1888 the whole political world of the United States was filled with rumors of the new programme to be inaugurated by that party. One feature of that programme was the admission of new States to strengthen the party in the Senate. It was also reported and published that there was to be a revolutionizing of the rules of parliamentary procedure; that there was to be the unseating of divers members on the Democratic side, and that the Republicans were to fortify themselves by the passage of such laws in this Congress as they deemed from their standpoint necessary to be passed, and if new Territories were admitted as States, the Republican party being thus strengthened in the Senate, it would be many years before, under any circumstances, the legislation of this Congress could be repealed or done away with. These, then, are the circumstances that have led up to the Republican demand for the admission of these two Territories, the youngest of our remaining Territories, certainly the smallest in population, and not the best equipped in their financial ability to maintain statehood.

Let us next inquire what is the character of the alleged reasons for the disfranchisement of these people in Idaho. They are white, all of them. If they were black there would be protection for them under the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Then legislation for their disfranchisement could not be inaugurated and carried into effect by the Republican party under the Constitution. But they are white and Democrats, and so your victims. What is the character of these people? It is necessary perhaps here to state that which some gentlemen present undoubtedly well know, but others may not know, that the Mormons are divided into two classes, known as Josephites and Brighamites. The Josephites to a man repudiate polygamy and bigamy; do not believe in them; say they never were embraced in the original revelations, and they live a sober life of monogamy, as much so as any class of people on this continent. It is the other class, the Brighamites alone, who believe in bigamy and in polygamy.

Just what are the proportions of these two classes of Mormons I do not know. Judge J. M. Wilson, who appeared for these people before the committee, estimates that there are 25,000 Mormons in the Territory of Idaho. Of this number he places the male adults having the right to vote at 5,000, and he seems to be careful and accurate in his figures and in his information. Furthermore, he says that from investigation and upon reports which he deemed reliable from every source and quarter, there are not over 125 of these Mormons, out of 5,000, that are now or have been living either in polygamy or in bigamy. That number is 2½ per cent. of the male population. Of the whole population of 25,000 it would be only one-half of 1 per cent.

Now, if these figures be true, we have the numbers and proportion of the Mormons addicted to these habits, and for whose sins is to be inflicted upon their whole people the penalty of disfranchisement and degradation from the rank of American citizenship.

What is the general character of these people for thrift, industry, sobriety, forecast, and similar qualities? I may say, in the light of the evidence before the committee, that their character in this respect is remarkable. Mr. Carlton was appointed a member of the Utah commission by President Arthur under the anti-polygamy law of March 22, 1882. He went to Utah and served there seven years, so that his experience comes down to last year. Here is his statement in regard to that people:

At that time—

The time of his appointment—

I had the usual predilections in regard to the Mormons, which were not at all to their advantage. But I resolved that, so far as possible, I would divest myself of all prejudice and judge for myself fairly and impartially. I was not long in discovering that in many respects things were quite different from what I had anticipated, and I began to strongly suspect that the Mormon people had been greatly misrepresented and misunderstood. I found them to be intensely devoted in their religion and as honest and sincere in their creed as any church or religious society of which I have any knowledge; and at the end of seven years' careful investigation I can say emphatically that, for honesty, industry, temperance, and peace and good order, they deservedly stand as high as any other community on this continent.

At this, the honored chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STURGEON], said:

Judge Carlton, you need not dwell on this point, for we are satisfied of the good qualities of the Mormons in these respects.

Judge Carlton proceeded:

Then I will pass from this topic, only remarking that it is a serious thing for the Government to disfranchise a whole community possessed of such good qualities for the building up of a Commonwealth. But, as it is one of the schemes of the anti-Mormon agitators in the West and elsewhere to represent the Mormons as incorrigible rogues and criminals as an excitatory to hostile action by Congress, I wish to state another fact: That while the Mormons of Utah are over 75 per cent. of the whole population, yet seven-eighths of the heinous and felonious offenses, as murder, manslaughter, burglary, robbery, rape, and the like, are committed by the non-Mormon minority. This is proved by the statistics, and is confirmed by my own investigations.

But there is further evidence in regard to the character of these people. Bayard Taylor, the celebrated traveler, after paying them a visit, said:

We must admit that Salt Lake City is one of the most quiet, orderly, and moral places in the world. There are a few Gentile liquor saloons, but the Mormons, as a people, are the most temperate of Americans. They are chaste, laborious, and generally cheerful; and what they have accomplished in so short a time, under every circumstance of discouragement, will always form one of the most remarkable chapters in our history. The Territory does not owe a dollar; the people have established manufactories, built roads and bridges, irrigated wastes of sage-bush, colonized the basin of the interior desert for an extent of 500 miles, and made a nucleus of permanent civilization in the most forbidding part of the continent.

Dr. Miller, the editor of the Omaha (Nebr.) Herald, writes:

One feature of the influx into this hitherto quiet, sober, moral, and intelligent Mormon community carries with it its own comment to the thoughtful. To the lasting honor of the Mormon people and system be it said that for twenty-five years such machines of moral infamy as whisky shops, harlots, faro-banks, and all the attendant forms of vice and iniquity were totally unknown in Utah. It can not be denied that the Mormons have achieved victories and conquests over the most gigantic evils that curse our race, and which are to-day the chief banes of every civilized state. Already the hydra-headed monsters of infamy are gaining footholds in Salt Lake City. The gambler and woman of the town are there. The damning fact, so creditable to Mormon morality, is that it is only by the surreptitious evasion and overthrow of Mormon authority that these and kindred curses now invade the beautiful city of Salt Lake.

Elder Miles Grant, the Adventist and editor of the World's Crisis, says:

After a careful observation for some days, we came to the settled conclusion that there is less licentiousness at Salt Lake City than in any other one of the same size in the United States, and were we to bring up a family of children in these last days of wickedness we should have less fears of their moral corruption were they in that city than in any other. Swearing, drinking, gambling, idleness, and licentiousness have made but little headway there when compared with other places of equal size. As a body they are a very sincere people and believe the Lord led them there. They are close Bible students, and are very familiar with the Old Testament prophecies, upon which they dwell much in their preachings. Among them are a number of able men who are capable of entertaining an intelligent audience. They preach without notes and present such thoughts as come to them on the occasion.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, editor of the Pioneer, a woman's journal, writes as follows:

Utah wants to assume the prerogative of State sovereignty. She has population and wealth superior to any other Territory, and why should she not enjoy the privilege of self-government? Utah is the wisest and best governed of any large section of people in the United States. In Great Salt Lake City there is less of rowdyism, drunkenness, gambling, idleness, theft, conspiracy against the peace of society, and crime generally than there is in any other city of the same population in the country, if not on the globe.

And Chief-Justice White, in charging the grand jury, at Salt Lake City, in February, 1876, said:

This land they have redeemed from sterility, and occupied its once barren solitudes with cities, villages, cultivated fields, and farm-houses, and made it the habitation of a numerous people, where a beggar is never seen and almshouses are neither needed nor known.

Please note this language:

Where a beggar is never seen and almshouses are neither needed nor known. These are facts and accomplishments which any candid observer recognizes and every fair mind admits.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Does the gentleman claim that this is the result of Mormonism there?

Mr. MANSUR. It is evident it is not the result of Gentile rule.

Now, this is the character of that people, as a rule; yet it is proposed to disfranchise them en masse and to deprive them of the highest privilege of American citizenship. It goes without saying that if these men were other than Mormons no such provision would be sought to be placed in the Idaho constitution. It is leveled, then, at polygamy and bigamy; and I, in common with every man on this side, say that so far as it is leveled against those offenses it is right; that there ought to be and must be in that community, as in all others, strict laws prohibiting those crimes, and grave penalties inflicted which shall stamp them out of existence. While the American citizen everywhere is willing, as a rule, to tolerate a man's belief in almost anything, yet when a man attempts to carry out his belief in action, and that action is a violation of any law of the land, then Americans claim the right absolutely, under our civilization and our precedents and all the laws of the land, to punish him for such action, and we do punish him.

Why, on account of the few men who are thus engaged in the practice of bigamy or polygamy, whether the number be one hundred and twenty-five, as Mr. Wilson estimates, in the whole Territory of Idaho, or whether it be greater, as gentlemen on the other side will contend, but certainly not the whole Mormon population, why should we, on account of the conduct of these comparatively few persons, visit the penalty of disfranchisement upon every male adult of that church merely because he is a Mormon? And why should we refuse him even the poor, pitiful right of purging himself by an oath in which he shall swear that he does not thus believe? For, gentlemen, please observe that in said section 3, which it is sought to ingraft into the constitution of Idaho, there are quite a number of provisions whereby a man is declared to have the right of trial and shall not suffer the penalty of disfranchisement until after his conviction, whereas those offenses connected with the Mormon Church are taken outside of the list of ordinary offenses, and a man can not purge himself by his own oath that he does not believe in bigamous or polygamous practices, does not countenance them, and does not aid or assist in their perpetration.

I will read and call the attention of gentlemen to this remarkable section, a part of it being as follows:

No person is permitted to vote, serve as juror, or hold any civil office who is under guardianship, idiotic, or insane, or who has at any place been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of public funds, bartering or selling or offering to barter or sell his vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime, and who has not been restored to the right of citizenship, or who at the time of such election is confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense.

As to all that, this side of the House agrees to its truth and soundness, because here you have said that any man who attempts to deprive the people of their choice by outrages perpetrated on the ballot at the time of the election whereby that certainty necessary to public peace each and every man must have in the purity of that election and the belief those who voted were entitled to vote, as well as that those charged with heinous crimes like the embezzlement of public funds, felony, treason, every one of these offenses, has the right to be placed on trial by the presentment of a grand jury, with the right to be heard in his own defense by himself or his attorney, has the right to have his case under the rules of law presented to a jury.

When that is done he can not complain if he be deprived of his privileges if convicted. That is universal law in all the States and it is correct. I have been at the trouble of collating the law from all the several States, and there is not to be found in one of the States of the Union any different law than that there must be first conviction of crime before you can degrade a man or deprive him of those inestimable rights, the right to vote, the right to serve on a jury, or the right to hold an office. In no State of the Union can such rights be taken from him without conviction for crime first being had.

I ask each and every gentleman on the other side, if you vote to strike down these men without a hearing and you go home and the men in your district ask you how you could deprive citizens of Idaho of these privileges without a hearing, what will your answer be, when you know the people universally in your own State believe in a different doctrine and decreed it should become a part of the fundamental constitution of each and every one of your States—how, I repeat, will you answer your own people when they put that question to you?

We now come to the remarkable part of section 3. Up to this point conviction must precede his degradation and deprivation of his political rights.

I now invite the attention of the House to the remainder of the remarkable provisions of section 3 in the constitution under consideration:

Or who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of this State or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who, in any manner, teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of this State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State; nor shall Chinese or persons of Mongolian descent, not born in the United States, nor Indians, not taxed, who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization, either vote, serve as jurors, or hold any civil office.

Of course we take no exception to the disfranchisement of Chinese or Indians not taxed. The denial of the right of suffrage under all the constitutions of the States of our country, almost from the establishment of the Government and without exception, applies to the Chinese and to Indians not taxed; but the remainder goes on the idea that if there be such persons as are described in this section, to wit, the bigamist, or the polygamist, or he who believes in patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or who is living in that condition, or supports, aids, or encourages any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages anything of the kind—that evidently means the Mormon Church—can not mean anything else, and that the church teaches these things, asserting that the church does teach them, then thereby, at once, from that very moment, he is disfranchised and deprived of all of these inestimable rights, without trial, without opportunity to be heard, without opportunity to purge himself even by taking an oath before the officers of election denying the fact that he does so believe.

It is this violation of the fundamental principle of the right of a man to be heard and to be considered innocent until he has heard the charge, has been brought face to face with his accusers, and convicted of the offense—it is a violation of this fundamental right of every American citizen, as I believe, without which neither Republicanism nor Democracy is of much value, that caused us to take this stand against these particular provisions of this constitution. The charge being made, if he denies it before the registering board there is to be no trial or hearing. He is at once deprived of his right, which is the most valuable right of an American citizen. It is the very corner-stone upon which our ideal Republic is built. The strength and perpetuity of our Republic and of its institutions alike depend upon the free suffrage of its citizens.

Another very remarkable feature of this oath, you will observe, is that while the constitution guarantees to a man who is accused of many minor offenses that are commonly and popularly known as misdemeanors, that are merely mala prohibita, he has the right of trial, while as to others, mala in se, he can have no trial. It can not be conceded with any good reason that if a man is living in polygamy or living in bigamy his offense can not be proven upon him. The open, overt act of living in bigamy or living in polygamy can be proven upon a man who is guilty of those offenses, or of either of them, just as well as the offense of horse-stealing or of murder can be proved upon him, and yet this constitution provides no such punishment for these offenses.

There is no sympathy on our part, nor do I believe there is any on this side of the Chamber, for any one who may be guilty of polygamy or bigamy. We say that he ought to be punished severely when tried and convicted of these offenses; and it would be eminently right and just after conviction for crime to put upon him the degradation of this section; that is to say, deprive him of the right of suffrage, of the right to hold office, or the right of serving on a jury.

It will be conceded by every person that it is hard, in fact absolutely impossible, to show why a man should be entitled to a trial and the right of jury as in these mala prohibita and minor offenses, and to the right of a jury in a case of treason against the very life of the nation itself; also in embezzlements and in felonies of all kinds other than bigamy and polygamy, and then deny it in bigamy and polygamy—I say it would be very hard, except upon the principle of arbitrary power, by which a man is condemned who is accused of these two offenses, to take him from out of the right and privilege guaranteed him of a trial in all other offenses.

It is certain that no reason why this should be done can be suggested that will stand the test of our judgment. Observe its effect. A man walks up on election day and tenders his suffrage. The charge is made against him by the register or other election officer: "You believe in these things, polygamy or bigamy, or you are a member of the Mormon Church, that teaches them." He is branded at once as infamous; he is branded as an outcast. He has stricken from him the highest right of American citizenship, and a character of punishment is visited upon him that makes him stand humbled and degraded in his own eyes and in his own estimation.

Let us consider, if you please, the value of suffrage, remembering that in this argument we are taking ground against this section 3 simply because it is discriminating and deprives the citizen of inestimable rights without a hearing and defense before constituted tribunals of the country of his liberties and franchises, and these ought, in the eyes of an American citizen, to be more precious than life itself.

It is evident that under the provisions of section 4, which immediately follows section 3, the Legislature possesses the power of prescribing other limitations and conditions upon the right of suffrage, additional to those that are prescribed in section 3, that contains the disfranchisement proper. But it also goes a step further, and says that the Legislature shall never possess the power to annul the provisions of section 3 or any of the provisions that Article VI contains.

That being the case, the Legislature is put undoubtedly in this position: That when it goes on to frame the necessary machinery to carry out section 3, the effect of it will be to invest the register or the election officer, by whatever name known, with summary power similar to that possessed by a drum-head court-martial to bear a charge and to determine it then and there. Of course, if he is, as he is likely to be, of the dominant party and a believer in the tenets of disfranchising this class of people, he will rule rigidly upon it; and it is not too much to say that all that will have to be done is to accuse a man and thereby rob and deprive him of his right to vote, without any opportunity to show the falsity of the charge made against him, and, if you please, without the constitutional right of his being enabled to deny that he does believe in these doctrines or that he has ever lived in a condition of polygamy or bigamy.

It was hardly to be expected under ordinary circumstances that a hundred years after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, with all its guarantees in behalf of personal liberty, such a provision as this should have been submitted to the deliberate consideration of an American Congress. Yet we have it here before us.

Let us see a little bit further into the inconvenience and the trouble of enforcing these provisions, namely: The right to serve on a jury, the right to hold office, and the right, possibly, to become a member of the Legislature.

These are the rights upon which depends practically the preservation of the liberties and of the property, not alone of the man himself, but of the community in which he lives. Let us suppose that a trial is going on and a man is summoned as a juror. There being no provision in the Constitution by which you can determine from the looks of a man whether he is a Mormon or whether he is a Gentile, this man is summoned, and when he comes into court some one knowing him says, "This man is a Mormon." What is the judge to do? It is evident that he can not stop the trial in the midst of which he is engaged, yet it must be held in statu quo, at least until the question is determined whether this man is a Mormon or not, because, if he denies that he is a Mormon, then it is the duty of the court to investigate that question.

But how is the court to do that? There are no rules prescribed here. Naturally, therefore, the judge would call to his aid all the adjuncts that go to the trial of any question submitted to the court, he himself sitting as both judge and jury; in other words, trying the question from the standpoint of a judge in equity. He would have to hear testimony pro and con. Now, it has been stated that in some of those counties, in one, in particular, in Southern Idaho, there are six or seven thousand people, and there are not 100 Gentile voters in the whole county who will administer public affairs there. But to return. At every stage of the procedure in the gathering of the jury and at every stage until the complete impanelment of it, there would arise vexed questions which might take hours and days for the court to determine.

Again, supposing a man should run for office and be elected and the question should come up, when he was about to take the oath of office, as to whether or not he was a Mormon, who is to try him in such a case? How is the accusation to be made good? By what authority? In the mean time in what way and manner are the interests of the people in the conduct of the office to which this man has been elected to be conserved and carried out? These, however, are some of the minor disadvantages connected with this provision of this constitution.

Passing them by for the present, let me for a little while call the attention of the House to the value of suffrage and the estimate that has been placed upon it in the past by some of the wisest and best men of the land, not only of our own country, but of the motherland whence we came.

Alexander Hamilton, in an extract which is cited in 4 Wallace, 291, says:

A share in the sovereignty of the state, which is exercised by the citizens at large in voting at the elections, is one of the most important rights of the subject, and in a republic ought to stand foremost in the estimation of the law. It is that right by which we exist as a free people, and it will certainly therefore never be admitted that less ceremony ought to be used in divesting any citizen of that right than in depriving him of his property.

But the Constitution has an impregnable bulwark, in so many words, whereby it is declared that as to our property we can not be deprived except for just compensation. We are bulwarked by the very provisions of the Constitution in the protection and in the value of our property, but we are not so bulwarked in our right of suffrage.

Again, on another occasion Mr. Hamilton said:

It is that right by which we exist as a free people.

How much of blood and treasure has not been sacrificed to obtain it? When will men who know and appreciate liberty cease to value it above fortune and even life? The supreme court of Pennsylvania say:

The most important of all our franchises is the right of an elector and citizen. It is true that, in a confined sense, it can not be called property; it is not assets to pay debts, nor does it descend to the heir or administrator; but who does not feel its value? And who would not turn pale if he thought he could be deprived of it, without a hearing or trial, by an act of assembly?

The court speak of the right of an elector as a franchise; but by all authorities, English and American, "liberty" and "franchise" are synonymous terms (4 Tom. Jac. Law Dic., 148; 2 Black, 21-37). The right of the people to elect officers is a franchise (2 Bouv. Dic., 1593). In Mr. Webster's argument, Dartmouth College case (5 Webster's Works, 479-481), he said, "Liberties and franchises are the same."

Mr. Madison held that the citizen had not only a right to his property, but a property in all his rights (4 Writings of Madison, 478-480). When, under the English common and statute law, one was made a citizen of London or other city or free burgess of any town corporate, "he had a freehold in his freedom during life" (2 Tom. Jac. Law Dic., 378). Can it be possible that in America the liberty of suffrage is less secure than it is under the rule of lords and kings? Is it true that while an acre of land or $50 in money is protected by a jury trial the liberty of suffrage is not?

There is one case which the minority have cited in their report which comes down to us from ancient days in England, a case which is so appropriate, so strong, and which states the doctrine of the value of the right of suffrage and what depends upon it so tersely, so strikingly, that I desire to read it:

In the case of Ashby vs. White and others (Lord Raymond's Reps., 938), after verdict for the plaintiff, the judgment was arrested in the court of the Queen's Bench by Justices Gould, Powys, and Powell. The action was brought against the returning officers (who fill the same place in England that judges of election fill in this country) for refusing to receive the vote of the plaintiff. This case is a most interesting one.

Gould, Justice, was of opinion that the action was not maintainable, first, because the returning officers were judges of the qualification of voters; second, because the plaintiff's privilege of voting is not a matter of property or credit, so that the hindrance of it is merely damnum absque injuria.

Justices Powell and Powys concurred mainly on the last point. Lord Holt dissented. He said:

It is not to be doubted but that the Commons of England have a great and considerable share in the Government and a share in the legislature, without whom no law passes; but because of their vast numbers this right is not exercisable by them in their proper persons, and, therefore, by the constitution of England it has been directed that it should be exercised by representatives chosen by and out of themselves, and this representation is exercised in three different qualities, either as knights of shire, citizens of cities, or burgesses of boroughs; and these are the persons entitled to represent all the Commons of England. The election of knights belongs to the freeholders of the county and it is an original right vested in an inseparable form from the freehold, and can be no more severed from the freehold than the freehold itself can be taken away. * * * The right of election is an original right incident to and inseparable from the freehold. As for citizens and burgesses, they depend on the same right as knights of shire, and differ only as to the tenure, but the right and the manner of their election is on the same foundation.

After examining the various tenures of the different cities and boroughs, he proceeds:

Hence it appears that any man that is to give his vote on the election of members to serve in Parliament has a several and particular right in his private capacity as a citizen or burgess; and surely it can not be said that this is so inconsiderable a right as to apply that maxim to it, de minimis non curat lex; a right that a man has to give his vote at the election of a person to represent him in Parliament, there to concur in the making of laws which are to bind his liberty and property is a most transcendent thing and of a high nature, and the law takes notice of it as such in several statutes. * * * The right of voting at the election of burgesses is a thing of the highest importance, and so great a privilege that it is a great injury to deprive the plaintiff of it. * * * But my brother says we can not judge of this matter because it is a parliamentary thing. Oh! by all means, be very tender of that. * * * To allow this action will make public officers more careful to observe the constitution of cities and boroughs, and not to be so partial as they commonly are in all elections, which is indeed a great and growing mischief, and tends to the prejudice of the peace of the nation. * * * If it be a matter within our jurisdiction, we are bound by our oaths to judge of it. This is a matter of property determinable before us.

Such was the opinion of Lord Holt. He was overruled by the three associate judges, but most fortunately a writ of error was taken to the House of Lords, and the judgment of the Court of Kings Bench was reversed by the vote of fifty lords to sixteen. Trevor, chief-justice of the common pleas, and Baron Price, of the exchequer, were of opinion with the three judges of the King's Bench. Ward, chief baron of the exchequer, with his associates, Bury and Smith, agreed with the Lord Chief-Justice Holt. Tracy, justice, agreed with Holt on the main point, but differed on the point of pleading.

When this case was argued in the House of Lords, Holt, chief-justice, said, addressing those in favor of affirming the judgment:

The plaintiff has a particular right vested in him to vote. Is it not then a wrong and an injury to that right to refuse to receive his vote? * * * This action is brought by the plaintiff for the infringement of his franchise. You would have nothing to be a damage but what is pecuniary. * * * Let all people come in and vote fairly. It is to support one or the other party to deny any man's vote.

I repeat that language for the benefit of my friends on the other side:

It is to support one or the other party to deny any man's vote. By my consent, if such an action comes to be tried before me, I will direct the jury to make him, the defendant, pay well for it. It is denying him his English right; and if this action be not allowed, a man may be forever deprived of it.

Oh, that I could say here on the floor of this American Congress, "it is denying a man his American right;" but you, gentlemen on the other side, if I were to make such a statement, would, I am very fearful, give the lie to it by your votes on this bill.

Then Lord Holt wound up his address with these memorable words, which ought to be graven in letters of living light upon the heart of every American lover of liberty:

It is a great privilege to choose such persons as are to bind a man's life and liberty by the laws they make.

Yet this is a privilege of which gentlemen are seeking by this bill, if it should become a law, to deprive 5,000 men, representing 25,000 people.

The case to which I have just referred has been cited at length in order to combat the notion that the right of suffrage is of slight estimation in the eye of the law, is not regarded as having the same sacredness which hedges and protects rights as to things tangible, the right to personal and real property. In reply to those who would make light of this right of suffrage we cite this case as an authority for the proposition that the right of suffrage is eminently a right belonging to every American; that it is his property, something which is his own, the infringement of which debases and degrades him, being a deprivation of that which constitutes the principal dignity of his position as an American citizen.

Any one who controverts this ground must be prepared to maintain three propositions: First, deny this right to these men by adopting this constitution and then tell me if you dare that the liberty of an American citizen is on a par or anything like equal with that of an English citizen. Next, it must be maintained that popular rights in America which are sought to be conserved and protected by our constitutions as the bulwark of those principles of liberty upon which our entire institutions are framed are less secure, are on a less assured basis in America than they are by this decision in England. Thirdly, it must be held that the right of suffrage, if possessed by a man in England by virtue of being a freeholder or a member of a borough, is more invaluable, more sacred, than it is in this country under the constitutions of the several States as they exist, and of infinitely more value than under the constitution of Idaho, if it shall now be admitted as a State of the Union.

It must be evident, then, with this review, that the deprivations put upon citizens by this constitution are, from the standpoint of the framers of that constitution, imposed upon them because these things alleged against them are, in the minds of the people of Idaho, crimes. I confess if they can be proved guilty of polygamy or bigamy those are crimes, and for them the guilty parties ought to be disfranchised—ought to be punished to the extent of the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MANSUR. Inasmuch as I shall have charge of the time on this side of the House, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes longer.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. MANSUR. I have within the last two or three days been placed in possession of a copy of the Philadelphia Record, dated Wednesday, March 26, 1890, not over six days old. I desire to call the attention of the House to the remarkable progress in public sentiment and the extent to which the dominant majority, when they believe their ideas are being trampled upon, are emboldened to go, the length to which they are seeking to carry their doctrines because of the presentation of this constitution of Idaho to Congress and because of the recent decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Davis vs. Beason.

I am not familiar with the causes which led to the creation of the committee of one hundred in the city of Boston; but they have issued a pamphlet reviewing the last encyclical letter of the Pope and taking the position that according to this encyclical no man can be an obedient and loyal Catholic and at the same time be a loyal citizen of the United States. This pamphlet takes the position that the relation of Catholics towards our Government is similar to that of Mormons who have taken the oaths of the Endowment House, and then declares: "No ballot for the man who takes his politics from the Vatican." This is a remarkable length for such an organization to go, and it shows the extent to which some leading citizens are aroused over the attitude of the Catholic authorities towards the public schools.

The close of the address is in these words:

We have no hesitation in affirming that the oath of allegiance to our Government taken by Romanists, and by which they have obtained the rights of the ballot, citizenship, and office, amounts to nothing—if they are good Romanists—and has no binding obligation where the interests of the church or the Pontiff require it to be disregarded. * * * We do not hesitate to say as a measure for the nation's self-protection that no man who confesses allegiance to the Pontiff should be allowed to participate as a citizen in either holding an office or casting a ballot. The United States Supreme Court has decided that the law of one of our States disfranchising Mormons is constitutional, on the theory that the man who takes the oath the Mormons are required to take can not be a good citizen. Why should not this principle be applied to those who confess allegiance to the Papal hierarchy?

Let Romanists who would become citizens of the United States be required not only to take the oath of allegiance to the Government, but to take an oath also renouncing all allegiance to the Pope of Rome. This is not a question of religious intolerance, nor is it one of antagonism to foreigners who are willing to homologate with us in accordance with the spirit of our institutions. But this is a question of self-protection and self-preservation, and the law of self-preservation is supreme in all social and political organizations. Romanism is a political system; it is a political power. As a political power it must be met; as a political force it must be treated when viewed in its relations to our institutions. We can have no divided citizenship. No man should be allowed to participate in the political affairs of this country who is the subject or ally of a foreign power that is at war with her national institutions. No ballot for the man who takes his politics from the Vatican.

This is the address now being issued by a committee of one hundred citizens of Boston. I think I can fairly say to the Catholics that if the Mormons are stricken down, if this bill is to be carried into effect in this way, thus emboldening the dominant majority, it will not be long before we shall find certain denominations and certain classes of people in this country inaugurating a crusade against the Catholic because he is a Catholic.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir, although my time is very short.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Is it not true that Catholics are as much opposed to polygamy as are Protestants?

Mr. MANSUR. I presume they are absolutely as much opposed to it—more so, if anything, because they come nearer to holding the bond of marriage inviolable than Protestants do.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Do you, then, expect Catholics to object to polygamy being restricted for fear that afterward their church will be attacked?

Mr. MANSUR. That is not the question. The question is that any one who believes in a church that teaches belief in a higher power shall be disfranchised. I tell you original Republicans, I tell you original Abolitionists, under this section 3, word for word, line for line, Seward never could have voted, nor could Wendell Phillips, nor Lloyd Garrison, for they believed in the higher law. I wish you gentlemen on the other side to think whether you are willing to go to the extreme this clause indicates.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Did not the gentleman and all his party denounce them because they believed in the principles of human liberty?

Mr. MANSUR. I never denounced the principles of liberty, and I never knew you people to believe in the Constitution where the question of a higher law was involved.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANSUR. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. You are not stating the law at all.

Mr. MANSUR. That is not a question. I insist I am stating it without possibility of mistake. I am fairly stating it. I say word for word:

Or who in any manner teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of, any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of this State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State; nor shall Chinese nor persons of Mongolian descent not born in the United States, nor Indians not taxed who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization, either vote, serve as jurors, or hold any civil office.

Now, recollect the proposition is, if any man or person belongs to any organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches or advises the laws of the State are not the supreme law of the land, he shall be disfranchised.

Mr. STRUBLE. That is, if he belongs to those organizations.

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir; and I say that if Seward, or Garrison, or Phillips, who belonged to the Abolition party and its organization, and believed in the higher law—I say this Idaho constitution doctrine would apply to them and would break down every barrier by which they were protected and enjoyed the privilege of voting.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does the gentleman claim there is any analogy between the old association of Abolitionists and the established Mormon church?

Mr. MANSUR. It is a very far-fetched one, I will admit; but the only question of similarity which is true is this: They were an association of free-soilers; they were an association of Abolitionists, to bring about eventually the doctrine in which they believed, that when any law of the State was in conflict with the higher law, then they were relieved from their obedience to the law of the State, and they were bound only to obey that higher law. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. Speaker, the subject which I arise to discuss is the grandest, politically, that ever engaged the thoughtful consideration of man. I have the distinguished honor, which comes to but few, of representing freemen and American citizens who ask for themselves a place among the States of the American Union. These people who have subdued the desert and the forest, who have wrenched untold millions from the solemn and reluctant hills, thus aiding struggling humanity everywhere, who have borne the hardships which have opened up an empire for thousands of homes, are the worthy descendants of their fathers of the Revolution, and seek now by petition what their fathers gained one hundred years ago by arms and blood, the right of self-government.

In these days of centennial celebrations, when we are commemorating the achievements which marked the real beginning of the Government by the people; in these days when our institutions have proved themselves so strong and the prosperity of our people under them so great that their contemplation shakes thrones; in these days when we are swift as a nation to recognize the sovereignty of foreign republics and to send words of cheer to Ireland, struggling for "home rule," it is fortunate for Idaho that she presents her claims and petitions to her kindred.

I ask of this Congress of the American people that they will divest their minds of all prejudice for or against Idaho, and that they will consider our claims as presented regardless of the claims or conditions of any other Territory. I trust above all things that no partisan consideration will influence your judgment. I promise you to state facts as they exist and confidently rely on the patriotic judgment which you will form.

In the discussion on the Wyoming bill, precedents were cited in detail and numbers to show that Wyoming was possessed of sufficient population and resources to entitle her to admission. It was abundantly proved by comparison that if she were kept out, it would be contrary to precedent. Those arguments apply with greater force to Idaho, but as they have been presented so recently I will not take your time to repeat them in detail. I will, however, call your attention to some unanswerable expressions concerning the admission of States.

Before I enter into a discussion of our resources and capabilities for State government, I desire to have it understood that I speak of non-Mormons only. Our Mormon population contribute nothing practically to our local government. Any one of half a dozen counties pay more taxes than all the Mormons combined.

DUTY OF CONGRESS.

In the famous ordinance of 1787, for the government of the Northwest Territory, appear these words:

To provide also for the establishment of States and permanent government therein and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original States, at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest: It is hereby ordained and declared that the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and the States in the said Territory. * * * Article V. * * * Whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such States shall be admitted by its delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government. * * * and so far as it can be consistent with the general interest of the Confederacy such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

For more than a century a mighty and fructifying tide of immigration has poured into and over the West, converting the vast waste into a rich garden, the harder and more progressive spirits in the East, who have constituted that unceasing flood, parting for a time with the most valued of their political privileges in full trust of their restoration so soon as the conditions of the great ordinance shall be fulfilled. Over and over again communities planted and rooted upon the faith of that compact or in reliance upon the broad and unchanging principle that underlies it have come knocking at the door of Congress, asking for "the establishment of States," for "permanent government," and "admission to a share in the Federal councils," according to the letter and the spirit of the irrevocable compact. Over and over again Congress has listened to and granted the appeal, never standing upon the maximum requirements of the ordinance, but, conformably to its true intent, heeding most the special admonition that "so far as it can be, consistent with the general interest of the Confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period."

It was not without reason that the ordinance of 1787 sought rather to hasten than to retard the time when the unorganized and unpeopled public domain of that day should be divided and erected into sovereign members of the family of States. American statesmen have never imagined to themselves, nor proposed to their countrymen, a political system or arrangement under which that portion of their fellow-citizens who should take upon them or upon whom should fall the task of national expansion should remain for the space of an unnecessary moment in a state of public dependence upon or inferiority to the remaining portion of the national community. So far was this from their ideas and purposes that when the Supreme Court was called upon to expound the provisions of the Constitution framed almost contemporaneously with the ordinance of 1787, it said, through the lips of its presiding member:

There is certainly no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish and maintain colonies bordering on the United States. * * * No power is given to acquire a territory, to be acquired and permanently held in that character. * * * The power to expand the United States by the admission of new States is plainly given, and in the construction of this power by all the departments of the Government it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation entitle it to admission.

Agreeably to this judicial view of the purposes of the Constitution are the utterances of distinguished statesmen of various parties and sections. Madison, advocating the admission of Tennessee in the early days of the Union, said:

The inhabitants in that district are in a degraded situation; at present they are deprived of a right essential to freemen, the right of being represented in Congress. Laws are made without their consent or by their consent in part only. An exterior authority appoints their executive, which is not analogous to the other parts of the United States and not justified by anything but an obvious and imperious necessity.

Douglas, speaking on the admission of Kansas, said:

I helped to admit Florida into the Union when she had a population of 49,000. * * * While I think it is not right to admit new States with too small a population—30,000, or 40,000, or 50,000—yet it has ever been done. * * * Under these circumstances, I think we had better waive these small technical objections and treat this question on its merits.

Mr. Seward, supporting the bill for the admission of Oregon, said, among other things:

She is to be admitted some time, and, inasmuch as she is to be admitted, it is only a question of time whether you admit her here to-day or admit her six months hence or seven years hence. What objection is there to her being admitted now? You say she has not 100,000 people. What of that? She will have 100,000 in a very short time. * * * The State of Oregon is here of her own free will, is here ready to be admitted.

I think there is nobody who doubts that the people are ready, desirous, willing to come in. They have made a constitution which is acceptable to themselves, a constitution which, however it may be criticised here, after all complies substantially with every requirement which the Congress of the United States or any considerable portion of either House of Congress has ever insisted on in regard to any State. For one, sir, I think that the sooner a Territory emerges from its provincial condition the better; the sooner the people are left to manage their own affairs and are admitted to participation in the responsibilities of this Government, the stronger and more vigorous the States which those people form will be.

Senator Collamer, in the Kansas debate, said:

The Territorial condition is not one which it is desirable to extend. It is an unnatural condition in our Government.

It was James Buchanan, afterwards President of the United States, who spoke these words:

Congress will never turn a deaf ear to a people anxious to enjoy the privileges of self-government. Their desire to become one of the States of the Union will be granted the moment it can be done with safety.

Trusten Polk, of Missouri, declined to accept the population test in the case of Oregon, but conceding the comparatively small population of that Territory, said:

That population is settled, industrious, and well-to-do in all respects.

The late Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, said, with reference to the admission of Colorado:

I have but one test by which to judge for myself when this thing we call a State ought to be admitted or not. Whenever I find a community friendly to the United States and able to pay the expenses of their own government, defray the charges of their own control, if they say they are willing to do it, I am not the man to forbid them. If my own judgment is not quite in accord with theirs, if I find a pretty spirited and pretty plucky people saying that they are equal to the work of self-government, when I am not quite satisfied of the fact myself, I rather yield my own opinion to theirs. I would rather encourage a little ambition of this kind than discourage it.

With such a consensus of constitutional, judicial, and political provision, action, and opinion, it is not surprising that the principle of erecting new States as fast and as soon as their own desire and the general interest coincides, has become so axiomatic that not even the bitterest strifes of party or of sections have succeeded in overriding the principle. It would be an unexampled misfortune to Idaho if party lines should be drawn against her upon this bill for her admission to statehood. The movement for her enfranchisement and the popular support behind the present application have been the movement and support of her people of both parties, and Democrats and Republicans alike in Idaho would feel and deplore the injustice and hardship of raising a partisan question at Washington, which has been universally ignored and reprobated within the confines of the Territory.

The records of the two great parties that confront each other on the floors of Congress and of the great parties that have preceded them since the institution of Federal government are undimmed by factional strife over the admission of States whose inhabitants had earned the privilege of full participation in the affairs of the nation, and the people of Idaho may reasonably hope that their cause may be heard and determined upon the broad and elevated grounds to which Congress has heretofore honorably and patriotically conformed. Armed with proofs and arguments against all valid objections, they could only meet partisan opposition by reminding Congress of its own past history in dealing with waiting States.

The duty of Congress to admit Idaho to statehood is made plain by the examples of the early Confederation Congress, the Supreme Court, the past legislation of Congress itself, and the arguments of leading American statesmen.

RIGHTS AND EQUITIES OF THE TERRITORY.

Inasmuch as Idaho is not one of the alternative three or five States proposed to be carved out of the Northwest Territory by the ordinance of 1787, it can not be said that her case is literally provided for by the text of that organic enactment. On the other hand, it can not be gainsaid that she, as well as every other nascent State similarly situated, is within the spirit and purview of that ordinance. Her need is as great as was that of any and every State heretofore admitted into the Union to be incorporated into the "establishment of States," to have a "permanent government," to possess "a share in the Federal councils."

Her present organization and situation are but provisional and temporary; her people have advised Congress of their wish to be developed into a full and permanent Commonwealth, and the only true issue raised by her application is, whether it "may be consistent with the general interest" to admit her now or keep her in dependence for a time longer. How is that issue as to the proper time of admission to be determined? The Supreme Court, as already quoted, has said:

As soon as its population and situation entitle it to admission.

Mr. Buchanan said:

The moment it can be done with safety.

The test of Senator Polk, of Missouri, was that the population should be "settled, industrious, and well-to-do in all respects." The only test proposed by Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, was that of "a community friendly to the United States and able to pay the expenses of their own government; defray the charges of their own control." Two striking arguments for prompt rather than dilatory admission were made by Senators Seward and Douglas in the case of Oregon. The first said:

She is to be admitted some time, and inasmuch as she is to be admitted it is only a question of time whether you will admit her here to-day or admit her six months hence or seven years hence. What objection is there to her being admitted now? You say she has not 100,000 people. What of that? She will have 100,000 in a very short time.

The last-named said:

I have seen Oregon and Washington Territories suffer in their interests because of the want of representation here, and it was not in my power to prevent it. California has had vigilant Senators here looking after her interests and drawing everything that the Government could control into California, when if there had been representation of the whole coast we would have heard oftener of the Columbia River and Puget Sound when you came to the distribution of the patronage of this Government or the distribution of money for public works and to develop the country.

Two of the immediate neighbors of Idaho have been recently admitted as States, and unless it be deemed actually unsafe to the general interest to advance Idaho to an equal situation and opportunity, the Federal Congress, her natural guardian and protector, should not leave her to languish in an unequal race.

Idaho has a larger population, excepting Wisconsin, than any State admitted to the Union prior to 1889. The now great State of Illinois came into the Union with but little more than a fourth part of the population of Idaho, and another great State, Ohio, had but little more than a third in number of Idaho's population. Though her population is still considerably below the basis of representation in Congress, that basis will be reached within three years at the present rate of growth, and probably materially within that limit.

Illinois, Florida, California, Oregon, Kansas, Nebraska, and Colorado all came into the Union with populations below the basis of representation. In the Oregon debate, William Pitt Fessenden, of Maine, said that he did not choose to commit himself to require any particular number; Judah P. Benjamin, of Louisiana, said that the want of a number fixed for a Representative would not debar him from voting for the admission of a new State; Truxton Polk, of Missouri, said it might be well enough to have a rule as to population, but he would not discriminate against a people that came, like Oregon, seeking admission; Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, said that while it was a good rule to require the ratio requisite for a member of Congress, they had never adhered to the rule, and William H. Seward, of New York, said that he could conceive of a State with a million of people that he would not admit into the Union, and of another that he would admit upon a population of 40,000. Speaking of Oregon, Mr. Seward said:

You say she has not 100,000 people. What of that? She will have 100,000 in a very short time.

No doubt he had in mind the prodigious rate of growth of population in Michigan, Ohio, Iowa, and Wisconsin during the first few years after their admission; a growth to which Alabama, Illinois, and California made a good second. Idaho simply invokes principle and precedent when she asks that the question of population in her case be dealt with as prior questions of population have been, so that she may have equity and equality in the common forum. She simply invokes the principle of the ordinance of 1787, the doctrine enunciated by the Supreme Court, and the precedents created by uniform Congressional action and utterance, when she asks to be admitted as she now stands, not as a favor, but as an equitable right.

On February 19, 1890, the Senate of the United States ordered publication of the report of its Committee on Territories on the bill before that Chamber for the admission of Idaho as a State. The report ends with the following recommendation:

It is the conclusion of the committee that Idaho's right to admission is full and complete. Some verbal and formal amendments to the bill are suggested, and so amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Here was no partisan division, the report being unanimous. The assigned grounds of the recommendation are that the Territory is rich in natural resources; that its population and wealth are increasing at a rate that affords a sure prospect of a stable and prosperous commonwealth; that the inhabitants are of a high grade of intelligence and morals; that they have, by harmonious and non-partisan popular action, framed and adopted a State constitution the provisions of which are agreeable to the Federal Constitution and in all other respects commendable; and that, in view of the present condition, substantial progress, and assured future of the Territory, the time has arrived for redeeming the standing Federal pledge of statehood, with full safety to Federal interests.

The Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives has likewise submitted a similar report and recommendation upon a bill for the admission of the Territory as a State of the Union. This committee reviews in much detail the characteristics and circumstances of the Territory and its people, and reports in favor of immediate admission.

The habitual deference paid by both Houses of Congress to the action and opinions of their committees leads the people of Idaho to entertain the strongest kind of hope and expectancy that these reports to the respective Houses will meet with the customary ratification by the votes of the two Chambers.

PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE TERRITORY.

Idaho lies between the forty-second and forty-ninth degrees of north latitude, having British Columbia on the north, Utah and Nevada on the south, Montana and Wyoming on the east, and Washington and Oregon on the west. Its area is 55,228,160 acres, or upwards of 86,000 square miles; thus exceeding in size every State of the Union except Texas, California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, and Montana. Of this imperial domain fully 85 per cent. is adapted to industrial occupation, and the other 15 per cent. has a considerable aggregate of valuable timber.

The physical constitution of the Territory is worthy a brief attention. Mountains rich in the precious metals stretch along its eastern frontier and in the center of the Territory, forming countless and fertile valleys, and innumerable like valleys are projected into the Territory from extensive and exterior mountain ranges lying south, southwest, and westward of Idaho. The Territory is a table-land, diversified by mountains. What is called Southern Idaho is an immense plateau, with an average elevation of fully 3,000 feet above the ocean level. In the northern part of the Territory is a very beautiful, fertile, and salubrious lake region. The rest of the inhabitable parts of the Territory may be classed as the valley lands.

Idaho is richly watered. The great Snake River wanders along the eastern, southern, and western parts for upwards of a thousand miles before leaving the Territory, and its volume of water is enormous. The Clarke and Spokane Rivers are large streams in the north. The Salmon River crosses the center of the Territory from east to west, and the Clearwater River flows northwesterly across the Territory. Owing to the mountainous formation of the whole region, the tributaries of these great rivers are almost without number. Many of them, such as the Boise, Payette, Weiser, and Wood, in the center and south, and the Coeur d'Alene, St. Joseph, and Kootenai, in the north, have distinctive names and reputations, and outrank in size and volume some of the famous commercial rivers of the Atlantic Slope and the Mississippi Valley.

The important lakes of Idaho are Pend d'Oreille and Coeur d'Alene in the north and Bear Lake in the southeast. Of smaller lakes there are a considerable number, as would be natural in any such mountainous formation.

Apart from the medicinal springs which constitute one of the physical characteristics of Idaho, there are a vast number of pure springs which supply the domestic and industrial needs of the towns, villages, farms, ranches, and mining camps. Many are so large as to constitute natural reservoirs for irrigation. There can be no fear that the Territory will ever run short of water for all its needs.

The climate of Idaho is bracing but not severe, and is happily free from either torrid or frigid conditions. The atmosphere is unusually clear, bright, and dry, the average of fair days being three hundred per annum. The Rocky Mountains to the eastward shelter it from the blizzards and cyclones that sweep the Missouri Valley, and from the westward it receives the warm wind locally known as the "Chinook." It is owing to this warm current that the temperature belt is extended so far northward into British America, westward of the Rocky Mountains. The mean temperature is higher than that of Eastern and Western States of more southerly latitude.

The inhumidity of the air gives the Territory an advantage which may be expressed by saying that it would require a summer temperature of 105° at Boise City to make one as uncomfortable as 85° would do at New York or Boston, while 12° below zero at the Idahoan capital would be no more severe than 8° above zero at the eastern cities named. Sunstrokes and frost-bites are equally unknown. The character of the climate, supplemented by the elevation of the land above the sea-level, insures an extraordinary salubrity. The scarcity of rainfall is compensated by the ease with which irrigation is applied to land under cultivation.

NATURAL RESOURCES OF IDAHO.

One of the surest and steadiest sources of industry and wealth in the Territory is mining. Gold, silver, lead, copper, iron, salt, sulphur, marble, limestone, sandstone, granite, and mica are abundant. Coal measures are profusely spread over the Territory, but these deposits have not been sufficiently prospected to determine their value. In 1880, when placer-mining was about worked out, $1,634,637 represented the total value of the precious metals obtained. Mechanical mining then came into vogue, and in 1889 the yield of gold was $3,204,500; of silver, $7,564,500; of lead, $6,490,000, and of copper, $85,600; or $17,344,600 in all. The value of the mines taken up is about $50,000,000, but all that has been done hardly amounts to a scratching of the surface. According to the surveys of the mineral deposits, the business of mining is capable of extending over centuries of time. The Territory is now third on the list of bullion-producers and is expected to obtain the second place during the present year.

Nearly 20 per cent. of the area of the Territory, or about 10,000,000 acres, consists of timber land, producing oak, white and yellow pine, fir, cedar, spruce, and tamarack. This timber is habitually tall, large, and of dense growth, and easily gotten to market. The timber trade of the Territory shows a steady and vigorous growth. There are several hundred thousand acres of scattered timber not included in the forest lands, properly so called. Allowing for the destructive use of timber in the United States but having regard also to the competition of other industries, localities, and materials, it is evident that the lumber interests of Idaho will afford employment and support for all that choose to turn to them for a great number of years—more years than need to be scanned by this generation.

More than 35 per cent. of the area, or nearly 20,000,000 acres, is good grazing land. A recent live-stock return shows 385,896 cattle, 123,840 horses, 2,480 mules, and 447,924 sheep, representing a value of $12,000,000 in round figures. So long as the Territory shall be inhabited by civilized man cattle-raising, horse-breeding, and wool-growing are sure to be among the important industries. This is insured by the gradual conversion of the method of business from the primitive range system to close herding and winter feeding, with their attendant inducement to introduce highly bred stock. For a number of years to come, however, those who prefer the range system will be able to find sufficient and proper lands, and the supply of natural grasses is simply inexhaustible. For winter grazing there is an abundance of sage and greasewood shrubs. The people of the Territory set a high value on their stock-raising resources and are never in want of a market.

Now that the General Government is giving so much attention to increasing and varying the supply of food fishes throughout the Union, it may not be unimportant to mention that the people of Idaho might subsist on the trout, sturgeon, and red-fish that abound and multiply in the innumerable streams of the Territory, if they should take chiefly to a piscatorial diet from taste or necessity. Trout, especially, are so plentiful that those who catch them for market do so by wagon-loads. Antelope, deer, wild duck, grouse, and quail are very plentiful among the eatable varieties of game in the Territory. In addition to these, the sporting and hunting resources of Idaho afford, in much abundance, grizzly, black, and cinnamon bears, elk, moose, Californian, yellow wolf, coyote, wolverine, lynx, four varieties of the fox, wildcat, mountain sheep, weasel, badger, marten, mink, four varieties of the squirrel, raccoon, jack rabbit, and other small game; also bald and golden eagles, wild swan, wild geese, and a multitude of smaller land and water birds. The peltry trade will not be unimportant, and a stream of tourists, anglers, and hunters, in the not distant future, will solve the problem of working and living for a due proportion of the inhabitants; for nature has been very bountiful in natural beauty and in native attractions for rod and gun, as well as in the natural wealth of the industrial kind.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES OF IDAHO.

The popular belief in and reliance upon agriculture as the chiefest source of national prosperity and the principal object of human industry render it fitting that this Territory, in asking to be admitted into the Union as a sovereign State, should truly exhibit her agricultural capacities. Her surface wealth in placer mining naturally left agriculture to become an afterconsideration in the earlier days of her history. In the same manner and for the same reason the agricultural aspects of California were disregarded for a season, but none would venture to say now that agriculture is not the leading industry of the Golden State. Furthermore, Idaho being in the so-called arid region, it needed the popular understanding and appreciation of the place and function of irrigation in the economic system to realize the agricultural position and prospects of the Territory. The theory and practice of irrigation have now been sufficiently developed to enable a trustworthy agricultural estimate of Idaho to be made.

Although irrigation is in its earliest infancy, 6,000,000 acres of the arid belt have already been successfully and profitably reclaimed. In this widespread and scattered reclamation Idaho has shared to the extent of over 12 per cent. The Director of the Geological Survey, Major Powell, to whom the country is indebted for its fullest and most accurate knowledge of irrigation, has stated and explained that irrigation implies neither a defect nor a disadvantage; that it is a better fertilizer than rainfall; that the bright skies of the arid region are more favorable to vegetation than cloudy skies; that the arid soil is the most fertile soil, so that irrigation is now opening the best lands of the Union to cultivation; that irrigable soils are more productive than those fertilized by showers, and that irrigation is favorable to the creation of a numerous class of comparatively small proprietors, because, owing to the interstate questions arising respecting the use and direction of the water supply, the General Government must control the subject of irrigation, and so incidentally defeat attempts at monopolization which could only produce an undesirable class of hired farm laborers or rack-rented tenants.

Major Powell estimates the average first cost of irrigation at $10 per acre for the irrigable part of the arid region; but in Idaho the first cost has thus far been considerably less than $3 per acre, which is a favorable indication for the Territory at large, though the cost must necessarily average higher as the more difficult part of the irrigable lands are brought under the system.

The waters of the Snake River are the most important for irrigation use in Idaho at present, but there are almost innumerable other streams and bodies of water that can be turned to the same account.

About 30 per cent. of the area of the Territory, or 16,000,000 acres, is agricultural land, and of this 14,000,000 acres are of exceptional richness. The Snake River plateau, occupying the eastern, southern, and southwestern parts of Idaho, contains 5,000,000 of these acres, the rest being disposed in numberless valleys of all sizes, from very small to very great. Something less than one-half of the aggregate area of agricultural land is in Northern Idaho, and nearly all of this proportion is fertile without irrigation. The valuable irrigable lands amount to upwards of 6,000,000 acres, being 43 per cent. of the really desirable lands. The waste lands, attractive neither for mining, lumbering, grazing, nor agriculture, are under 15 per cent. of the whole area of the Territory, including the water area.

The valley soils consist of a dark, deep loam, with gravel subsoil, well drained and highly fertilized by the vegetable and mineral wash from the mountains. The plateau soils contain a very large proportion of vegetable mold. The alkali soils are of very limited extent and so disposed as not to interfere with agriculture. They have now a value for their cattle grass, but when needed for cultivation in the future they can be reclaimed by leaching and converting into what the principal expert of the Geological Survey deems "among the most fertile" of soils.

Some conception of the agricultural future of Idaho may be had by considering that when the lands that may be profitably irrigated are so redeemed the area of the practicable and valuable arable lands will equal one-half of the whole area of the great State of Ohio.

The average yield of wheat to the acre in Idaho is 30 bushels, as against 17 in California and 13 in the East; rye, 25 bushels, as against 13 in California and the East; oats, 55 bushels, as against 30 in California and 31 in the East; barley, 40 bushels, as against 23 in California and the East; and potatoes, 250 bushels, as against 114 in California and 69 in the East. The average yield of hay is 5 tons to the acre. Corn grows well in Southern Idaho, averaging 35 bushels, to 34 in California and 28 in the East. Tobacco and sweet potatoes are also profitably grown in the south.

The official statistics of agriculture for 1889 show a production of 4,000,000 bushels of wheat, over 2,000,000 bushels of oats, 1,000,000 bushels of barley, 65,000 bushels of rye, 50,000 bushels of corn, 555,000 bushels of flax-seed, 17,350 bushels of grass-seed, 1,000,000 bushels of potatoes, 850,000 bushels of other vegetables, and 424,740 tons of hay. That this was below the actual product is probable from the difficulty of reporting every case of production.

The readiness and cheapness with which the extensive areas of sagebrush lands can be converted to fruit farms have laid the foundations of a great fruit-growing industry. Apples, pears, peaches, nectarines, apricots, plums, prunes, and grapes are now good marketable crops, apples growing remarkably well—as much as 2 bushels per tree in a young orchard—and finding a quick sale. Among the smaller fruits, strawberries are cultivated at a good profit and command a ready market, and a similar remark may be made as to raspberries, blackberries, and dewberries. An official return of fruit culture shows that in 1889 there were marketed 275,000 bushels of apples, 30,000 bushels of pears, 34,800 boxes of peaches, 34,350 boxes of plums and prunes, 18,000 boxes of grapes, and 75,000 baskets of berries. These totals would be a little swelled by the transactions that escaped enumeration.

In the presence of the facts and figures that have now been given respecting the agricultural capacities of Idaho, it must be with a grim humor that one reads, in the narratives and reports of twenty and as late as ten or twelve years ago, that Idaho is a bleak and sterile country, resorted to by daring and adventurous men for the purpose of picking enough gold from the surface to enable them to live in comfort elsewhere. Such mistakes were common as to the whole Rocky Mountain region, from the British to the Mexican boundary, but the present condition, as to population, society, and agricultural industry of Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, is their best refutation. Orderly communities inhabit these States and Territories, living in unexampled abundance, under skies as genial as those of Southern Europe, and their treasures in precious minerals are simply an addition to the more ordinary sources of wealth and employment.

The growth and movement of population and the occupation and development of the public domain have forever effaced from the maps of the United States the legend Great American Desert, borne by them so long. This "desert," says the Director of the Geological Survey, consists of lands more fertile and productive than the American farmer has yet been privileged to cultivate. All that is needed to unlock their potentiality is that the evaporated waters, which in rainfall regions are returned to the earth in capricious and often injurious showers, shall be conducted back to the soil by the hand and art of man at such times and in such manner and quantity as best accords with the special necessities created by the practice of tillage.

A fact bearing upon the future capacity and resources of Idaho is that, up to the present time, not more than one-tenth of the useful area of the Territory has been appropriated. Thus a magnificent endowment of natural resources remains for the support and enrichment of succeeding generations, to say nothing of the reproductive capabilities of present animal and vegetable life, and the new creations of productive industry.

POPULATION OF THE TERRITORY.

By the Federal census of 1880 the population of Idaho was 32,619 persons, whereof one in five were children of school age. From the statistics gathered by the Bureau of Education and from the rapid flow of adult immigration during the past two years, there is good reason to believe that the ratio has declined too little more than one in seven. But letting the higher ratio stand and applying it to the careful, but unavoidably incomplete enrollment of children of school age made last year, the population would be close upon 120,000 persons, not including the 4,500 Indians.

If it be assumed that only one child in twenty has missed in making a school enrollment over so large and thinly settled an area, that very reasonable assumption would carry the population to quite 125,000, and if there should be the further assumption that the true ratio is one child of school age to six of the population, that exceedingly reasonable assumption would carry the population to 140,000 souls at least. The average annual gain in population from 1881 to 1889, inclusive, was 10,500, which would make the population slightly over 127,000. Beginning with 1887, however, the average annual growth has been 14,500, and by estimating on that basis the population would be 140,000 and a trifle over. It seems certain that the population is somewhere between 120,000 and 140,000 persons, and between those limits it must rest till the new census shall be taken.

The people of Idaho are very largely of native birth, and principally from the New England, Western, and Southwestern States. The leading foreign elements are Scandinavian, German, Canadian, and British. The health of the population is admirable, dry air, bright skies, a moderate temperature, an elevated situation, and freedom from swamps and other aids to malaria, reducing disease and death to a minimum. The rate of mortality is but four in a thousand, as against eight in Oregon, the healthiest of States. While the death-rate will naturally increase with the growth of density in population and of town life and the addition of larger proportions of infantile and aged elements to the whole number of inhabitants, the salubrity of Idaho must long remain superior to a rate of 18 per 1,000, which is that of Massachusetts; of nearly 16 in New York, 11 in Ohio and Indiana, upwards of 9 in Michigan and Wisconsin, 15 in Missouri, 12 in Kansas, upwards of 10 in Georgia and Alabama, and 16 in California.

The sanitary statistics of the American, British, and French armies and the Canadian Northwest force show that, while the deaths of soldiers in garrison are only 3.74 per thousand in Idaho, they are 4.76 in the Dakotas, 6.05 on the great lakes, 6.88 on the Pacific coast, 17.83 on the Atlantic coast, 22.50 on the Gulf coast, 10 in the south of France, a health resort; 14.50 in Algiers, another sanitarium; 7.5 at Gibraltar, in the sanitary zone of the Mediterranean; 12 in Australia, 6.50 in Eastern Canada, and only 3.4 at the station in British Columbia immediately north of Idaho and having a similar climate.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

The one institution of Idaho whereof the people are most proud, in which they take the liveliest interest, and upon which they spend their means without stint is the public-school system. Under a compulsory school law more than 13,000 children, organized into nearly 450 schools and occupying 300 school buildings, which dot and glorify the Territory, are the actual daily wards of the community during the school term. The people have spent $350,000 on these buildings and their fixtures; they are spending some $200,000 for current expenses this present year, and the increase and maintenance of schools is costing them at the rate of $75,000 per year over each preceding year. They employ good teachers, to whom they pay good salaries, and the school fund is so promptly and liberally supplied that the session of 1889 opened with a clear balance of $40,000 in the treasury.

Take the Eastern States of New Hampshire and Connecticut, the Middle States of New York and New Jersey, the Southern States of North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, the Northwestern States of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, the Southwestern States of Kentucky, Missouri, and Kansas, and the far Western States of Colorado, California, and Oregon—they have an average population of 49 to the square mile. Idaho has, at most, but 1.56 persons to the square mile. If, with regard to the distribution of population, her school attendance were as 1 to 20, as compared with the average attendance of the States named, she would be doing well. As a matter of fact, it is greater than as 1 to 2, so that she is doing more than ten times as well as she might be expected to do in the matter of attendance. This comparison shows how earnest and devoted her people are to the cause of popular education.
